The Dufferins, in a letter to the local management, promise to bring down the very best team they have, and a glance at the above line-up should convince the most skeptical fans that the Petes are doing battle with a real good nine. McGowan and Puddy are said to be great stickers, and the same might be observed of the majority of the visiting aggregation. Monday is Civic Holiday in Toronto, and the Dufferins are running especial train in order to accomodate a large following of supporters. The local team will have the best line-up of the season. Pete Campbell will make his initial bow to the home rooters, and he will be a source of strength to them, as he has been playing good ball up in Porcupine all summer. The National Cash Register team will, in all probability, cross bats with the Peterboroughs on our Civic Holiday, August 14th.

A BREAK IN THE LACROSSE RANKS

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Is R. J. Fleming to have a new and novel strike on his hands?

Fred W. Thompson, of the Toronto Lacrosse Club, who has for years handled the finances of that organization, has resigned his position.

The sympathies of the players are with him to a man, and they may go on strike. They are meeting this afternoon to talk it over, and the probability is that they will walk out and leave Manager Fleming without a team to face Tecumsehs on Saturday at Scarborough Beach.

In that event, the club would automatically drop out of the N. L. U. because of nonfulfilment of its engagements.

The next step would be a meeting of the N. L. U. and a possible arrangement for the formation of a new team at Rosedale, assuming the engagements of Toronto Club.

HOW TROUBLE STARTED

The trouble all arises from the attempt of Percy Quinn, ex-goal guardian for the Shamrocks, and now president of the Toronto Club, to get arney Dunphy installed as coach of the Torontos, in opposition to the wishes of Manager Ernie Menary and Secretary Thompson. Dunphy was rubber and coach for the Shamrocks years ago, then for Montreal, and then for Nationals.

The players on the Toronto Club feel very strongly on the matter, and it was with difficulty that some of them were coaxed to go to Ottawa last Friday night for the game with the Capitals. Manager Fleming's recent gift of $25 check to each player after the National game was not sufficient to restore harmony in the club.

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Ontario's fruit crop suffered a severe blow from last week's violent wind storm, according to reports received by P. W. Hodgetts, secretary of the Ontario Fruit-Growers' Association. Thirty per cent. of Greening apples were blown off the trees, 40 per cent. of fall varieties, 50 per cent. of Bartlett pears, and -- per cent. of Duchess pears. A third of the apple crop in Simcoe and Brant was destroyed. In New York State the lake counties suffered a 25 per cent. loss of their fruit crops.

NEWARK THREATENS TO PROTEST GAME

Newark, Aug. 3.—Manager Joe McGinnity of Newark threatened to protest Tuesday's game because of a decision by Umpire-in-Chief Pat Wright, but thought better of it after the game, and will not likely press it. Even if he does he will not have a chance on earth to win it. The play meant nothing to either team, except as to whether Vaughn or Kocher should be the base runner, but over ten minutes were wasted in argument on the field, which alone prevented the teams from playing the fastest game of the season.

The play in question happened in the seventh innings, and Vaughn was on first base and nobody out. Kocher hit a pop fly to George Smith at second base, and ran the hit out for all he was worth. Vaughn clung close to first. Theo Smith tried to turn a trick. He caught the ball and let it drop to the ground, then he picked it up and threw to Fisher at second. "Batter's out," announced Umpire Wright. This decision brought all the Newark players in to the plate on the run, as they thought the umpire had pulled a boneheed play by declaring Kocher out on an infield fly, as Jack Doyle did in Pittsburg this summer, but they were mistaken. The umpire tried to explain, but it was an impossible task with so many talking. Joe Kelley was not in uniform, and could not leave the bench, but he had his emissaries on the spot in the heat of the argument.

DROPPED IT INTENTIONALLY

Meanwhile, both Vaughn and Kocher clung to the base, and the coachers didn't let either get off until Umpire Wright turned and announced to the occupants of the stand that he declared Kocher out "because Smith dropped the ball intentionally." Kocher then left the base in possession of Vaughn, who was later caught stealing. After the game Umpire Wright maintained that he was right, and Umpire Halligan agreed with him that Smith had held the ball momentarily, and then dropped it deliberately. Therefore the batter and not the base runner was out. The umpires thought that they were right in this particular instance, and, furthermore, both agreed that they had umpired a perfect game of ball without a single mistake all afternoon.

SAYS HE WAS A TIN ANGEL

"I don't recall a game since I started to umpire in which I was so thoroughly satisfied that I had not missed a play of any kind," said Wright. "I'm not saying this to boost myself in any way, but merely to give vent to satisfaction at having umpired a perfect game, a rare thing these days; because, you know, an umpire is human, like a ball player, and makes his mistakes regularly."

It transpires that Joe McGinnity explained that he did not throw the ball at Umpire Wright intentionally on Sunday afternoon, so President Barrow let the Newark manager off with a $10 fine.

Bill Bradley was in uniform yesterday, and, though far from well, was up on the coaching line. He could hardly speak from throat trouble, but made motions, and kept in the game.

Catcher Bridges has been borrowed from Montreal, and he and "Broadway Alex." Smith will be on the bench as substitute catchers for the balance of the week. Smith, it turns out, was sent over to help out the Newark team, but Joe Delahanty met him on the train and induced him to join the Leafs.

Dick Rudolph will pitch to-day, and if Joe McGinnity doesn't go in again there should be another Toronto victory on this, the team's final appearance in Newark this season. McGinnity may pitch the two holiday games in Toronto on Monday if his

CALLS CHAMPION "STARRY NIGHT"

Jack Johnson, heavyweight champion of the world, is the man of the hour in London and England. The London Times has been making interesting comment on Johnson's private life, his stage work and boxing ability a portion of the article captioned "The Art of Johnson," follows:

"On the other side of the Atlantic Johnson passes for a "flash nigger," a type not to be encouraged by those who have to keep ten millions of black men in subjection to the dominant race. In private, however, the conqueror of Jeffries is an amiable person, with a fund of quaint humour and a sportsmanlike trust in human nature (as long as it is not a question of dollars) which reconciles one to his golden teeth and the multitude of diamonds which cause him to resemble a starry night."

HACK VERSUS GOTCH

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 3.—Geo. Hackenschmidt, the Russian wrestler, who is matched to meet Champion Frank Gotch here on Labour Day, has made elaborate plans to complete his training. In a letter to his manager, Jack Curley, received yesterday, Hackenschmidt outlined his plans. He will sail from Southampton for the United States on Aug. 9th, and will bring with him ten cases of a special spring water obtained in France. In the Hackenschmidt party will be Dr. F. B. Roller, chief trainer; Johann Koch, German athlete; Masseur Coleman, and a Berman chef who will prepare all the food. At New York the wrestler will pick up Tom Jenkins, who will accompany him to Chicago.

ARE THEY AFRAID?

The local printers claim that the Lindsay brotherhood are dogging it something terce these days. All this talk about special trains seems to be nothing more or less than a stall. The local exponents of the game declare that the conduct of the Scuggites is unwarrantly unsportsmanlike and unless some act ion is taken by the latter in double quick time, a good printers' team will be brought to town. Lindsay scribes will kindly holler this information up the wind chute to the other members of the ball club.

MAKES HIS OWN MATCHES NOW

Ad. Wolgast, who has made a fortune of nearly $90,000 in the past six months, has taken the managerial reins out of the hands of his pilot. "Cherokee" Tom Jones, by doing his own match-making, when he signed up to box Packey McFarland on September 18. It is regarded in sporting circles as a dangerous and foolhardy match for the holder of a world's championship to make. He is allowing McFarland to make 133 pounds at 3 o'clock, in the afternoon for a night fight.

HOME-RUN RECORD MAY BE ECLIPSED

In the spring of the current baseball campaign there was much future concerning the cork-cored balls Fences were being dented, the outfielders were playing at least twenty feet deeper and day by day all sorts of swatting records were being smashed. For instance Cincinnati piled up 26 runs in a game against Boston, the Phillies buried the Reds one day 21 to 5 and then the Cubs trampled on the Doves 20 to 2.

And now as the season progresses Frank Schulte, of the Cubs, and Fred Luderus, of the Phillies, are threatening to break the major league home-run record. John "Buck" Freeman is the individual who holds the honours for punching out circuit drives. As a member of the Washington club in 1899, "Bucky" then a terror to the pitchers, collected twenty-five circuit smashes.

Not since 1899 has this figure of twenty-five ever been disturbed in the big leagues. It has stood the swatting test of a year. But now we may see a new idol. Will it be Luderus or Schulte?

The Cub entry got away to an early start in compiling his total. On the very first day of the season he secured No. 1 against Southpaw Sallee, of the Cardinals. He repeated the trick April 20 and again April 23. May 1 he made another, giving him four, while Luderus still was unheard from.

In the background was Mr. Luderus, as it wasn't until May 8 that he came forth with his first home run. May 10 saw the second, May 13 the third, May 17 the fourth and May 20th the fifth.

Something happened to Fred's ash then, as he went until June 20, exactly a month, before he made No. 6. Another came just a week later. All one at a time, but apparently it became monotonous just to get one a day, so the big fellow started out for bigger deeds.

Fourth of July, just to show that such was possible, Luderus punched out two in the afternoon game against the Giants. Two days later he did the very same thing against the Cardinals. One came July 12.

An even dozen had been on his list. Then he picked out a spot and won fame and glory for himself and one of the greatest victories of the season for the Phillies. This was July 15, when the Phillies nipped the Pirates 2 to 1 in a ten-inning struggle. And how did the Phillies get their two runs? In the third round Luderus bumped the ball out on Broad street in the Quaker park, and with two out in the tenth he repeated the dose.

That's a great record for the Quakers, all right. But Schulte in his thirteen drives three times has cleared a full house, and that's just as many of these hits as was made throughout the 1910 season. One came June 3 when the Giants and Cubs were in a 4-4 dead heat for eight innings; the second in the morning game of the Fourth of July, with the Reds, off Bobby Keefe, and the last one July 18, off Pitcher Tyler of the Doves.

As it is, both Luderus and Schulte have punched out more four-ply smashes than any one in recent years The scarcity of home runs is shown in the record books. A decade ago, and then some, when home runs were not so scarce, it was such a big item for a player to gather in fifteen in a season.

But either pitching has advanced or the slugger has been toned down many notches. Now last year the highest number of homers gathered in both leagues was ten. Jake Stahl was the ringleader in the American League while Schulte and Fred Beck tied for the honours in the National League.

In 1909, seven, just half as many as Luderus now owns, topped the records. Cobb got the ones in the American League, and Murray in the parent body. Now even Cobb, as hard a batter as he is, is not much on the home-run variety. Tyrus—he is a slugger all right—usually sends the ball out on a line, not very high up, either, seldom over the outfield wall, and his home-runs come by his wonderful ability to traverse the sacks before the ball is returned to the infield.

Then we have 1908 when Crawford made but seven, the leading number in the American League, while Tim Jordan, now faded out of major league history, poled an even dozen. The year before it was Brain, with ten in the National League and Davis with eight in the American League, that brought the high prizes. And in 1906 Jordan smashed out twelve.

Jordon is coming into his own again with the Toronto Club in the Eastern League and before the season ends may nose out even the big league swat monopolists.

SPORTING NEWS

At the Island stadium last night Bonhag beat Tait and Tressider in the feature event, the two miles run. Mel. Brock easily defeated the field in the 880 yd. sprint, and Goulding, though he did not win the two-mile handicap, broke all previous records for the distance by 9 seconds, doing it in 13.03 2-5 in a downpour of rain. Three of the famous Coronation team which won the Empire championship in England a few weeks ago, together with Julius Thompson, the boxer, were presented with handsome diamond-studded lockets, by Controller church at the opening of the meet.

Toronto is just 12 points behind the leaders, and unless a bad slump occurs, will make things nasty for the champions.

Cole of the Cubs and Rucker of Brooklyn, had a grand duel yesterday for ten innings. Nothing was done in the score line until the tenth, when Jimmy Archer made a four-ply bingle over the left field fence of the Chicago ball yard.

How are the mighty fallen. Two days ago Ty. Cobb hit everything coming his way. Yesterday, with the bases full, none down and an unwarmed pitcher in the box, Cobb and Crawford both fanned.

President Murphy of the Chicago Cubs, yesterday announced that he had purchased Earl Mosely, a right-handed pitcher, fro m Youngstown, O. He has won the last thirteen games pitched and it is expected he will develop into a star in major league company. He will join the Cubs in two weeks. The price paid was not stated. President Murphy also announced the sale of Outfielder Cal-

Hugh McIntosh, the Australian promoter, is arranging for a big tourney, to be held at the Rushcutter's Bay Stadium. It will take the form of an elimination contest, the winner to meet Johnson. But the men invited do not seem to have the gooda; in fact Johnson could lick almost any two of them together without more training than a hair cut.

George Goulding, Canada's premier heel and toe artist, is to take unto himself a wife according to reports. The champion's wedding will take place next Wednesday.

Two would-be come backs are scheduled for a go on Labour Day, when Nelson and Britt are to hook up in a ten-round go in New York.

Ty Cobb, the fleet centre fielder of the Detroit team remained in the game only five innings Tuesday, but during that time he made a single, a triple and a home run and scored three runs. He also stole two bases before he retired "on account of illness."

Magee may yet be allowed to play this season. After the discussion of the National Commission, which lasted until midnight yesterday, adjourned till to-day, the hard hitting (in more ways than one) outfielders, was ordered to join the club.

"My oldest son, five years old, got very bad with cholera infantum; two days after my next son took it, and the third day my little girl also took it. I doctored with all kinds of things, but they kept on getting worse and the doctors could do them no good. I then started the Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after two or three days could see a difference, so kept on with the treatment, but they were so bad it took about two weeks to complete the cure. Different people have asked me how I saved my children's lives that time, and I always say it was Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I am now never without it in the house."

ANNUAL AMERICAN CHAMPIONSHIP EVENTS

By Dr. Walter Peet

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The thirty-ninth annual American championship was brought to a close after two days' most excellent racing under ideal conditions. The management of the regatta was admirable. There is only one drawback to Saratoga Lake for a racing course, and that is the poor accommodations for the spectators, who can only see the finish. Thus it must necessarily be cut out in the future.

Canada and Joe Wright simply swept the lake and the score now is: Argonaut, six victories out of eight entries. The other two events she did not start in, so it is six straight. Boston and Philadelphia each captured two races, while Baltimore and Detroit pulled out one each.

The first race of the day was the senior double sculls, which New York so much counted on. The Kings are dead, long live the Kings! (Pardon the plural.) Shepheard and Fuessel have had to give up after a most brilliant record. At the start they got away with nearly a length from Starter John Regan, who, as usual, was most careful.

This is simply a proof of the contention of The World that all boats should be started from stake boats and held by the sterns until the gun is fired. The Nonpareil double, Waldo Smith and Charles Schwartz, made a bid for it and looked very likely for half the distance, but their poor steering, as was the case in the Harlem regatta, killed all their chances. Wahnetah made a great fight and got second place. Fuessel and Shepheard rowed a game race, but they were not fast enough to catch Wahnetah. Vespers' rowing was polished.

ARUNDELS TURN THE TABLES

The senior intercollegiate four-oared shells reversed things from yesterday's results and Jim Rice's Arundel crew won handily. Argonant scratched so as to save the four which made up half of the eight which later won the eight-oared championship. Arundel's bow man, Hoos, who was ill yesterday, was nearly right to-day, and the crew simply sprinted out from the start and, looking like a typical Columbia varsity and rowing like one man, outrowed New York Athletic as they pleased. Western Rowing Club made a great effort and landed third place. Detroit was fourth. It was indeed too bad that Rice could not have had his bow man in good condition yesterday.

In the intermediate eight-oared shells Argonaut got the start and went right into the lead. Rockrimmon spurted at the quarter and ran ahead of the Canadians, who were rowing easily. At the half Argonaut started in to work and pulled away without trouble, winning by a length and a half.

Duluth, coached remarkably well by young Jim Ten Eyck, who stroked Syracuse's great varsity eight-oared crew at Poughkeepsie a few years ago, rowed in very good form and got second place. Rockrimmon Boat Club of Springfield was third. The heaviest man in the Argonaut crew weighed only 140 pounds.

BUTLER AGAIN LEADS RIVALS

Once again that Canadian wonder, Butler, made good. It was in the senior quarter-mile dash, and he won it in the same decisive, clean-cut manner as he won the championship and association singles yesterday. I think that he will eventually prove himself the swiftest man that ever sat in a boat. Fuessel got away first and was soon in the lead, but Butler, with supreme self-confidence, went away rather deliberately until he got his boat well in hand and was sure of his pointing mark.

Then came his sprint which opened up clear water at the eighth, just half way, and then all was over. Hart of the Metropolitans gave Fuessel a good race at the half-way mark, but failed after that, and the Harlem man easily made second place.

The senior quadruple shells, four scullers in a boat, furnished one of the greatest fights of the regatta. Vesper Boat Club won after a magnificent exhibition of oarsmanship. Union Boat Club of Boston, with the former Harvard Varsity man, Ernest Smith, at stroke, rowed a wonderfully good race, but steered erratically and finished short, the men stepping out of the boat to shoal water. The Boston boat was the only one that had no rudder and her bowman only once during the race looked around for a sight of the finish—hence his trouble.

NONPAREILS TAKE THE LEAD

Nonpareil got away first, with Union second and Vesper last. At the quarter Union went out into the lead, but Vesper was rowing well within herself and at the half-mile Bordon drove his men on and the Vespers began to eat up Union's advantage and soon took the lead. Here Nonpareil also steered poorly and dropped behind.

At the mile Union was way off the course and narrowly escaped collision with spectators' craft. Vesper, steering a perfect course, spurted and went over the line three lengths ahead of Nonpareil, who was second.

The eight-oared championship, probably the most important race of the regatta, was easily won by the Argonaut's of Canada. New York Athletic Club made the great mistake of hitting only 34 nd 35 to the minute, which is entirely too slow for a short mile and a quarter race.

Argonaut, starting at 44, went into the lead at once and was never headed. After the crews settled down the stop watch showed Argonaut pacing 40, Detroit and New York Athletic 35. New York wore down Vivian Nicknall's good youngsters and got second place, but the Winged Footers rowed entirely too deliberately and looked like a crew going over a four-mile stretch.

Taylor, the Argonaut stroke, was always within himself, and when the final spurt came at the last eighth of a mile the Canadians shot ahead nd won by a couple of lengths.

Tour Of Inspection

A representative of the Peterborough Radial Railway Co. from Toronto, in conjunction with several of the local officials, made a tour of inspection of the local street railway system yesterday.

Asylum Loss Is $12,000.

Toronto, Aug. 3.—That the actual money loss incurred by the fire at Hamilton Asylum will be about $12,000 is the estimate of E. R. Rogers, provincial superintendent of asylums, who has just returned from the scene of the disaster. There was no insurance on the building.

Within a month the roof will be replaced and the damaged section restored to its former condition, Mr Rogers states.

With regard to the eight parents who lost their lives, the officials say that not one of them was burned to death. They were all suffocated by the smoke, and there was no suffering. In fact the only instance of charred flesh was in the case of one man, whose face was burned to some extent, but that happened after he was dead.

Extra Early Wheat.

Brandon, Man., Aug. 3.—Unless there is something freakish about the growth of the new unnamed variety of wheat just cut at the experimental farm, farmers will undoubtedly be much interested in this grain. This new variety of wheat was seen at the experimental farm in April and was cut on July 31, so that there are only ninety-four or ninety-five days between seeding and cutting. And yet the ripe wheat is not yet named, lives up to the record it has this year, farmers may find it much more suitable variety for the country than the other spring wheats.

OUT TO DEFEAT IT

FIGHT OPENS IN NORFOLK

Ottawa, Aug. 4.—The various Provincial Governments on both sides of politics are likely to take a decidedly more active part in the present Federal contest than in the last general election.

Mr. Borden has repeatedly appealed to every possible ally to help him out, and his Macedonian cry has apparently been heard by practically all the interests concerned in the desparate attempt "to beat Laurier at any cost." The Imperialist National League, the Anti-Imperial Bourassaites, the British tariff reformers, the high tariff vested interests, whose aims in the last analysis are diametrically opposed to those of the British tariff reformers, and finally the Provincial Conservative Governments, have all rallied in one concourse of unrelated prejudices to defeat Laurier and reciprocity.

The place selected for Sir Wilfrid Laurier's opening meeting of the campaign on August 15 is the town of Simcoe, Norfolk County.

All the Ontario Ministers will speak at various points throughout the province, and Hon. W. S. Fielding will also address several meetings in Ontario before going to the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. William Paterson will speak at the Liberal convention for Lennox and Addington in Napanee on Tuesday next, at the North Lanark nomination at Almonte on the 11th and at his own nomination for Brant at Paris on the 15th.

McBride Not Running.

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 4.—"I do not intend to enter this election as a candidate, but will do my utmost, consistent with my position, to aid in victory, which I feel sure will crown Federal Conservatives in this campaign."

Premier McBride made this statement in an interview prior to his welcome here yesterday by members of the Conservative party, which took the form of a public reception.

In reply to an address which approved his stand against reciprocity, the Premier repeated his view that such a measure would lead to the exploitation of Canada by the United States. Furthermore, Canada would be a broken link in the chain of empire.

Convention In Stayner.

Collingwood, Aug. 4.—Arrangements have now been completed for the holding of the Conservative convention to nominate a candidate for the House of Commons. It will take place at Stayner on Saturday, the 12th inst., commencing at 1 o'clock.

It goes without saying that Major John A. Currie will be the unanimous choice of the convention.

Laurier to Visit Hamilton?

Hamilton, Aug. 4.—Members of the local organization of the Liberal party this morning announced that Sir Wilfrid Laurier would include this city in the itinerary of his campaign. It is not definitely known, however, when the Premier will speak here.

Major Beattie May Retire.

London, Aug. 4.—The Conservatives will meet Saturday to decide on a candidate for the Federal elections. Major Beattie has repeatedly expressed his opinion that he did not care to run again, so his name may not go before the members of the association. Billy Gray is the popular choice.

G. F. McKim for South Lanark.

Perth, Ont., Aug. 4.—Yesterday afternoon the local convention of South Lanark met and C. F. McKim of The Rideau Record of Smith's Falls was chosen Liberal candidate for the coming election.

Cattleman Lost Money.

Toronto, Aug. 4.—Thomas Joyst of Shallow Lake, Ont., arrived in town yesterday with a load of cattle. After he had disposed of them he was assaulted and robbed of $80 on Terauley street.

Later yesterday afternoon Detective Murray arrested James Britton on a charge of assault and robbery. When searched the money was found on him.

Admiral Togo Arrives at New York.

New York, Aug. 4.—Admiral Count Heihachiro Togo, chief of the naval staff of the Japanese Empire, and hero of the battle of the Sea of Japan, will land in New York from the Lusitania to-day, to be the guest of the United States for the following two weeks. He will leave for Canada by way of Niagara on the 16th or 17th, taking the steamer for Japan at Vancouver.

Justifiable Homicide.

Montreal, Aug. 3—"Justifiable homicide" was the verdict of the coroner's jury in the case of Auguste Leroux, held in connection with the death of J. B. Bison.

The tragedy was the result of a dispute on religious matters, forced upon Leroux, it was stated, by the deceased.

Mangled Beyond Identification.

St. John, N.B., Aug. 4.—The finding of a man's hat and coat on the cowcatcher of a locomotive cleaned at Moncton told the tale of an awful accident. A search revealed the body of a man lying near the track at Sunnybrae, a suburb, in a mangled condition.

Lambert's Body Recovered.

Sault Ste. Marie, Aug. 4.—The body of Lorne Lambert, who was drowned in the river a week ago while operating the gasoline launch of the Model Dairy, was recovered yesterday at the New Ontario dock, about half a mile from the scene of the accident.

Republicans Alarmed.

Washington, D.C., Aug. 4.—Alarmed over the possibility of an attempt to pass the wool tariff revision bill over the anticipated veto of President Taft, the regular Republican leaders of the Senate yesterday set about to bring all the absent Republican Senators to the city before next week.

The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday refused to accept the farmers' free list tariff bill as amended by the Senate and instructed Chairman Underwood to move that the House nonconcur and ask a conference with the Senate.

"I have not the slightest doubt we can come to an agreement on the bill in conference," said Mr. Underwood.

One Life Lost.

Ogdensburg, Aug. 4.—While entertaining four friends yesterday in a motor boat, near Huckleberry Island in the St. Lawrence River, Alexander Harris set fire to the craft by striking a match to light his pipe. Flames from the resultant explosion of gasoline burned the boat to the waters edge and resulted in Harris' death.

The five men clung to the boat's edge as long as they could, dropped off when the fire got too hot and started for shore. Harris, who could not swim, was drowned in eight feet of water. He was 30 years of age, and leaves a widow and three small children. Searching parties are grappling for his body.

WILL SIGN TO-DAY

Anglo Franco-American Treaty Reaches Fruition—All Disputes Capable of Being Arbitrated

WILL BE TAKEN TO HAGUE

Washington, Aug. 4.—Three of the world's greatest nations joined hands yesterday in opening the way to the coveted goal of statesmen of modern times—universal peace. Before the day is closed, Great Britain and the United States and France will have signed general arbitration treaties for the peaceful settlement of all disputes that may be locked in the mystery of the future, even though they concern the national honor or vital interests of the signatories, subjects invariably excepted in existing arbitration treaties.

All differences internationally justiciable, shall be submitted to The Hague, unless by special agreement some other tribunal is created or selected.

Differences that either country thinks are not justiciable shall be referred to a commission of inquiry, composed of nationals of the two Governments, empowered to make recommendations for their settlement. Should the commission decide that the dispute be arbitrated, such decision will be binding.

Before arbitration is resorted to, even in cases where both countries agree that the difference is susceptible of arbitration, the commission of inquiry shall investigate the dispute with a view of recommending a settlement without arbitration.

The commission, at the request of either Government, will delay its findings one year to give an opportunity for diplomatic settlement.

The Senate will ratify the terms of submission of each dispute to arbitration.

The conventions grew directly out of President Taft's speech in Washington December 18 last, before the American Society for the Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, in which he said:

"If now we can negotiate and put through a positive agreement with some great nation to abide the adjudication of an international arbitral court in every issue which cannot be settled by negotiation, no matter what it involves, whether honor, territory, or money, we shall have made a long step forward by demonstrating that it is possible for two nations at least to establish, as between them, the same system of due process of law that exists between individuals under a Government."

Signed In France.

Paris, Aug. 4.—The Franco-American Arbitration Treaty was signed at 2.08 o'clock yesterday afternoon. This is hailed in this country as meaning the extension of a movement in all countries for the reduction of armaments to have absolute prevention of wars. The general view is that a tremendous impetus has been given to the world-wide peace campaign.

The Figaro in a long study of the situation resulting, declares that if other nations do not join the movement, those who have pledged for arbitration should adopt the principle of boycotting by inserting a clause in the international agreements, providing that they shall suspend all relations of commerce, transportation, and postal intercourse with any country warring upon one of the signers. For example, the paper says that if Great Britain, the United States, and France should boycott Germany by refusing all relations with her, the action would be certain to cause the confusion and ruin of that nation.

"By boycotting," The Figaro adds, "we will obtain obligatory arbitration, and then the limitation of armaments."

Catholic Foresters Raise Rates.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 4.—After a long and stubborn fight, the Catholic Order of Foresters in their bi-ennial convention here yesterday, decided to raise the order's insurance rates so as to equal the rates adopted by the National Federal Congress.

The new rates will go into effect on Jan. 1, 1913. The decision to increase the rates was carried by only nine votes. The delegates by a large majority vote decided to continue holding bi-ennial sessions and not change to quadriennial sessions.

Election of officers will be held to-day.

Auto Was Second-Hand.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—Montreal's municipal authorities were badly fooled when they bought Fire Chief Tremblay an automobile to enable him to be quickly on the scene when fires are reported.

Chief Tremblay reported to the Board of Control yesterday that the car has been under expert examination, and is now said to have been second-hand when bought.

Bad Outlook For Potatoes.

Kingston, Aug. 4.—If there is no rain within a day or so the potato crop in this district will be a failure. On the market yesterday potatoes sold at $2 per bushel. The ground is burning up with the heat and drought.

BALFOUR IS CRAFTY

He Heads Off Insurgent Lords With Empty Words—Move Will Change Nothing

IN THE ACTUAL SITUATION

London, Aug. 4.—Arthur J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, again yesterday displayed the political sagacity which for so many years has given him undisputed leadership of his party, when he announced in the lower chamber that he purposed on Monday next to move a vote of censure on the Government for having secured from King George the promise of sufficient peers to pass the veto bill.

This move will change nothing in the actual situation. It will be defeated in the Lower House and be carried by the House of Lords, where Lord Curzon will move an identical vote. Nevertheless, it is a subtle means for satisfying Mr. Balfour's rebellious followers with a phrase, and is proposed at the psychological moment when doubts had begun to assail many members of the Halsbury revolt as to the wisdom of their procedure.

During the last few days, there has been a distinct rally towards Mr. Balfour among the insurgents, except in the small section which is seeking to wrest the leadership from his hands. Thus the effect of the proposed vote of censure will be seen immediately. It was received with extraordinary enthusiasm by all ranks of the Unionist party and little else than it was talked of in Parliament lobbies and the political clubs last night.

The Halsburyites take the credit to themselves of having driven Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Balfour to this tardy act of leadership. Lord Willoughby de Brooke, in an interview last night, declared the situation was unchanged and that nothing would induce the members of his party to refrain from voting for the retention of Lord Lansdowne's amendments to the veto bill.

Judging by the comments of the morning newspapers, however, Mr. Balfour has completely re-established his lost authority. The Morning Post says: "At last, though late in the day, the Unionist leaders have taken a step which will cause immense satisfaction to all their followers—a step which will save the party from disgrace and the Unionist cause from disaster."

Won't Store Any More Grain.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—As a result of the conditions which have existed in the port of Montreal since the present season of navigation opened, it is understood that the harbor commissioners will shortly announce that in future no grain will be received in their elevator which is not destined for immediate transshipment to transatlantic ports. It is also stated that the period of twenty days' free storage at present allowed by the commissioners will be discontinued.

The commissioners state that the congestion is due to shippers sending grain here and keeping it in storage, instead of at once shipping it across the Atlantic.

Refused to Give Evidence.

Winnipeg, Aug. 4.—The efforts of the Provincial Commission to investigate the circumstances surrounding the methods by which the St. Peter's Reserve lands of great value were secured by speculators at the time the Indians surrendered their titles to the Government was suddenly blocked yesterday by the refusal of J. O. Lewis, who represented the Indian Department of the Dominion Government in the deal to testify. He refused on the ground that the commission has no legal authority to grant the investigation. The commission adjourned until the courts can order Lewis to testify.

A man named Larson, an escaped convict from Dorchester Penitentiary, is creating terror in Westmoreland County, N.B. He has stolen three horses and Wednesday night after stealing the last one, he set fire to the barn.

Trawler Lost.

Halifax, May 4.—While approaching Canso harbor Wednesday night in a dense fog, the steam trawler Cambodia struck on Flag Island Point, and is hard and fast.

While running out the anchor after the steamer struck, Mate Simon Sorenson and one of the crew named Paul Thompson were drowned by the sinking of their boat. A third man was picked up by a fishing dory and put off on shore. He escaped by jumping clear as the boat went down.

The Cambodia is one of the largest type of steam trawlers belonging to Grimsby, England, and is commanded by Capt. Oleson, an experienced trawler. She has been fishing on this side only a few weeks, with but fair success. It is not known yet what may be the chances of floating the vessel.

The bodies of the two men have not been recovered.

Removing the Maine.

Havana, Aug. 4—The work of removing the wreck of the battleship Maine entered an exceedingly interesting and important phase yesterday afternoon when the process of dissecting the shattered and distorted remains of the vessel by a gas blast apparatus was begun.

The work was begun on the highest part of the wreckage above the central superstructure, which at the present rate of progress will be entirely cut away in a few days, greatly facilitating the exploration of the hull. Afterwards the wreckage of the forward section will be removed. The stern section of the vessel, however, will not be touched by the gas blasters pending the settlement of the question whether there is a possibility of placing a bulkhead in it and floating it out of the cofferdam.

New Sanitarium.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—Dr. J. E. Laberge of the infectious disease department, has presented an application to the City Council for the inauguration of a sanitarium on the mountain, for incipient sufferers from tuberculosis.

His scheme would provide a building wherein the patients would be able to have suitable diet specified by the medical officer of health, and sleep out in the open at night. Special care would bring them down to work in the city during the day. This idea, he is convinced, would have a great tendency to lessen the spread of the disease, which is alarming the city.

Two Are Killed.

North Bay, Aug. 4.—Paul Tessier, from Montreal, a passenger of the Soo westbound C.P.R. express yesterday, on his way to work in the lumber shanties, fell from the train near Warren and was instantly killed.

Joseph Lafratier of Chalk River, a C.P.R. employe on a work train, fell under the wheels of the train on Kippawa branch. One arm was badly crushed and other injuries sustained and he died later at Mattawa Hospital.

Building Trades Boom.

Kingston, Aug. 4.—Building operations in Kingston this year will figure close on $300,000. For the seven months ending July, the amount of building was $172,614 against $126,961 last year.

Two buildings yet to report are, in addition to the postoffice and lead smelter, which will add $70,000 to the present amount.

Aeroplane Dropped Into Crowd.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—Physicians yesterday reported the injury of five persons, who narrowly escaped death last on Wednesday when an aeroplane dropped 100 feet into a crowd of spectators at West Pullman, Illinois. Frank Ballai, the aviator, was uninjured.

Aeroplane Postal Service.

London, Aug. 4.—The Postmaster-General is arranging with Graham White, the aviator, for an experimental aeroplane postal service between London and Windsor.

King George is greatly interested in the project and has given permission to use Windsor Park as the terminus of the route. The service will start during the present month.

2,000 Harvesters From Montreal.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—Two thousand able-bodied men, representing Montreal's answer to the call of the Canadian west to send harvesters to gather in the great wheat crop of the prairie provinces left the city yesterday for western points over the local roads.

Kryptok Lenses

The NEW INVISIBLE double vision lens. On the market but a few years, more than 200,000 ARE BEING WORN.

EVERY TIME—
You wipe "cemented on" bifocal lenses you run the risk of ruining their efficiency and making yourself expense by wiping off the wafers of thin "cemented on" glass.

EVERY TIME—
You wipe Kryptok double vision lenses you make them brighter and better. You cannot—mind, you cannot—wipe off a wafer because there is no wafer to wipe off.

EVERY TIME—
You see a person wearing "cemented on" bifocal lenses, the lines say "Over forty if a day." The absence of lines in Kryptoks makes you think the wearer under forty.

EVERY TIME—
Someone looks at you they'll think the same. With our complete line of up-to-date Finger Mounts and Spectacles we can make your glasses look well and your eyes see well.

"ADVENTURE"

By JACK LONDON

"But I told her it couldn't be done," Munster went on. "I told her the Martha hadn't a license for recruiting. 'Oh,' she said, 'it can't be done, eh?' and she stood and thought a few minutes.

"And I'd seen her think before," cried Sparrowhawk, "and I knew at wunst that the thing was as good as done."

Munster lighted his cigarette and resumed.

"'You see that spit,' she says to me, 'with the little ripple breaking around it? There's a current sets right across it and on it. And you see them baffin' little cat's-paws? It's good weather and a falling tide. You just start to beat out, the two of you, and all you have to do is miss stays in the same baffling puff, and the current will set you nicely aground.'"

"That little wash of sea won't more than start a sheet or two of copper,' says she, when Munster kicked." Sparrowhawk explained. "Oh, she's no green un, that girl."

"'Then I'll rescue your recruits and sail away.' 'You hang up one tide,' says she; 'the next is the big high water. Then you hedge off and go after more recruits. There's no law against starving 'em,' I said; 'you know yourself there ain't any kai-kai to speak of aboard of us, and there ain't a crumb on the Martha.'"

"We'd all been pretty well on native kai-kai, as it was," said Sparrowhawk.

"'Don't let the kai-kai worry you, Captain Munster,' says she; 'if I can find grub for eighty-four mouths on the Martha, the two of you can do as much by your two vessels. Now go ahead and get aground before a steady breeze comes up and spoils the maneuver. I'll send my boats the moment you strike. And now, good-day, gentlemen.'"

"And we went and did it," Sparrowhawk said solemnly, and then emitted a series of chuckling noises. "We laid over, starboard tack, and I pinched the Emily against the spit. 'Go about,' Captain Munster yells at me: 'go about, or you'll have me aground!' He yelled other things, much worse. But I didn't mind. I missed stays, pretty as you please, and the Flibberty drifted down on him and fouled him, and we went ashore together in as nice a mess as you ever want to see. Miss Lackland transferred the recruits, and the trick was done."

"But where was she during the nor'wester?" Sheldon asked.

"At Langa-Langa. Ran up there as it was coming on and laid there the whole week and traded for grub with the niggers. When we got to Tulagi, there she was waiting for us and scrapping with Burnett. I tell you, Mr. Sheldon, she's a wonder, that girl, a perfect wonder."

"Gritty! She's the grittiest thing, man or woman, that ever blew into the Solomons. You should have seen Poonga-Poonga the morning we arrived—Sniders popping on the beach and in the mangroves, war-drums booming in the bush, and signal-smokes raising everywhere. 'It's all up,' says Captain Munster."

"Yes, that's what I said," declared that mariner. "Of course, it was all up. You could see it with half an eye and hear it with one ear."

"'Up your granny,' she says to him," Sparrowhawk went on. "'Why, we haven't arrived yet, much less got started. Wait till the anchor's down before you get afraid.'"

"That's what she said to me," Munster proclaimed. "And, of course, it made me mad so that I didn't care what happened. We tried to send a boat ashore for a pow-wow, but it was fired upon. And every once and a while some nigger'd take a long shot at us out of th mangroves."

"They was only a quarter of a mile off," Sparrowhawk explains, "and it was damned nasty. 'Don't shoot unless they try to board,' was Miss Lackland's orders; but the dirty niggers wouldn't board. They just lav off in the bush and plugged away. That night we held a council of war in the Flibberty's cabin. 'What we want,' says Miss Lackland, 'is a hostage.'"

"'That's what they do in books,' I said, thinking to laugh her away from her folly." Munster interrupted. "'True,' says she, 'and have you never seen the books come true?' I shook my head. 'Then you're not too old to learn,' says she. 'I'll tell you one thing right now,' says I, 'and that is I'll be blowed if you catch me ashore in the night-time stealing niggers in a place like this.'"

"You didn't say 'blowed,'" Sparrowhawk corrected. "You'd said you'd be damned."

"That's what I did, and I meant it, too."

"'Nobody asked you to go ashore,' says she, quick as lightning." Sparrowhawk grinned. "And she said more. She said, 'And if I catch you going ashore without orders, there'll be trouble—understand, Captain Munster?'"

"Who in hell's telling this, you or me?" the skipper demanded wrathfully.

"Well, she did, didn't she?" insisted the mate.

"Yes, she did, if you want to make so sure of it. And while you're about it, you might as well repeat what she said to you when you said you wouldn't recruit on the Poonga-Poonga coast for twice your screw."

Sparrowhawk's sun-reddened face flamed redder, though he tried to pass the situation off by divers laughings and chucklings and face-twistings.

"Go on, go on," Sheldon urged; and Munster resumed the narrative.

"'What we need,' says she, 'is the strong hand. It's the only way to handle them; and we've got to take hold firm right at the beginning. I'm going ashore tonight to fetch Kin-Kina himself on board, and I'm not asking who's game to go with me, for I've got every man's work arranged for him. I'm taking my sailors with me, and one white man.' 'Of course, I'm that white man,' I said; for by that time I was mad enough to go to hell and back again. 'Of course you're not,' says she. 'You'll have charge of the covering boat. Curtis stands by the landing boat. Fowler goes with me. Brahma takes charge of the Flibberty, and Sparrowhawk of the Emily. And we start at one o'clock.'"

"My word, it was a tough job lying there in the covering boat. I never thought doing nothing could be such hard work. We stopped about fifty fathoms off, and watched the other boats go in. It was so dark under the mangroves we couldn't see a thing of it. D'ye know that little, monkey-looking nigger, Sheldon, on the Flibberty—the cook, I mean? Well, he was cabin-boy twenty years ago on the Scottish Chiefs, and after she was cut off he was a slave there at Poonga-Poonga. And Miss Lackland had discovered the fact. So he was the guide. She gave him half a case of tobacco for that night's work—"

"And scared him fit to die before she could get him to come along," observed Sparrowhawk.

"Well, I never saw anything so black as the mangroves. I stared at them till my eyes were ready to burst. And then I'd look at the stars, and listen to the surf sighing along the reef. And there was a dog that barked. Remember that dog, Sparrowhawk? The brute nearly gave me heart-failure when he first began. After awhile he stopped—wasn't barking at the landing party at all; and then the silence was harder than ever, and the mangroves grew blacker, and it was all I could do to keep from calling out to Curtis in there in the landing boat, just to make sure that I wasn't the only white man left alive.

"Of course there was a row. It had to come, and I knew it; but it startled me just the same. I never heard such screeching and yelling in my life. The niggers must have just dived for the bush without looking to see what was up, while her Tahitians let loose, shooting in the air and yelling to hurry 'em on. And then, just as sudden, came the silence again—all except for some small kiddie that had got dropped in the stampede and that kept crying in the bush for its mother.

"And then I heard them coming through the mangroves, and an oar strike on a gunwale, and Miss Lackland laugh, and I knew everything was all right. We pulled on board without a shot being fired. And by God! she had made the books come true, for there was old Kina-Kina himself, being hoisted over the rail, shivering and chattering like an ape. The rest was easy. Kina-Kina's word was law, and he was scared to death. And we kept him on board issuing proclamations all the time we were in Poonga-Poonga.

"It was a good move, too, in other ways. She made Kina-Kina order his people to return all the gear they'd stripped from the Martha. And back it came, day after day, steering compasses, blocks and tackles, sails, coils of rope, medicine chests, ensigns, signal flags—everything, in fact, except the trade goods and supplies which had already been kai-kai'd. Of course, she gave them a few sticks of tobacco to keep them in good humour."

"Sure she did," Sparrowhawk broke forth. "She gave the beggars five fathoms of calico for the big mainsail, two sticks of tobacco for the chronometer, and a sheath-knife worth eleven pence ha'penny for a hundred fathoms of brand-new five-inch manila. She swot old Kina-Kina with that strong hand on the go-off, and she kept him going all the time. She—here she comes now."

It was with a shock of surprise that Sheldon greeted her appearance. All the time, while the tale of happening at Poonga-Poonga had been going on, he had pictured her as the woman he had always known, clad roughly, skirt made out of window-curtain stuff, an undersized man's shirt for a blouse, straw sandals for foot covering, with a Stetson hat and the eternal revolver completing her costume. The ready-made clothes from Sydney had transformed her. A simple skirt and shirt-waist of some sort of wash-goods set off her trim figure with a hint of elegant womanhood that was new to him. Brown slippers peeped out as she crossed the compound, and he once caught a glimpse to the ankle of brown openwork stockings. Somehow, she had been made many times the woman by these mere extraneous trappings; and in his mind these wild Arabian Nights adventures of hers seemed thrice as wonderful.

As they went in to breakfast, he became aware that Munster and Sparrowhawk had received a similar shock. All their air of camaraderie was dissipated, and they had become abruptly and immensely respectful.

"I've opened up a new field," she said, as she began pouring the coffee. "Old Kina-Kina will never forget me, I'm sure, and I can recruit there whenever I want. I saw Morgan at Guvutu. He's willing to contract for a thousand boys at forty shillings per head. Did I tell you that I'd taken out a recruiting license for the Martha? I did, and the Martha can sight eighty boys every trip."

Sheldon smiled a trifle bitterly to himself. The wonderful woman who had tripped across the compound in her Sydney clothes was gone, and he was listening to the boy come back again.

CHAPTER XIX.
THE LOST TOY

"Well," Joan said with a sight, "I've shown you hustling American methods that succeed and get somewhere, and here you are beginning your muddling again."

Five days had passed, and she and Sheldon were standing on the veranda watching the Martha, close-hauled on the wind, laying a tack off short. During those five days Joan had never once broached the desire of her heart, though Sheldon, in this particular instance reading her like a book, had watched her lead up to the question a score of times in the hope that he would himself suggest her taking charge of the Martha. She had wanted him to say the word, and she had steeled herself not to say it herself. The matter of finding a skipper had been a hard one. She was jealous of the Martha, and no suggested man had satisfied her.

"Oleson?" she had demanded. "He does very well on the Flibberty, with me and my men to overhaul her whenever she's ready to fall to pieces through his slackness. But skipper of the Martha? Impossible!

"Munster? Yes, he's the only man I know in the Solomons I'd care to see in charge. And yet, there's his record. He lost the Umbawa—one hundred and forty drowned. He was first officer on the bridge. Deliberate disobedience to instructions. No wonder they broke him.

"Christian Young has never had any experience with large boats. Besides, we can't afford to pay him what he's clearing on the Minerva. Sparrowhawk is a good man—to take orders. He has no initiative. He's an able sailor, but he can't command. I tell you I was nervous all the time he had charge of the Flibberty at Poonga-Poonga when I had to stay by the Martha."

And so it had gone. No name proposed was satisfactory, and, moreover, Sheldon had been surprised by the accuracy of her judgments. A dozen times she almost drove him to the statement that from the showing she made of Solomon Islands sailors, she was the only person fitted to command the Martha. But each time he restrained himself while her pride prevented her from making the suggestion.

"Good whale-boat sailors do not necessarily make good schooner-handlers," she replied to one of his arguments. "Besides, the captain of a boat like the Martha must have a large mind, see things in a large way; he must have capacity and enterprise."

"But with your Tahitians on board—" Sheldon had begun another argument.

"There won't be any Tahitians on board," she had returned promptly. "My men stay with me. I never know when I may need them. When I sail, they sail; when I remain ashore, they remain ashore. I'll find plenty for them to do right here on the plantation. You've seen them clearing bush; each of them worth half a dozen of your cannibals."

So it was that Joan stood beside Sheldon and sighed as she watched the Martha beating out to sea, old Kinross, brought over from Savo, in command.

"Kinross is an old fossil," she said, with a touch of bitterness in her voice. "Oh, he'll never wreck her through rashness, rest assured of that; but he's timid to childishness, and timid skippers lose just as many vessels as rash ones. Some day, Kinross will lose the Martha because there'll be only one chance and he'll be afraid to take it. I know his sort. Afraid to take advantage of a proper breeze of wind that will fetch him in in twenty hours, he'll get caught out in the calm that follows and spend a whole week in getting in. The Martha will make money with him, there's no doubt of it; but she won't make near the money that she would under a competent master."

"My! but she is a witch! Look at her eating up the water, and there's no wind to speak of. She's not got ordinary white metal, either. It's man-of-war copper, every inch of it. I had them polish it with cocoanut husks when she was careened at Poonga-Poonga. She was a seal-hunter before this gold expedition got her. And seal-hunters had to sail. They've run away from second-class Russian cruisers more than once up there off Siberia.

"Honestly, if I'd dreamed of the chance waiting for me at Guvutu when I bought her for less than three hundred dollars, I'd never have gone partners with you. And in that case I'd be sailing her right now."

The justice of her contention came abruptly home to Sheldon. What she had done she would have done just the same if she had not been his partner. And in the saving of the Martha he had played no part. Single-handed, unadvised, in the teeth of the danger of Guvutu and of the competition of men like Morgan and Raff, she had gone into the adventure and brought it through to success.

"You'd make me feel like a big man who has robbed a small child of a dolly," he said, with sudden contrition.

She looked at him and he noted that her lip was slightly trembling and that her eyes were moist. It was the boy all over, he thought; the boy crying for the wee bit boat with which to play. And yet it was a woman, too. What a mass of contradiction she was! And he wondered, had she been all woman and no boy, if he would have loved her in just the same way. Then it rushed in upon conciousness that he really loved her for what she was, for all the boy in her and all the rest of her—for the total of her that would have been a different total in direct proportion to any differing of the parts of her.

"But the small child won't cry any more for it," she was saying. "This is the last sob. Some day, if Kinross doesn't lose her, you'll turn her over to your partner, I know. And I won't nag you any more. Only I do hope you know how I feel. It isn't as if I'd merely bought the Martha, or merely built her. I saved her. I took her off the reef. I saved her from the grave of the sea when fifty-five pounds was considered a big risk. She is mine, peculiarly mine. Without me she wouldn't exist. That big nor-wester would have finished her the first three hours it blew. And then I've sailed her, too; and she is a witch, a perfect witch. Why, do you know, she'll steer by the wind with half a spoke, give and take. And going about! Well, you don't have to baby her, starting head-sheets, flattening mainsail, and gentling her with the wheel. Put your wheel down, and around she comes, like a colt with the bit in its teeth. And you can back her like a steamer. I did it at Langa-Langa, between that shoal patch and the shore-reef. It was wonderful.

"But you don't love boats like I do, and I know you think I'm making a fool of myself. But some day I'm going to sail the Martha again. I know it. I know it."

In reply, and quite without premeditation, his hand went out to hers, covering it as it lay on the railing. But he knew, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that it was the boy that returned the pressure he gave, the boy sorrowing over the lost toy. The thought chilled him. Never had he been actually nearer to her, and never had she been more convincingly remote. She was certainly not acutely aware that his hand was touching hers. In her grief at the departure of the Martha it was, to her, anybody's hand—at the best, a friend's hand.

He withdrew his hand and walked perturbedly away.

"Why hasn't he got that big fisherman's stay-sail on her?" she demanded irritably. "It would make the old girl just walk along in this breeze. I know the sort old Kinross is. He's the skipper that lies three days under double-reefed topsails waiting for a gale that doesn't come. Safe? Oh, yes, he's safe—dangerously safe." pitchers don't come too quickly.

When Blood Was Impure

The Old-fashioned Doctor Brought Relief by Bleeding

To-day We Keep the Blood Pure by Using

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The doctor of a century or two ago was accustomed to free his patient of an excess of poisoned blood by the cruel process of bleeding.

We would not stand for that heroic treatment to-day, because we understand better the work of the liver and kidneys and how to awaken them to their duty of filtering poisons from the blood.

These are the only organs of the body which filter poisons from the blood, and so cleanse the system of the foul waste matter which causes pains, aches and dangerous diseases, and there is no way you can so quickly bring the liver and kidneys into action as by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Don't imagine that a liquid medicine is necessary to purify the blood. The supreme test is, "Does the treatment awaken the action of the liver and invigorate the kidneys?" Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are unique in their combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels, and on this account wonderfully successful as a means of purifying the blood.

The whole digestive and excretory system is cleansed and invigorated by this treatment. The appetite is sharpened, digestion improves, and the tired, languid feelings of a poisoned system give way to new health and vigour. One pill a dose. 25 cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

GREY HAIR AND BEAUTY

An Observation Concerning Many Social Functions in England

At the great social functions this season the number of grey-haired ladies to be seen is a matter of general comment. In these days grey hairs are apt to make their appearance in early middle life, indeed, in many cases while the owner is in the flower of her youth. The Marchioness of Ripon's hair has been white for years. Mrs. Hall Walker, one of the lovely Sheridans, has white hair, which is the envy of all her friends. She is one of the young matrons. Another is Mrs. John Jacob Astor, whose snowy tresses single her out for admiration in any crowd. Since she was seventeen Lady Henry Bentinck has had white hair. She is a sister-in-law of the Duke of Portland, and one of the most picturesque women in London. Madame von Andre, a popular American, says if a woman has the proper coloring for white hair, that it is irresistible. Her own certainly is. Countess Fritz-Hockberg, who is a sister of Lord Ferry, a typical Irish beauty, with her dark eyes and fair complexion, has wonderful white hair. Since Lady Warwick's red-gold hair has begun to turn white her friends say she is more beautiful than at any other time in her life.

ROBBED THE MAIL

A Party of Masked Men Held Up an Irish Car

An extraordinary affair is reported from the West of Ireland. The Royal Mail car from Kilcolgab, County Galway, to Bellyvaughan, was held up by a party of masked men, all of whom, it is declared, were armed. A revolver was pointed at the driver, who quickly dismounted and fled for his life. The car was then driven seven miles in another direction by the masked men, and when it was afterwards discovered by the roadside it was found that several mail-bags had been torn open and letters were strewn about the roadway.

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Theft of the Potter Jewels-

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W.G. CHAPMAN

[THIS is one of a new series of stories concerning adventures that have occurred in the lives of the world's greatest detectives. Mr. Barton has gathered his material from real life, but in some cases imaginary names have been substituted for real ones simply as a matter of justice to the innocent descendents of culprits mentioned in the narratives. Permissable liberties have been taken in the construction and arrangement of these fact stories, but in all that is essential they may be regarded as human documents of unusual interest and value.—The Editor.)

In the summer of 1904 the daughter-in-law of Mrs. Bishop Potter arrived in Cooperstown, New York, for the purpose of spending a holiday with her relatives. She possessed a collection of rare jewels and, for the sake of safety, it was decided to place the valuables in a big vault in the office of the Clark estate. That apparently sensible proceeding being completed, all thought of the rare gems was forgotten. But one day, while the family was at dinner, a white-faced clerk hurried to the house and begged to see Mrs. Potter.

"The jewels," he stammered, "the jewels have been stolen!"

The amazing statement proved to be a fact. The Clark Estate building, in many respects, resembled a bank. The imposing front, the iron bars, the long counters and the frowning iron and steel safes and vaults all contributed to the illusion. It seems that while most of the clerks were away at the noonday hour, a man, wearing a short coat, ink bespattered, and bearing all the appearances of one of the attaches of the institution, had entered the office, opened the safe and taken out the tin box containing the jewels. This box had been carried to the cellar and pried open with tools found on the premises, the thief stealing the jewelry and some valuable papers.

The local authorities were notified, and they made a thorough investigation which proved to their satisfaction that no one connected with the Clark Estate building was implicated. An examination of the premises indicated that the robbery was committed by a professional bank thief. That meant that he had covered his tracks skillfully and might never be apprehended. Such men are the aristocrats of the criminal world and defy the methods usually applied to ordinary offenders.

Fortunately some persons in the vicinity of the Clark Estate building had noticed a man loitering in the neighborhood on the day of the robbery, and were able to give a description of him. Also it was found that the tin box discovered in the cellar was covered with blood. The theory was that the thief had cut his hands with the instrument used in opening the box. The blood on the box, therefore, was the only clue that the authorities had to work upon. It is not surprising that several days went by without results of any kind.

At this stage of the proceedings the case was entrusted to the Pinkertons. Mr. William A. Pinkerton became interested at once. He knew the life and the achievements of the really great crooks by heart. Above all, he knew the methods of the big thieves, for there is technique in bank breaking as well as in the other professions of life. For instance, he knew one man who always committed his robberies in medium-sized towns on circus days; another made a specialty of "tapping the victim," that is to say, while the patron of a bank is engaged in counting a roll of money, the thief taps him on the shoulder and calls his attention to the fact that he has dropped a bill on the floor (generally placed there by the tapper). As the man stoops down to pick up the note, the thief grabs the big roll and makes away with it. Still another method was to have a confederate call up the paying teller of a bank on the telephone, and while he was engaged in conversation, the sneak thief was carrying on his operations in another part of the bank. These ruses are attempted only in small country towns.

After Mr. Pinkerton had obtained all of the details concerning the Cooperstown robbery, he mentally compared the circumstances with the methods of the great criminals he had known. Finally he looked up with the light of discovery in his eyes. He spoke to one of his assistants.

"There's only one man in America who could have had the nerve and ingenuity to do that job."

"Who's that?"

"Billy Coleman."

"What shall we do?"

"Find him and arrest him."

That was not a difficult matter, for "Billy," to his misfortune, was "known to the police." The fact that he was wanted was telegraphed to the authorities of every large city in the United States. Two weeks after the robbery Mr. Coleman was arrested for the Pinkertons by the police of New York City. He took the proceeding quite as a matter of course, and yet with an air of injured innocence. He tallied with the description that had been given to the Pinkertons by the witnesses from Cooperstown, but there was no positive evidence to prove that he was the robber. The case went before the grand jury. In this country a man may be arrested on suspicion, though he is rarely convicted on conjecture. In the early part of the case great stress had been laid on the bloody tin box. A careful examination of Coleman, however, showed no cuts or bruises of any kind, on any part of his person, from which blood could have freely flown. The grand jury refused to indict him for the crime and he was released. One of Coleman's friends said, tauntingly, to Pinkerton:

"That was quickly ended."

"We've just begun," was the grim reply.

And so it seemed. Mr. Coleman was shadowed day and night. In a short while the agency knew just what he ate for his breakfast, dinner and supper; they knew where he slept, and had a line on his amusements and his relaxations. Billy was too bright not to know that he was being followed, but he seemed to enjoy the chase and at intervals took keen pleasure in throwing the police off the track. Summer passed into autumn and that, in turn, into winter, and then the suspected one began to feel that he was safe. But he was being pursued by men whose boast was that they never slept.

The climax came just about the time of the first fall of snow in the winter of 1904. One morning he went to the Grand Central depot and purchased a ticket for a station in New York state. Two Pinkerton men were suddenly seized with a desire to go to the same place. Mr. Pinkerton, hearing of this, followed on a later train, saying significantly:

"The sleighing may be good up that way."

On the following morning Coleman arose quite early, and taking a spade with him, went toward a house near the outer part of the town. He walked to the side of the building and, clearing away the snow from a portion of the ground, prepared to dig. Pinkerton appeared at this awkward moment.

"A little early in the morning for physical culture," he remarked, dryly.

He was taken into custody by the Pinkertons and the local police. After he had been placed under lock and key, the officers proceeded with the interrupted job. They dug down two feet into the ground and found an ordinary fruit jar which contained a large portion of the missing jewelry. The receptacle contained a number of settings from which the diamonds were missing. Robert Pinkerton knew that one of Billy's tricks was a habit of hiding his booty in the most unheard-of places.

"This squirrel," it was remarked, "has been concealing his choicest kernels in the expectation of a hard winter. We must look elsewhere."

Naturally they went to Coleman's home and there began one of the most thorough searches known in the annals of crime. For completeness, it could only be compared to the methods of M. Dupin. Those who have had the good fortune to read "The Purloined Letter" will recall that the celebrated French sleuth left nothing to chance. M. Dupin boasted that he had keys with which he could open any chamber or cabinet in Paris. The entrance of the police into the suspected house, however, was only the preliminary to this famous case. The Parisian police, it will be remembered, engaged in a series of examinations which make the work of the redoubtable Sherlock Holmes look clumsy and amateurish in comparison.

They investigated first the furniture of each room. They opened every possible drawer, saying, by way of parenthesis, that to a properly-trained police agent such a thing as a secret drawer was impossible. After the cabinets they took the chairs. The cushions they probed with fine, long needles. From the tables they removed the tops. They examined the rungs of every chair in the house, and indeed the jointings of every description of furniture by the aid of a most powerful microscope. They looked for any traces of recent disturbances. "A single grain of gimlet dust," the prefect said, "would have been as obvious as an apple."

But in this famous piece of fictional detective work the police went still further. They looked to the mirrors, between the boards and the plates, they probed the beds and the bed clothes as well as the curtains and the carpets. Even this was not considered sufficient. They looked among the books and the papers of the suspected man. They opened every package and parcel; they not only opened every book, but they turned over every leaf in every volume. They also measured the thickness of every book cover with the most accurate measurement. Some five or six volumes, fresh from the binder, they probed longitudinally with the needles. They explored the floors beneath the carpet and the paper on the walls. The examination included the ground about the house. The moss between the bricks was scrutinised and found undisturbed. In fact, they divided the house and the two houses immediately adjoining, and scrutinized each individual square inch with the aid of a microscope. Not until all this was done—and it occupied weeks of time—did they finally conclude that the missing letter was not in that house.

With such an illustrious example before them, the Pinkertons began the examination of Billy Coleman's house. They looked into chimneys and fireplaces, and even gazed inquiringly behind the pictures on the walls. It seemed like a game of blind man's buff. When all seemed hopeless, Pinkerton's attention was attracted by a number of flowers and plants that occupied the section of a bay window in the living room.

"Examine those plants," directed Pinkerton.

The searchers looked at him in amazement.

"Yes," he smiled, in answer to their incredulous glances, "I mean what I say."

The man did as he was directed. A long, sharp stick was run into the earth of the tub that held the plant. The stick struck a foreign substance. The earth was quickly removed and a pasteboard box was found at the bottom of the tub. It contained sixty-nine of the diamonds that had been stolen at Cooperstown four months before. It was a great find. But Pinkerton felt instinctively that more of the jewelry was concealed on the premises. The search was resumed. The methods of Dupin were continued. But the detectives now confined their operations to the bedroom of the house. Drawer after drawer, and closet after closet was subjected to the closest scrutiny. Finally a long box was found, containing a number of neckties. They were examined one after another. Two or three of the ties were ready-made. One of the searchers, feeling a certain cravat, noticed a peculiar hardness about it. The tie was promptly ripped open, and out of its silken folds dropped two large diamonds that had been taken from a ring.

It was a great piece of work. Practically all of the stolen jewelry had been recovered. Pinkerton now interviewed Billy Coleman. He said that the case was ended and that the evidence in hand meant a long sentence in prison for the culprit. He asked him to give his own story of the robbery. Coleman refused at first. Finally, however, he admitted that he was the thief, and probably from a feeling of pride in his own cleverness, told how the "job had been pulled off."

The "Professor," as he was jocularly styled by Mr. Pinkerton, said that the idea of robbing the Clark Estate bank first occurred to him a year before the actual event. He had made a tour through Upper New York state for the purpose of locating a financial institution which would not seem difficult, to "sneak" in the daytime. The Clark Estate office in Cooperstown seemed to offer possibilities for a nice, genteel job. Coleman believed it to be a bank. He visited it at the noon hour while most of the employes were absent at luncheon, and as he afterwards said to one of his "pals," it seemed a shame to take the money. At all events, he did not steal anything at that time. But he put it down on his books as a promising place for the future.

He returned to Cooperstown in a year. He loitered around the building all of the morning. At the noon hour the coast was clear and he slipped into the place unnoticed. Coleman bore a reputation for being able to get into bank vaults and paying tellers' cages in the daytime without being observed. He sustained his record in this instance. Whether it was his confident manner or the fact that he was bare-headed and wore a little office coat, no one knows. At any rate, he got there. To his chagrin, not a dollar was in sight. But a tin box was there, and in sheer desperation he picked it up. With almost insolent confidence he went into the cellar and, picking up a chisel and some other sharp instrument, opened the receptacle. It was a hot day, and as he worked rapidly his nose started to bleed, covering the tin box. That was the secret of the blood-stained evidence. The method of concealing the booty has already been explained.

Coleman was really a genius in his line—disreputable as it was. It must be said to his credit that he never used firearms, and William A. Pinkerton, who was a veritable encyclopedia on matters of this kind, said that there was no record of Coleman's ever having shed blood in the commission of a crime. He is one of the very few prisoners who had the distinction of escaping from Sing Sing. He is said to have done this with the assistance of a tug boat in August, 1871. His longest term of penal servitude was seven years in the Georgia state penitentiary in 1884, and his shortest term was in Jersey City, N. J., in 1903, where he was fined $30 and released. He was undoubtedly one of the most expert "sneaks" of modern times. He was arrested at least fourteen times and spent almost half of his life in prison. After the Cooperstown robbery, one who knew him intimately said that he did not have a dollar in the world.

HOW PARIS REPORTERS WRITE

Specimens of What the English Call Journalese Culled From the French Newspapers.

"Litterature" is the agreeable name coined by M. Adrien Valvy, humorist-in-ordinary to the Gaulois, for what in English is called "journalese," and he quotes a few good specimens of "litterature." "This man, wrapped in the dread but necessary mantle of social justice, seemed at the moment truly a pillar of society, as in the picture graven by the philosopher's learned pen," wrote a victim of the guillotine. Here is the dreadful picture:

"It was after lunch! The hour of toasts was long since past. Mme. G. rose. She laughed. 'Ladies and gentlemen, I have an idea,' she said, and laughed again. She beat her forehead, upon which blond curls played, and lifted it, laughing again. It amused her to be making a speech."

M. Yely warrants that all these specimens are authentic.—Paris Correspondent London Telegraph.

Making the Best of It.

The Troy press says: "After all, it is an alert official who knows enough to get out without waiting to be put out." And he cheats his enemies out of such an exquisite pleasure.

ARE OUR HANDS LESS VALUABLE?

Eminent Surgeon Draws Attention to What Science and Machinery are Doing

Sir Frederick Treves, the eminent surgical authority, in a "Nineteenth Century" paper, declares very emphatically that "it would seem that the highest point of development in the use of the hands has been already reached; has been, indeed, passed, and that we have now entered upon a decline." Let us see to what extent Sir Frederick's contentions can be supported.

Two of the commonest handicrafts are those of writing and sewing, but they are being now rapidly supplanted by the typewriter on the one hand and the sewing machine on the other. The finer use of the fingers is thus becoming lost, so far as these simple crafts are concerned. There was occasion when penmanship was almost a fine art, and the writing master a power in the land. In these present days of hurry there is no time for elegant hand-writing. The script of the ordinary letter-writer is often as hard to interpret as the message on the Rosetta stone, and as there is, coincidentally, no leisure available for the decyphering of illegible writing, the typing machine becomes opportune.

Deliberate Surgeon of To-Day

Surgery during recent years has made amazing advances. Should it be asked if this progress has been associated with, or dependent upon, a corresponding development of the handicraft of surgery, the answer is, it has not. Before the days of anaesthetics the surgeon was operating upon a sensitive being. Rapidity of movement was all essential; success was gauged by the stop-watch, every unnecessary second meant unnecessary torture. The surgeon had to be marvellously deft of hand, cool, yet alert as a fencer; quick, yet as sure as a matador. The combination of qualities that made up a good operating surgeon was rare, and so in those days the perfect operator was equally rare.

Now, with the use of anaesthetics, the surgeon can proceed with easy deliberation, every step can be measured and judged; there is no call to be brilliant; there is no element of hurry, for in place of the flashing blade is an action as studied as a movement on the chess-board. The result of it is this: Surgery, as a pure handicraft, has undoubtedly lost ground.

Some of the simpler crafts exhibit in striking fashion the decay of cultivation in the use of the hands. Take the very ancient occupation of spinning and weaving. In India it is still possible to see the whole process of making cloth from cotton carried out by hand. The process involves a fine training for the fingers—a training that has made nimble and sensitive the hands of thousands of men and women in this country. But the handicraft has vanished, the machine has replaced it, and the skill educed by centuries of practice has been lost forever. Not so many years ago it was possible to see in almost every fishing village half a dozen gossips strolling about knitting stockings and jerseys for men. The work was not, perhaps, elaborate, but it was a good training for the hands. The knitters are now hard to find. Hand knitting does not pay except as an amusement.

The ancient art of embroidery—as ancient as Babylon and Tyre—was a craft of wide possibilities. The handicraft is practically lost. It is true that the finer work is still done by the hand, but the major part is turned out of a machine with brutal unconcern. There are advantages resulting from this which are easy to appreciate, but at the same time a thousand hands have lost their cunning and handicraftsmanship has passed to a lower grade.

Lace-making occupies a somewhat similar position. It is probably the most elaborate work which has ever engaged the facile fingers of women. Lace-making has engaged whole colonies of women, and has enabled them to bring the culture of the hand to a marvellous degree of perfection. This has assuredly been an object worthy of attainment. But the days of the craft are nearly over, and the manual skill so laboriously attained is—in spite of all attempts to revive it—in process of being lost.

Probably the oldest domestic instrument is the needle. The needle-maker was a master of craft. The common needle is now made by a series of machines, which turn the implements out in pairs, two being united, head to head. The process involves manual skill, and in the production of special needles something of the cunning of the past but the fact remains that a great means for the culture of the hands has passed away.

The Degenerate Carpenter

The carpenter, with his primitive art, is still with us, but he is not the handicraftsman that he was. There are sawing engines and planing machines for boards of every kind. The "four-cutter machine" works all four faces of the wood simultaneously Machines have been produced for [illegible] all kinds of mouldings, for cutting dovetails, mortises and tenons, while the engine known as the "universal joiner" is a combination machine with superhuman powers. The "copying lathe" produces objects of regular or irregular shape automatically from a pattern, and can turn out with equal ease a gunstock or a broom handle, a boot-last or a toy horse. The sand-papering machine is almost uncanny in its imitation of human movements, while the self-directing lathe represents the callous absorption of whole centuries of manual skill.

Sir Frederick Treves goes through a long list of occupations, arts and accomplishments which formerly called into play great dexterity of the hand and fingers, and which are now done by machinery. Even piano playing is included in the list. The loss is both great and regrettable.—Glasgow Daily Herald.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

While the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For many years I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

AGED CLOWN TO MARRY

James Doughty, Aged 90, Will Wed a Girl of 25

Mr. James Doughty, the oldest man in the world, whose approaching marriage, at the age of ninety-two to a woman of twenty-five was announced recently, gives an interesting version of a conversation which led to his engagement. The old man's face is wrinkled and his hair is silvered, but his eye is bright and his hand-shake is one that can be felt. "I'm going to live to be a hundred," he said, when interviewed at his cottage opposite the Brighton Hippodrome. "You see," he went on, "my wife has been dead these four months, and I am getting lonely. I've had plenty of trouble and I want someone to look after me." He explained that Miss Alice Underwood, his fiancée, is a daughter of his former housekeeper.

"One day she was here, and a friend said, 'You are very lonely, Mr. Doughty; you ought to get married again.'

"'Married!' I said. 'Who's likely to marry an old man like me?'

"Alice looked up and said, 'I would.' 'Nonsense,' said I; 'but she stuck to it, and so we're going to get married.'"

Thus did Mr. Doughty tell his story, and Miss Underwood, who was listening, did not deny his version.

Mr. Doughty makes his living by means of performing dogs on the West Pier at Brighton. He has just started training a new dog. "It's a long job," said he, "but I can do it." Clowning, he says, is not what it was in the good old days of the harlequinade. He would like to put on his clown's dress to be married in, but the bride shakes her head.

GAINSBOROUGH PAINTING

The Alleged Original of his "Stolen Duchess" is at the Baillie Gallery

The alleged original of Gainsborough's "Stolen Duchess" is now to be seen at the Baillie Gallery, in Bruton Street, London, under conditions which make it possible to form an idea as to its artistic merit. Although the documentary evidence in its favor is so clear and convincing that any legal mind will accept it as absolutely trustworthy, the picture itself does not advance the claims made on its behalf. There is little if any evidence of Gainsborough's brushwork to be seen on the canvas, which must have undergone many restorations, and bears a thick coat of shiny varnish. What is to be seen now reveals a coarseness of touch quite alien to Gainsborough's art. How much of this may be due to subsequent repaintings it is difficult to decide. In this connection it is interesting that Mr. Foster in his declaration distinctly states that Gainsborough, when asked to paint the portrait of Lady Betty Foster, said that he would show his ability to paint in the much-admired manner of Reynolds, but, without resorting to the "butchery passages" with which Reynolds endeavored to imitate the "impasto" of the Italian school. Of course, if Gainsborough deliberately adopted a style of painting different from his usual practice, this may account for the difficulty every student of his work most experiences in trying to discover his brushwork in the portrait in the Baillie Gallery. Whatever conclusions may be arrived at from comparing the two rival pictures which are claimants to the distinction of being Gainsborough's originals, it seems fairly established that both of them represent Lady Betty Foster, the second wife of the Duke of Devonshire, and not Georgina, his first wife.

COW AS PASSENGER

Russian Railway Employes Treated the Director's Bovine Guite Royally

Railway employes in Russia realize that they are working not in the interest of the public, but for the Director of the railway. A characteristic incident is reported from Samara. A cow belonging to the Director of the railway had to travel from Santoust to Samara. The railway officials along the line were very anxious about the safety of the animal, and as soon as the cow was placed in a specially prepared truck instructions by wire were sent all along the line. At Bugulmaslan the truck was attached to a fast train, so that the cow would be saved the discomfort of slow travelling. The station-master at Kinel paid a special visit to the cow, and then telegraphed to the Director of the railway: "Cow passed in the train 811. Health excellent." When the cow reached her journey's end a crowd of railway officials met the train, and accorded her something like a royal reception. Passengers by the train were greatly annoyed, and they complain that the railway's employes concerned themselves more about the cow than the safety of human life.

DENTAL DISEASES

The Chief Cause is Soft and Sticky Food Eaten by Children

Dr. J. Sim Wallace, speaking at the Imperial Health Congress at Caxton Hall, under the auspices of the Women's Imperial Health Association, said that the cause of dental diseases was the soft and sticky nature of the foods commonly consumed by children. "When certain foods of a starchy and sticky nature lodge in the teeth," he added, "they ferment and give rise to acids which destroy the enamel. Unless such foods are eaten with a corresponding amount of food of a fibrous or firm and cleansing nature, decay is sure to result. Chronic ill-health and concommittant emaciation in children prevent the perfect development of the jaws, and this is largely the result of a system of feeding, which has resulted in the foisting on children of all ages of foods which leave the mouth in a state of chronic fermentation." Mr. Ralph P. Williams stated that out of 76,000 school children in Sheffield, 60,000—more than 79 per cent.—were in urgent need of dental treatment.

DANCER AS A SPY

A Russian Beauty Who Won Her Way to the Authorities

A great sensation has been caused in St. Petersburg by the news that Mme. Kresinska, the famous Polish dancer, who formerly appeared at the Imperial theatres, has been arrested at Orscow on a charge of Espionage. By her talent and beauty the dancer won such high favor that she was enabled to exercise great influence in the capital, especially in art circles. It was due to Mme. Kresinska that a Polish committee was formed to erect a statue of Chopin at Warsaw. Some time ago it came to the knowledge of the Russian authorities that secrets appertaining to the national defence were communicated to Japan and Germany. In connection with this affair several officers of the General Staff were arrested, but all were able to establish their complete innocence. However, as a result of the inquiry, the authorities obtained information which led to the dancer. She was closely watched. The police swooped down on her house unexpectedly, and documents and letters were seized which are now occupying the attention of the authorities.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which surely progresses from bad to worse.

It has been Dr. Pierce's privilege to cure a great many women who have found a refuge for modesty in his offer of FREE consultation by letter. All correspondence is held as sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores and regulates the womanly functions, abolishes pain and builds up and puts the finishing touch of health on every weak woman who gives it a fair trial.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. Sick Women Well.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine of known composition.

GRIRO IS ACCUSED.

Missing Italian Blamed For Murder In Toronto.

Toronto, Aug. 4.—"That a certain person, whom we, the jurors in the case, believe to be Frank Griro, on the 30th day of July, did feloniously, wilfully and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder Frank Tarro."

The coils of circumstantial evidence have been surely tightening around the missing Frank Griro, or Grossio, alias Rossaro, for whom the police are searching for the murder of his compatriot, Frank Tarro, last Sunday, and last night, at the conclusion of the inquest, the chain of evidence was practically completed, and the foregoing verdict returned.

Witness after witness identified the murderer with the picture of Griro, as taken by the police department. Slowly his route of escape is being worked out.

A witness, last evening, Herbert Eastough, a street railway conductor, giving evidence to the fact that he got on his car at Front and John streets in a very nervous condition, getting off again at Bathurst street, and striking down over the tracks. It is believed that he boarded an eastbound freight train. Oran Benson gave evidence that he had passed the man on Yonge street shortly after the murder.

P. C. Craig told the story of the fruitless chase. He was at West Market and Front street when he heard shots fired. Running to the scene, he started in pursuit of the fleeing assassin, but a man shouted to him to come back. Still he ran on, but again the man shouted, telling him, as he thought, that the fugitive was returning. He came back, but found that he meant the man was dead. He thought it a suicide.

He told of finding a revolver and said that another revolver and a stiletto were handed him by the other men.

The strongest evidence against Griro was given by Max Guenberg, who, after identifying him by the photograph, stated that he had known him for some time, having met him in Hamilton. He told of his coming into his store for a knife. When he showed him the knife he declared he wanted a larger one, explaining that it was for a friend. He identified the knife found near the scene of the murder as the knife he sold to Griro on Friday night.

Twenty Thousand Strike.

London, Aug. 4.—As a result of Wednesday night's call for a general strike of all classes of London dock workers and affiliated trades, about 8,000 more walked out yesterday, bringing the total number of strikers to about 20,000. Leaders predict that 40,000 men will be out by to-night.

There is a possibility that a general international strike will be declared, and this would result in a tie-up of all shipping between America and European ports.

Provision dealers are greatly concerned over the situation. Supplies of meats and other perishable goods will be quickly exhausted. There already is a scarcity, and the strike is but two days' old.

A Day's Work.

"I call it a good day's work that I did to-day," a friend said to me yesterday, and of course I asked him what it was.

"Well," he replied, "I put down a linoleum, laid a hardwood floor, put down two carpets, papered four rooms and set up a stove."

I looked at him incredulously, when he hastened to add, "In a doll's house."

Patriotic Determination.

"Your wife insists on being allowed to vote."

"Yes," replied Mr. Meek, "she's not content with having the last word in a political argument. She wants to go to the polls and put in a postscript."

Really Sick.

"Husband, were you really visiting a friend last night?"

"I was."

"And was he really sick?"

"He was really sick, and it is no wonder. He never won a pot."

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—Predictions that the export surplus in Russia this season would be only 80,000,000 bushels against a recent average of more than 200,000,000 bushels took the wheat market aloft today. There were persistent assertions, too, that the presence of black rust in Canadian fields had been confirmed by laboratory tests.

Closing prices were firm at a net advance of 1½c to 1⅝c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ⅝d higher than yesterday on wheat and ½d higher on corn. Antwerp closed unchanged on wheat, Berlin ⅛c lower, and Buda Pest ¼c lower.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Aug. 3.—There was an improved demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat and oats at an advance in prices for August-September shipment, but at the close bids were 2d per quarter out of line for old wheat and 1c per bushel on the new. The enquiry from European sources for spring wheat flour was good. But owing to the sharp advance in wheat values, millers would not pay the price bid. The local demand is dull.

Oats—Canadian western, No. 3, 42½c to 43c car lots ex-store; extra No. 1 feed, 42c to 42½c; No. 2 C.W., 41½c to 42c; No. 2 local white, 41c; No. 3 local white, 40c; No. 4 local white, 38c.

Flour—Manitoba spring wheat patents, firsts, $5.30; seconds, $4.80; winter wheat patents, $4.50 to $4.75; strong bakers', $4.60; straight rollers, $4 to $4.10; in bags, $1.80 to $2.

Rolled oats, per barrel, $4.75; bag of 90 lbs., $2.25.

Corn—American No. 3 yellow, 62½c to 63c.

Millfeed—Bran, Ontario, $21 to $22; Manitoba, $20 to $21; middlings, Ontario, $24 to $25; shorts, Manitoba, $23; moullie, $35 to $37.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, Aug. 3.—The railways reported 74 carloads of live stock at the City Market, consisting of 670 cattle, 2408 hogs, 1099 sheep and lambs, 117 calves and 6 horses.

Butchers.

Geo. Rowntree, as usual, was the heaviest buyer of fat cattle, having bought 537 during Wednesday and Thursday for the Harris Abattoir Co., as follows: Choice, good and medium butchers steers and heifers at $5.30 to $5.90; cows, $3.75 to $4.80; bulls, $3 to $5.30. Besides Mr. Rowntree's buying there was a large number of light eastern steers and heifers sold from $3.50 to $4.75.

Stockers and Feeders.

There was little demand for stockers and feeders, altho many lots of the stocker classes were on sale, selling from $3.50 to $4.75 for light steers weighing from 500 to 850 lbs.

Milkers and Springers.

Veal Calves.

The bulk of the veal calves sold at lower prices than for many months. Prices ranged from $4 to $7.25 per cwt., or an average of about $6 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Lamb prices suffered another decline, the bulk selling between $6 and $7 per cwt., with a few selected lots reaching $7.25; sheep, light ewes, $5.75 to $6.25; heavy ewes, $3 to $5.50; rams, $3 to $3.25.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered were quoted at $7.65 and $7.85, f.o.b. cars at country points.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Aug. 3.—Cattle—Receipts 100. Market slow and steady. Prime steers, $7 to $7.25; butcher grades, $3.25 to $6.75.

Calves—Receipts 50. Market, active and firm. Cull to choice, $5 to $8.50.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts 800. Market choice, active and firm; others slow. Choice lambs, $6.40 to $6.60; cull to fair, $4.50 to $6; yearlings, $4.50 to $5; sheep, $2 to $4.25.

Hogs—Receipts 2400. Market slow, 10c to 15c lower. Yorkers, $7.85 to $7.90; stags, $7.35; pigs, $7.80 to $7.85; mixed, $7.70 to $7.75; heavy, $6.60 to $6.60; roughs, $5 to $5.50.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—Cattle—Receipts estimated at 4000; market steady to shade higher; beaves, $5 to $7.85; Texas steers, $4.40 to $6.10; western steers, $4 to $6.10; stockers and feeders, $3 to $5.25; cows and heifers, $2.10 to $5.15; calves, $5.50 to $7.75.

Hogs—Receipts estimated at 16,000; market strong at yesterday's average; light, $6.85 to $7.50; mixed, $6.75 to $7.50; heavy, $6.45 to $7.35; rough, $6.45 to $6.75; good to choice heavy, $6.75 to $7.35; pigs, $5.00 to $6.30; bulk of sales, $6.90 to $7.30.

Sheep—Receipts estimated at 12,000; markets steady to 10 cents higher; native, $2.25 to $4; western, $2.60 to $4; yearlings, $3.75 to $4.90; lambs, native, $3.75 to $6.75; western, $4.25 to $6.90.

Cheese Markets.

BROCKVILLE, Aug. 3.—Two thousand and seven hundred and twenty boxes colored, and 785 boxes white were offered on the cheese board to-day. Cook started the bidding at 12¼c, but found no sellers; 12 5-16 was also refused, as was 12⅜ for Wilson's cool cured.

On the street the ruling price was 12¼c, and about six thousand boxes were turned over.

VANKLEEK HILL, Aug. 3.—There were 1363 boxes white and 181 boxes colored cheese boarded here to-day. The price paid was 12¼c to 12 5-16c. Most of the factories sold at those figures. The balance refused to sell on the board.

It is reported that all sold on the curb at same prices. Seven buyers were present.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CANADA BREAD COMPANY

Plans Were Formulated at Meeting Held To-day---Five Companies Are Included in the Proposed New Organization---Will Have $1,000,000 in Cash on Hand to Commence Operations With.

TORONTO, AUG. 4.—Mr. Cawthra Mulock, at the close of a meeting held here to-day of the principal interests, announced that all arrangements had been concluded for the organization of the Canada Bread Company, Limited, the new all-Canadian company, which will, at the outset, have large bread manufacturing plants in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, and will forthwith proceed with the erection of plants in the other large cities in Canada.

Mr. Mulock stated that included in the new company were five of the largest bread manufacturing companies of Canada, and that the services of all the most successful bread manufacturers were being assured to the new company. Among the companies taken over were the Bredine Bread Co., of Toronto, Stuarts, Limited, Montreal, George Weston, Limited, Toronto, known as the Model Bakery; W. J. Boyd, Winnipeg, T. C. Tomlin, of Toronto, known as the Toronto Bakery Co. It was the intention of the Company, by extending the present plants and erecting new large plants in Montreal and Winnipeg, to increase the output of the Company's plants, as quickly as possible, to 1,000,000 loaves of bread per week, giving an annual output of approximately 50,000,000 loaves. Mr. Mark Bredine, head of the Bredine Bread Co., and regarded as perhaps the most successful bread manufacturer that Canada has yet had, will be general manager of the new company. The company is being placed on a strong financial position by having, at the outset, $1,000,000 cash in the treasury to provide for the erection of the proposed new plants and extensions, and supply ample working capital. The board of directors of the new company is as follows:

Cawthra Mulock, Toronto, President, Director of the Imperial Bank of Canada; Director Confederation Life Association; Mark Bredine, Toronto, General Manager, President Bredine Bread Co., Ltd.; Geo. Weston, Toronto, President Geo. Weston Ltd., Model Bakery; H. C. Tomlin, Toronto, Toronto Bakery Co.; W. J. Boyd, Winnipeg, Boyd's Bakery; A.f. Johnston, Toronto, of W. R. Johnston & Co., wholesale clothing; A. Laschinger, Toronto, Secretary formerly assistant Deputy Postmaster of Canada.

When seen by your correspondent to-day Mr. Mark Bredine, the General Manager, pointed out that the new Bread Company, with its modern, up-to-date plants, would be in a position to turn out a more uniform and tematising of the distribution will insure to the company the saving of enormous sums that are now being wasted, owing to the customers of the different bakeries being very largely spread over all sections of a city. better grade of bread, while the sys-

EXTENSIVE PREPARATIONS BEING MADE FOR THE STONEY LAKE REGATTA

Many New Visitors Arriving at the Lakes---Mayor Morrow Who is Holidaying at His Summer Home Contracts Blood Poisoning---Condition Not Thought to be Serious

STONEY LAKE, AUG. 2.—The people of Peterborough will regret to learn that His Worship Mayor Morrow, who has been holidaying at "Oakdene," his summer home, here, is ill from blood poisoning. A few days ago, while cranking his motor car, Mr. Morrow slightly injured his hand, but thought little of the accident until on Friday last the hand gave signs of being affected. During the last day or two he has shown no improvement, and to-night a telephone message was sent to Dr. McPherson, at Peterborough, to come as soon as possible.

STONEY LAKE, AUG. 2.—During the past few days the fishing at Stoney Lake, which, on the whole, has been somewhat at below the average, has begun to pick up, and some good catches are reported from different parts of the lake. Mr. Ben. Shortly, of Peterborough, was among the most lucky anglers, his catch of a maskinonge weighing seventeen and one-half pounds, being one of the best of the season.

On Tuesday the "Empress" and "Stoney Lake" of the Stoney Lake Navigation Company's fleet, were away on excursions and the "Islinda" had to attend to all the passenger traffic, with the assistance of Mr. Brooks' trim steam launch, the "Molly," which was chartered for the day.

Great interest is being taken in the approaching regattas, that of the East End Association taking place at Crowe's Landing on Wednesday, August 9th, while the other regatta will be held at Juniper Island on Monday, Aug. 14th. As this is Peterborough's Civic Holiday, it is expected that there will be a large number of Peterborough people on hand for the big event.

Rev. Mr. Gibson is spending a holiday at Isle Marie, his summer home.

Rev. Mr. Peer of Havelock, who is holidaying at the Lake, caught a ten-pound maskinonge on Tuesday.

Mr. Fred Allison of H. LeBrun & Co., is holidaying at Mount Julian.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

The advent of the holidays has had no very appreciable effect on the attendance at the library. The reading rooms are not perhaps quite as well patronized, the people preferring to enjoy the balmy outer air to taking their ease inside the building, but the output of books still keeps up, as may be seen by the statement that up to Thursday, Aug. 3, no less than 23,537 books had been issued to the public. No less than 90 per cent of this amount may be credited to the penchant for fiction, for the sum total of the output in this department reaches 18,884.

That the library is meeting the needs of the people of Peterborough is also shown by the fact that the membership now amounts to 1,978. About 500 of this number are juveniles.

The classification and cataloguing of the library, which has been in active progress under the guidance of a Government employee for the past three weks, is going along satisfactorily, and it is hoped that by the late autumn the branches devoted to the fine arts, useful arts, and the reference department will be in such a position as to be of real benefit to the public. At the present time the history section is being catalogued, and in possibly a week's time, will be finished.

The catalogue will be a desk catalogue, to which ready reference can be had at the librarian's desk. When it is fully recognized that by this catalogue any work can be found in three separate ways, by the name of the author, by the title of the book, or by the subject on which it deals, patrons of the library will, we are sure, not be slow to make use of it.

A matter to which the Librarian would like to draw the attention of the public, and particularly that portion of it interested in reading circles and debates, is that he will be most pleased to make bibliographies on any subject that is to be dealt with by such societies, if sufficient notice is given in advance. It takes time to find out authorities dealing with any particular question, and too much stress cannot be laid upon the necessity of ample notice being given.

CHARGED WITH BIGAMY

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, AUG. 4.—Ethel Baker and Fred J. Arnott, a plumber, both of Ogdensburg, appeared here to-day on a charge of bigamy, but will be tried at Brockville, where the offence was committed. Arnott is alleged to have a wife and two children in Ogdensburg.

ROYAL TREATMENT WAS ACCORDED LOCAL BOY SCOUT DURING VISIT TO ENGLAND

Master Reginald Stratton Returns From Coronation After Six Weeks' Absence — Had Trip Through British Isles.

A SPLENDID TIME

Master J. Reginald Stratton, son of Mr. A. H. Stratton, Postmaster of this city, and one of the scouts who attended the Coronation, arrived home Wednesday evening, and he is loud in his praises of the good time he had along with the other members of the Canadian contingent of juvenile militiamen. A synopsis of his description of the time they had follows:

"We arrived in London on the 18th of June, after a foggy though pleasant trip across the Atlantic. There were 140 scouts in the party, and on our arrival we were quartered on Captain Grenfell's grounds at Rochampton, a pretty suburb of London. Captain Grenfell is a near relation of the famous Arctic explorer, and he took a deep interest in the daily drills and other manoeuvres of the party enjoying his hospitality. While here we made trips to Portsmouth, the great naval station, Brighton, the famous watering place, and Hastings, near which occurred one of the most memorable battles of history. I suppose it is no use going into details regarding the part we played at the Coronation; the papers gave that feature full attention some time ago. The main body of the scouts left for home on July 13; I stayed at the request of the Scoutmaster with the Quebec patrol, in company with one other Ontario scout and the seven from Quebec province. We had a very eventful time from the twelfth to the twenty-sixth, visiting in that time the Isle of Man, Wales, Scotland and Ireland. We visited Edinburgh Castle, Glasgow and other points of historic interest, not overlooking the Trossachs, perhaps the most picturesque country in the whole Empire. A cycle tour in Wales from Llandudno to Conway Castle was a healthful novelty which was much appreciated by the boys. While in Liverpool, we visited the famous Olympia Theatre, and through the kindness of the management were given two boxes. At this time the patrol was billeted in Birkenhead, on the Mersey and on our trips we carried just what we needed. We set sail for home from the Port of Avonsmouth and on the way over were the guard of honour at a mock Coronation, at which a Toronto young lady, whose name I do not remember, was unanimously chosen as "Queen of the Olympian Sports."

Master Reginald was enthusiastic over the treatment he received and his only regret is that the eventful trip is now a thing of the past.

NO MANOEUVRES ON GREAT LAKES

DULUTH, MINN., AUG. 3.—Because of the contention of Canada that the treaty is violated by militia manoeuvres on the great lakes, no manoeuvres would be held this year, it was said to-day. The Gopher, the ship of the Minnesota naval militia, will leave Duluth on Saturday for the annual cruise, going to Chicago to attend the opening of the new naval training station, but no contests will be held among the vessels in the naval fleet. Informal contests and drills may be arranged, however, with the crew from the Yantic, the Michigan ship, but the other boats in the fleet will hold no races, target contests or other competitions.—Globe.

WELL KNOWN DIVINE'S STARTLING STATEMENT

At Conclusion of Prayer Meeting Presiding Pastor Was Married to the Young Lady at the Organ---Congregation Was Astonished.

DENVER, COL., AUG. 4. — "The time for a young man to take a bride is now," said Rev. D. Kendricks Roberts, pastor of the Welsh Presbyterian church here at a prayer meeting last night, "and to show you I practice what I preach I shall do so." Then the preacher stepped down and met Miss Emma Evans, who arose from her place at the organ. Another clergyman, the only other person in the secret, married them then and there to the congregation's astonishment.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., AUG. 4.—Fifty persons are dead in Nicaragua as a result of the recent floods on the Gulf Coast and interior. According to tales from Bluefields, the town of Rama is completely submerged and the gunboat Amatepe sunk in Rama river.

Will Not Create New Peers

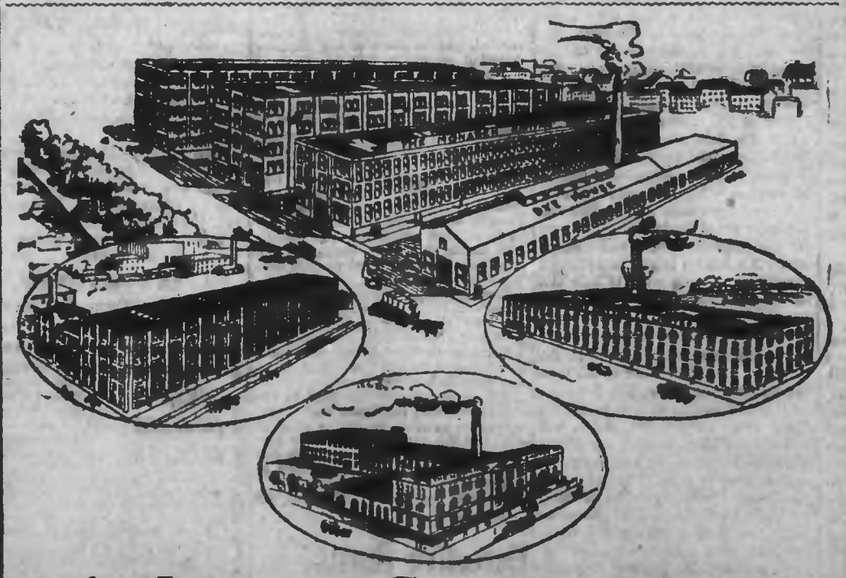
Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., AUG. 4.—According to the government organs, the cabinet has decided to send the veto bil to the House of Lords without creating new peers, trusting that the Liberal peers will be able to outvote Lord Halsbury's followers, who are against the measure.

Steamer Aground

Special to The Examiner:

VINEYARD, HAVEN, MASS., AUG. 4.—As the St. Bunkerhill, from New York to Boston, with 275 passengers, was going through Vineyard Sound today, she ran upon a rock off Nobska Point. The passengers were awakened, but returned to their berths, and though badly leaking, the ship reached Vineyard Haven harbour, where the passengers were transferred to another vessel.



An Important Canadian Industry

No country in the world can boast of the growth from the starting point to huge proportions in such a few years as can the Canadian factories in almost every line. The organization and development of knitted woollenwear is an outstanding example of this.

For generations it was conceded that the German manufacturer had the market in knitted coats and woollen overwear all to himself, because of the excellence of his product. To-day he has not only been routed from the Canadian market but Canadian-made goods in this line are acknowledged to be the superior of that made by any continental or American factory.

The most potent factor in this change is the Monarch Knitting Co., organized by Messrs. F. R. Lalor, M. P., as President, G. H. Ormc as Vice-President and J. A. Burns as Managing Director, with headquarters at Dunnville, Ont. Starting nine years ago in very modest premises this concern has steadily grown, and to-day controls large factories at Dunnville, St. Catharines and St. Thomas in Ontario and at Buffalo, N.Y. It's products not only have the vogue and snap that is so essential but are knitted in a substantial manner by the most modern machinery and under the most improved sanitary conditions.

The factory at Dunnville, which consists of four immense buildings, are not excelled for factory purposes anywhere in the world. Just imagine a factory overlooking a flowing river with open country stretching away in the distance. Inside the building area far in excess of the legal requirements for the number employed, with windows large and so arranged as to give perfect light with abundant ventilation without draught or exposure, with walls ceilings and floorings kept scrupulously clean, and with sanitary arrangements throughout an object lesson to builders. Such are the conditions under which the employees of this company work at the Dunnville Factory, and they are repeated as nearly as possible in each of the branch factories. No wonder that the employees take a personal pride in their surroundings and joy in their work and as you look at the finished garment it seems as if they wove the health and comfort of their environment into the very warp and woof of Monarch Knit goods.

Such factories as these with their example and influence make the efforts of governments to improve the surroundings of employees much easier, as example and emulation are a greater influence than formal legal enactments. The combination of all these simply show that the men behind it all are men of fixed purpose, broad vision and great business ability.

FOUND NO DIFFICULTY WITH NORMAL ENTRANCE

Fifteen High School Students Wrote Here and All Were Successful---Another Phenomenal Record Set Up.

Still further evidence of the good work done, alike by pupils and masters at the Collegiate Institute here, is furnished by to-day's announcement of the results of the Normal Entrance Examinations. Every candidate of the fifteen who wrote, was successful, with four taking honours. The pupils are to be congratulated on their brilliant showing, and much credit is due Principal Kenner and his able staff whose painstaking efforts are doubtless responsible for this unusually excellent record. The following pupils were successful and are now eligible to attend Normal School:

A. Adams, (honours).
M. Brown.
E. B. Cuffe, (honours.)
M. C. Edwards.
S. A. Elliot.
E. Grady, (honours.)
M. Halpin, (honours.)
B. Malone.
A. Morrow, (honours.)
E. Pearson.
W. Phillips.
K. E. Skinner.
W. Skuce.
M. Squair.
M. O. J. Whitfield.

The pass standing requires 40 per cent. for each subject and 60 per cent. on the total, while for honours an aggregate of 75 per cent. is necessary.

END OF MOROCCAN TROUBLE IN SIGHT

BERLIN, AUG. 4.—The end of the Morrocan trouble is in sight. The French Ambassador at Berlin and the German Foreign Secretary to-day agreed on a common ground of settlement on general lines, but details are to be worked out yet.

FREIGHT CARS IN SMASH-UP

Special to The Examiner:

FORT ERIE, AUG. 4.—The Grand Trunk race train from Toronto, after losing its engine, which took a joy ride, had a more exciting experience just east of Hamilton this morning, when two cars of a slow freight were wrecked and the race train engine derailed, the two cars containing lard from Armour's caught fire and a mighty blaze resulted. No one was seriously hurt, but many passengers were shaken up.

LAYING CONDUITS

The Bell Telephone Company have commenced excavating on Aylmer St., for the purpose of burying their wires, or in other words laying conduits. It is believed that the company will keep its word with the city and restore the streets to their former condition. A shining example of what can be accomplished in this respect is furnished on Hunter street, between Aylmer and George. A short time ago this street was torn up for the purpose of burying wires. Two days after the excavations had been filled in the effect on the street was hardly noticeable.

OBITUARY

DANIEL LOUCKS.

Mr. Daniel Loucks, a highly respected resident of this city passed away this morning after an extended illness of over a year. Deceased, who had always borne the infirmities of his advanced age with true Christian fortitude, was of a bright and amiable disposition. He was born in Aultville in the year 1831. Two years ago he removed to this city, where he has resided since.

The late Mr. Loucks, who was in his 80th year, leaves two daughters and one son to mourn his loss. The daughters are Mrs. S. J. Murphy and Mrs. Gerald Johnston, both of this city. The son is Mr. Nathan Loucks of Windsor.

His wife predeceased him a year ago. Funeral will take place to-morrow at 10 o'clock from the family residence, 203 Charlotte street. Interment at Little Lake cemetery.

MRS. JOHN HUSTON.

At the very ripe age of 90 years, Mrs. John Huston of 42 Victoria avenue, passed away this morning.

The deceased, who was the daughter of the late Mr. James Wilson, was born in Springville, and on her marriage, at the age of eighteen years, came to live in North Monaghan. Here she resided for upwards of fifty years. Many stories has she told her children of earlier days, when bears and wolves invaded that vicinity. She has been a resident of Peterborough eighteen years. Mrs. Huston, who was by creed a Presbyterian, is survived by three sons, Robert of Midland, William of Michigan, and John of Cavan, and one daughter, Mrs. W. H. Meharry, of this city.

The funeral notice will be given later.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CANADA BREAD COMPANY

Plans Were Formulated at Meeting Held To-day---Five Companies Are Included in the Proposed New Organization---Will Have $1,000,000 in Cash on Hand to Commence Operations With.

TORONTO, AUG. 4.—Mr. Cawthra Mulock, at the close of a meeting held here to-day of the principal interests, announced that all arrangements had been concluded for the organization of the Canada Bread Company, Limited, the new all-Canadian company, which will, at the outset, have large bread manufacturing plants in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, and will forthwith proceed with the erection of plants in the other large cities in Canada.

Mr. Mulock stated that included in the new company were five of the largest bread manufacturing companies of Canada, and that the services of all the most successful bread manufacturers were being assured to the new company. Among the companies taken over were the Bredine Bread Co., of Toronto, Stuarts, Limited, Montreal, George Weston, Limited, Toronto, known as the Model Bakery; W. J. Boyd, Winnipeg, T. C. Tomlin, of Toronto, known as the Toronto Bakery Co. It was the intention of the Company, by extending the present plants and erecting new large plants in Montreal and Winnipeg, to increase the output of the Company's plants, as quickly as possible, to 1,000,000 loaves of bread per week, giving an annual output of approximately 50,000,000 loaves. Mr. Mark Bredine, head of the Bredine Bread Co., and regarded as perhaps the most successful bread manufacturer that Canada has yet had, will be general manager of the new company. The company is being placed in a strong financial position by having, at the outset, $1,000,000 cash in the treasury to provide for the erection of the proposed new plants and extensions, and supply ample working capital. The board of directors of the new company is as follows:

Cawthra Mulock, Toronto, President, Director of the Imperial Bank of Canada; Director Confederation Life Association; Mark Bredine, Toronto, General Manager, President Bredine Bread Co., Ltd.; Geo. Weston, Toronto, President Geo. Weston Ltd., Model Bakery; H. C. Tomlin, Toronto, Toronto Bakery Co.; W. J. Boyd, Winnipeg, Boyd's Bakery; Alf. Johnston, Toronto, of W. R. Johnston & Co., wholesale clothing; A. Laschinger, Toronto, Secretary, formerly assistant Deputy Postmaster of Canada.

When seen by your correspondent to-day Mr. Mark Bredine, the General Manager, pointed out that the new Bread Company, with its modern, up-to-date plants, would be in a position to turn out a more uniform and tempting of the distribution will insure to the company the saving of enormous sums that are now being wasted, owing to the customers of the different bakeries being very largely spread over all sections of a city. better grade of bread, while the aya-

EXTENSIVE PREPARATIONS BEING MADE FOR THE STONEY LAKE REGATTA

Many New Visitors Arriving at the Lakes---Mayor Morrow Who is Holidaying at His Summer Home Contracts Blood Poisoning---Condition Not Thought to be Serious

STONEY LAKE, AUG. 2.—The people of Peterborough will regret to learn that His Worship Mayor Morrow, who has been holidaying at "Oakdene," his summer home, here, is ill from blood poisoning. A few days ago, while cranking his motor car, Mr. Morrow slightly injured his hand, but thought little of the accident until on Friday last the hand gave signs of being affected. During the last day or two he has shown no improvement, and to-night a telephone message was sent to Dr. McPherson, at Peterborough, to come as soon as possible.

STONEY LAKE, AUG. 2.—During the past few days the fishing at Stoney Lake, which, on the whole, has been somewhat at below the average, has begun to pick up, and some good catches are reported from different parts of the lake. Mr. Ben. Shortly, of Peterborough, was among the most lucky anglers, his catch of a maskinonge weighing seventeen and one-half pounds, being one of the best of the season.

On Tuesday the "Empress" and "Stoney Lake" of the Stoney Lake Navigation Company's fleet, were away on excursions and the "Iakinda" had to attend to all the passenger traffic, with the assistance of Mr. Brooks' trim steam launch, the "Molly," which was chartered for the day.

Great interest is being taken in the approaching regattas, that of the East End Association taking place at Crowe's Landing on Wednesday, August 9th, while the other regatta will be held at Juniper Island on Monday, Aug. 14th. As this is Peterborough's Civic Holiday, it is expected that there will be a large number of Peterborough people on hand for the big event.

Rev. Mr. Gibson is spending a holiday at Isle Marie, his summer home.

Rev. Mr. Peer of Havelock, who is holidaying at the Lake, caught a ten-pound maskinonge on Tuesday.

Mr. Fred Allison of H. LeBrun & Co., is holidaying at Mount Julian.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

The advent of the holidays has had no very appreciable effect on the attendance at the library. The reading rooms are not perhaps quite as well patronized, the people preferring to enjoy the balmy outer air to taking their ease inside the building, but the output of books still keeps up, as may be seen by the statement that up to Thursday, Aug. 3, no less than 23,537 books had been issued to the public. No less than 80 per cent of this amount may be credited to the penchant for fiction, for the sum total of the output in this department reaches 18,884.

That the library is meeting the needs of the people of Peterborough is also shown by the fact that the membership now amounts to 1,978 About 500 of this number are juveniles.

The classification and cataloguing of the library, which has been in active progress under the guidance of a Government employee for the past three weks, is going along satisfactorily, and it is hoped that by the late autumn the branches devoted to the fine arts, useful arts, and the reference department will be in such a position as to be of real benefit to the public. At the present time the history section is being catalogued, and in possibly a week's time, will be finished.

The catalogue will be a desk catalogue, to which ready reference can be had at the librarian's desk. When it is fully recognized that by this catalogue any work can be found in three separate ways, by the name of the author, by the title of the book, or by the subject on which it deals, patrons of the library will, we are sure, not be slow to make use of it.

A matter to which the Librarian would like to draw the attention of the public, and particularly that portion of it interested in reading circles and debates, is that he will be most pleased to make bibliographies on any subject that is to be dealt with by such societies, if sufficient notice is given in advance. It takes time to find out authorities dealing with any particular question, and too much stress cannot be laid upon the necessity of ample notice being given.

CHARGED WITH BIGAMY

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, AUG. 4.—Ethel Baker and Fred J. Arnott, a plumber, both of Ogdensburg, appeared here to-day on a charge of bigamy, but will be tried at Brockville, where the offence was committed. Arnott is alleged to have a wife and two children in Ogdensburg.

ROYAL TREATMENT WAS ACCORDED LOCAL BOY SCOUT DURING VISIT TO ENGLAND

Master Reginald Stratton Returns From Coronation After Six Weeks' Absence — Had Trip Through British Isles.

A SPLENDID TIME

Master J. Reginald Stratton, son of Mr. A. H. Stratton, Postmaster of this city, and one of the scouts who attended the Coronation, arrived home Wednesday evening, and he is loud in his praises of the good time he had along with the other members of the Canadian contingent of juvenile militiamen. A synopsis of his description of the time they had follows:

"We arrived in London on the 18th of June, after a foggy though pleasant trip across the Atlantic. There were 140 scouts in the party, and on our arrival we were quartered on Captain Grenfell's grounds at Rochampton, a pretty suburb of London. Captain Grenfell is a near relation of the famous Arctic explorer, and he took a deep interest in the daily drills and other manoeuvres of the party enjoying his hospitality. While here we made trips to Portsmouth, the great naval station, Brighton, the famous watering place, and Hastings, near which occurred one of the most memorable battles of history. I suppose it is no use going into details regarding the part we played at the Coronation; the papers gave that feature full attention some time ago. The main body of the scouts left for home on July 12; I stayed at the request of the Scoutmaster with the Quebec patrol, in company with one other Ontario scout and the seven from Quebec province. We had a very eventful time from the twelfth to the twenty-sixth, visiting in that time the Isle of Man, Wales, Scotland and Ireland. We visited Edinburgh Castle, Glasgow and other points of historic interest, not overlooking the Trossachs, perhaps the most picturesque country in the whole Empire. A cycle tour in Wales from Llandudno to Conway Castle was a healthful novelty which was much appreciated by the boys. While in Liverpool, we visited the famous Olympia Theatre, and through the kindness of the management were given two boxes. At this time the patrol was billeted in Birkenhead, on the Mersey and on our trips we carried just what we needed. We set sail for home from the Port of Avonsmouth and on the way over were the guard of honour at a mock Coronation, at which a Toronto young lady, whose name I do not remember, was unanimously chosen as "Queen of the Olympian Sports."

Master Reginald was enthusiastic over the treatment he received and his only regret is that the eventful trip is now a thing of the past.

NO MANOEUVRES ON GREAT LAKES

DULUTH, MINN., AUG. 3.—Because of the contention of Canada that the treaty is violated by militia manoeuvres on the great lakes, no manoeuvres would be held this year, it was said to-day. The Gopher, the ship of the Minnesota naval militia, will leave Duluth on Saturday for the annual cruise, going to Chicago to attend the opening of the new naval training station, but no contests will be held among the vessels in the naval fleet. Informal contests and drills may be arranged, however, with the crew from the Yantic, the Michigan ship, but the other boats in the fleet will hold no races, target contests or other competitions.—Globe.

An Important Canadian Industry

No country in the world can boast of the growth from the starting point to huge proportions in such a few years as can the Canadian factories in almost every line. The organization and development of knitted woollenwear is an outstanding example of this.

For generations it was conceded that the German manufacturer had the market in knitted coats and woollen overwear all to himself, because of the excellence of his product. To-day he has not only been rooted from the Canadian market but Canadian-made goods in this line are acknowledged to be the superior of that made by any continental or American factory.

The most potent factor in this change is the Monarch Knitting Co., organized by Messrs. F. R. Lalor, M. P., as President, G. H. Orme as Vice-President and J. A. Burns as Managing Director, with headquarters at Dunnville, Ont. Starting nine years ago in very modest premises this concern has steadily grown, and to-day controls large factories at Dunnville, St. Catharines and St. Thomas in Ontario and at Buffalo, N.Y. It's products, not only have the vogue and snap that is so essential but are knitted in a substantial manner by the most modern machinery and under the most improved sanitary conditions.

The factory at Dunnville, which consists of four immense buildings, are not excelled for factory purposes anywhere in the world. Just imagine a factory overlooking a flowing river with open country stretching away in the distance .Inside the building area far in excess of the legal requirements for the number employed, with windows large and so arranged as to give perfect light, with abundant ventilation without draught or exposure, with walls ceilings and floorings kept scrupulously clean, and with sanitary arrangements throughout an object lesson to builders. Such are the conditions under which the employees of this company work at the Dunnville Factory, and they are repeated as nearly as possible in each of the branch factories. No wonder that the employees take a personal pride in their surroundings and joy in their work and as you look at the finished garment it seems as if they wove the health and comfort of their environment into the very warp and woof of Monarch Knit goods.

Such factories as these with their example and influence make the efforts of governments to improve the surroundings of employees much easier, as example and emulation are a greater influence than formal legal enactments. The combination of all these simply shows that the men behind it all are men of fixed purpose, broad vision and great business ability.

FOUND NO DIFFICULTY WITH NORMAL ENTRANCE

Fifteen High School Students Wrote Here and All Were Successful---Another Phenomenal Record Set Up.

Still further evidence of the good work done, alike by pupils and masters at the Collegiate Institute here, is furnished by to-day's announcement of the results of the Normal Entrance Examinations. Every candidate of the fifteen who wrote, was successful, with four taking honours. The pupils are to be congratulated on their brilliant showing, and much credit is due Principal Kenner and his able staff whose painstaking efforts are doubtless responsible for this unusually excellent record. The following pupils were successful and are now eligible to attend Normal School:

A. Adams, (honours).
M. Brown.
E. B. Cuffe, (honours.)
M. C. Edwards.
S. A. Elliot.
E. Grady, (honours.)
M. Halpin, (honours.)
B. Malone.
A. Morrow, (honours.)
E. Pearson.
W. Phillips.
K. E. Skinner.
W. Skuce.
M. Squair.
M. O. J. Whitfield.

The pass standing requires 40 per cent. for each subject and 60 per cent. on the total, while for honours an aggregate of 75 per cent. is necessary.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 4, 1911

TO-MORROW'S MASS MEETING.

Liberals are reminded of the mass meeting to be held in the Grand Opera House to-morrow, Saturday, afternoon, at 2 o'clock to elect officers of the West Riding Liberal Association, to select a candidate to contest West Peterborough in the present election and represent it in the next parliament. It is hoped that those who attend will be prompt in their attendance, so as to give time for the addresses that will be given at the conclusion of the business of the meeting.

HOW CHANGE THESE FIGURES?

	Cons.	Libs.
Ontario	51	35
Quebec	12	53
New Brunswick	2	11
Nova Scotia	6	12
Prince Edward Island	1	3
Manitoba	8	2
Saskatchewan	1	9
Alberta	3	4
British Columbia	5	2
Yukon Territory	0	1
Totals	89	132

The Opposition will admit that it can gain nothing in the West. It will probably lose there. Where are the 30 seats it must gain to give it a working majority of seven?

WHY NOT SELL AS WELL AS BUY.

It may surprise some Canadians to hear that there has been an enormous increase in Canadian sales to the United States, in spite of laws expressly framed to keep Canadian products out of the American market. The figures for the various classes of exports from Canada to the United States in the past fifteen years are:

Agric'al produce	$3,232,793	$8,204,25
Animals and their produce	3,341,275	10,629,614
Fisheries	3,301,671	4,627,051
Forest products	13,528,047	31,835,326
Manufactures	3,531,239	15,350,280
Mineral products	7,437,814	33,488,464
Miscellaneous	87,587	64,690
Totals	$34,460,428	$104,199,675

Those who say that there will be no increase of exports when the American market is free to a wide range of Canadian products, and the American scale of duties reduced on many other commodities produced in this country, will have to answer to their consciences.

It is true that in the same period Canadian imports from the United States increased from $53,230,390 to $217,502,415. Over $131,000,000 of this last year represented manufactures. Raw materials accounted for many millions more. On the whole, Canadians purchased from the United States over $113,000,000 more than they sold in that country. There would have been less discrepancy if the Canadian tariff had been as high as the American tariff, but we should have punished ourselves by copying our neighbours' fiscal system—which is now tottering—and no party leader to-day advocates copying it. The difference between the parties is this: The Government advocates an equality of tariffs in farm products, under which Canadians will sell more in the United States, and, therefore, a tendency to equality of trade between the two countries; while the Opposition insists on present conditions, under which the Americans will continue to sell us far more than they buy from us.—London Advertiser.

OPPONENTS CONFESS DEFEAT.

The present election contest, thrust upon the country two years before the country two years before the time a general election is due, by the policy of obstruction, is merely another form of obstruction. The opponents o fthe Government do not expect to defeat the Government, which stands to be retained in power as strong, if not stronger, than ever.

It is known that the chief opposition to placing Canadian fruit on the free list, for admission to the United States, comes from the canning combine. They contend that the free admission of Canadian fruit to the United States will increase the price and that the canneries will have to pay more for their local supplies. That the canners have this fear, and that they also feel that the Government will win on the reciprocity issue, is shown by the following circular, sent out by the canning combine of Western Ontario, to the wholesale merchants of the Dominion. In this circular, which is signed, among others, by two men, who were Conservative members in the House of Commons before it was dissolved, it is pointed out that as

"the reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States will very probably be approved by the electorate on September 21 next at the general elections, it is of the greatest importance that wholesale merchants should now secure full supplies of canned beans and peas because at the session which will follow the elections, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, returned to power, will not fail to have the agreement ratified by Parliament, and this will mean an increase in the price of beans and peas of fifty cents a bushel."

This circular shows two things. It shows that the most interested opponents of reciprocity—those who wish to keep the price of fruit down—feel that the Conservative cause is again doomed to defeat, and that the admission of Canadian fruit free to the United States market will enhance the price to the Canadian fruit grower, by giving him free access to a large market, where higher prices are obtainable.

The canners, by their stand, simply mean that reciprocity will prevent them exacting high profits at the expense of the Canadian consumer. They will have to be contented with reasonable profits. One benefit to the consumer by reciprocity is that it will equalize prices. The present high price of the commodities of life in Canada is not due to any large prices paid the farmer and producer for their products, but to the profits of the middlemen, through whose hands they pass to reach the consumer, and a little wholesome competition will tend to regulate matters in the consumers' interests.

CANADA'S FOREMOST STATESMAN.

It is a source of pride to all Canadians that no British statesman of the present day stands out before the Empire, or before the world with greater distinction than Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He is in the forefront of the distinguished statesmen of his time. It is in the broadest and most complete sense that he has made Canada a nation, for his distinguished personality and statesmanlike guidance have fixed the attention of the financial world on the Dominion and have inspired the confidence that sustains our phenomenal development. The millions of British capital now freely invested in the Dominion attest more clearly than any other feature of our progress Canada's complete recognition in the financial world. Our vast resources are being developed and must be developed on borrowed capital. Without the confidence that freely lends, our prosperity and expansion would be impossible, and if that confidence were shaken and our liberal borrowing interrupted our era of growth would immediately give place to depression. The borrowing that is sustaining our success has been made possible by a standing and distinction for which we are indebted to Sir Wilfrid Laurier more than to any other statesman of this age.

In sustaining an era of expansion by the confidence of British investors we are not creating a burden of debt for which there will be a heavy day of reckoning. Every acquisition of British capital has been the means of opening new areas and enlarging our capacity for production. Every addition to our obligations has more than produced the capacity for meeting them. The enterprises launched have been sustained by natural wealth, and the investors have a full assurance of returns. A fortunate endowment in natural resources and an enterprising and industrious people have secured their standing in the world of affairs by a Premier who commands attention, and a stable Ministry that inspires and establishes confidence.

Would the British investor continue his confidence if we were to waver in our allegiance? If Canada were to show a preference for a leader who cannot control his followers, a leader accepting Mr. Monk's extreme views and the opposite extremes in Ontario, the outside confidence essential to our prosperity could not be sustained. A leader who makes Hon George E. Foster inevitable as his Finance Minister, and seeks support by divergent appeals to different class interests can never inspire the confidence essential to that success which depends on free investments in our securities. Canada must show faith in herself and must show it emphatically at the polls if she would sustain the faith of the investing public. Stability is the first essential of confidence. In the world of nations our moral and material strength must be attested by our political strength. To that end we must emphatically endorse the Premier who has fixed the world's attention on both our material possessions and our capacity for extension.

HOW RECIPROCITY HELPS THE LUMBERING INDUSTRY

In the chorus of entreaty now going on up in the anti-reciprocity press against opening the Canadian market to the competition of the ninety millions of people south of the border it will be observed that there has been no mention of the lumber industry. As the gentleman from Michigan would say, there's a reason.

Canada's markets are already open to lumber, chiefly hardwood and yellow pine, from the United States. It ih imported duty free because the manufacturers and the house-building contractors of Canada need it in their business. For the Canadian lumberman reciprocity means no possible increase of competition from the south, and a very great increase of trade in reason of the entire removal of the United States duty on Canadian lumber.

There are quite a few lumbermen who have been objecting to "jug-handled" free trade. They have urged that the Government should direct its energies toward getting the United States to remove the duty on Canadian lumber in consideration of the fact that Canada for many years has permitted the importation duty free of lumber from the United States. Now that the United States has agreed to that very thing they should lend their influence to the reciprocity agreement.

For the lumbermen the adoption of reciprocity is all gain and no loss. The benefit of the removal of the United States duty on Canadian lumber will go in part to the consumer in the United States in the form of lower prices, and in part to the Canadian lumberman and his employees in the form of higher wages and profits.

How important to the Dominion the export of lumber and other forest products it can best be gathered from the fact that during the past five years the exports of forest products from Canada to the United States have been as follows:

1907 (nine months)	18,397,753
1908	27,470,754
1909	26,421,373
1910	31,835,326

This is a total of $127,210,246 in four years and nine months. Almost all of it had to face heavy duties. During the same period the United States sent $35,770,314 of lumber and forest products to Canada, all of it duty free. The principal items on which the United States duties are to be entirely wiped out are as follows:

Hewn timber, present duty, 1-2 cent per cubic foot.

Sawed boards, planks, deals and other lumber not farther advanced than sawed, of whitewood, soyamore and basswood, present duty, 50 cents per thousand feet.

Of other wood, including pine, present duty, $1.25 per thousand feet.

Paving posts, railroad ties, poles of cedar or other wood, pickets and palings, present duty, 10 per cent.

Wooden staves, partially manufactured, present duty, from 10 to 20 per cent.

The remission of duty by the United States on sawed lumber alone, on the basis of the trade of 1910, will be $1,219,970 per year. That is why the lumbermen are largely for Laurier and larger markets.

BORDEN AND BOURASSA.

This is the style of the new political firm, and note that Borden is the senior partner. The conditions of the partnership have not been all published, but if it should result in the defeat of the Laurier government, they would be speedily revealed. The junior partner is in a position to dictate his terms, and he is in no mood to take less than the utmost he is able to extort. He hates Sir Wilfrid Laurier with an intensity that suggests diabolism, and he is prepared to go any lengths to compass his political destruction. He was knocked out temporarily by the reciprocity agreement, which forced him to get up on the fence to consider the situation and determine his bearings; with the help of Mr. Borden, against whom he has no ill feelings, he now sees his way clear. What eye-opener the leader of the Opposition used, matters little, for the people will see that he is in no position to deliver the goods, but it is a matter of some interest to Mr. Mr. Borden's Protestant-Imperialist supporters to consider carefully the circumstantial evidence in the case.

In the first place, Mr. Bourassa has over and over again announced that he is cooperating loyally with Mr. Monk, who is the regularly recognized leader of the Conservative contingent from the Province of Quebec. Except on the navy question, Mr. Monk is absolutely with Mr. Borden, and therefore, except on the same question, Mr. Bourassa is also with Mr. Borden. Mr. Bourassa, when the reciprocity agreement was first announced, recognized it as a good thing for Quebec and proclaimed himself in favour of its ratification by Parliament. He does not now say it is a bad thing as Mr. Borden does, but he does say that it is a matter of trifling importance which need not and should not count for much. And so the way has been paved for him to accompany Mr Monk into the Conservative camp, where Mr. Borden is glad to have him even if he must, in order to hold him by his side, say the question of Imperial defence is also, for the present, a matter of no great consequence.

Note the division of labour in the new firm. Mr. Borden will do the talking against reciprocity; Mr. Bourassa will do the talking against the navy; the sleeping partner, Mr. Monk, will talk against both, because his talk is not taken seriously by any party, no matter what he says, or on what side he says it. Mr. Borden talks to Ontario against reciprocity; Mr. Bourassa talks to Quebec against the navy. Each is under bands to capture his own province for political exploitation by the firm jointly. Mr. Bourassa, in the event of a successful issue, would insist on being a member of Mr. Borden's ministry, and Mr. Borden would not be in a position to refuse him a portfolio.

By way of confirmation of the essential truth of the allegation that there is a modus vivindi between the Conservatives and the Nationalists, *there is the notable fact that Conserv*ative journals are not merely tolerant, but eulogistic, of Mr. Bourassa. Their change of attitude towards him began when he won the seat from the Liberals in Drummond and Arthabasca last year. His member elect of that time is his candidate again. Mr. Gilbert, who comes out openly in support of reciprocity. His doing so is vain, however, for M Bourassa has declared reciprocity a mere trifle.

Two of the organizations on which Mr. Borden depends for support are the Orange Order and the Sons of England. Both are intensely Protestant, while Mr. Bourassa is the facile representative of the French Catholics. If they like the position into which they have been dragged by Mr. Borden, then they must be left free to enjoy it. They have made their bed and now they must lie on it in the sight of all who care to look at them. With all of the rank and file to whom Protestant principle is dearer than political allegiance, the essentially corrupt alliance of Borden with Bourassa will be revolting, but it will surprise nobody if the stalwarts swallow it and pronounce it good. Anything to beat Laurier!

CARE OF THE INFANT

Overexertion Dangerous at Time of Extreme Heat—Light Eating Counselled as Wisest Course

The greatest danger in hot weather is to the infant. Very young children should be dressed as lightly as possible, with not more than one or two light garments. On the hottest days all the outer clothing should be dispensed with. They should be fed sparingly with milk containing a larger per centage of water than at other times. If the child's stomach gets out of order, nothing but water should be given, and if the trouble still continues it is better not to feed at all until the doctor is consulted and relief comes.

"Milk should be scrupulously taken care of, and in cases of the slightest doubt of its purity and sweetness it should be boiled. Utensils and receptacles which are used in handling milk should not be merely scalded, but should be boiled. All fruit given to children should be thoroughly cooked.

As in the case of adults, stimulants given sparingly to children result beneficially. Dr. Abraham Jacobi, who prescribed the rules for the care of infants for the New York City Health Bureau, advises the addition of a few drops of good whiskey to the infant's food during the hottest spells, the amount not to exceed a teaspoonful during twenty-four hours.

Evidently the eminent doctor had in mind our public statement of a year ago that thousands of infants could be saved in New York and elsewhere by adding during the hot weather a few drops of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to each feeding.

The infant should be kept in the coolest room in the house and should whenever possible be put to sleep at night in the open air. The room may be kept cool by an electric fan or by hanging up wet towels or blankets.

Detective Burns Denies Charges

NEW YORK, JULY 25.— Intimations by Gilbet Perkins, head of the Perkins Detective Agency, that agents of Wilfram J. Burns had rifled his offices of evidence tending to prove the innocence of John J. McNamara, of the Los Angeles dynamiting and other crimes of which he had been accused, were branded here to-day by Burns as absolutely false. Burns said:

"The statement that I or my men rifled or took from Perkins' office records of his investigations in dynamiting cases is a malicious and libelous fabrication. The story is false and a deliberate attempt to get public circulation of a malicious and libelous nature. It is being circulated in an attempt to create sentiment for John McNamara.

"Perkins has no more right to have such a story circulated for his benefit than I have to have a story published accusing the most prominent citizen of America of being a chicken thief. My men had absolutely nothing to do with the so-called rifling of the Perkins offices."

Perkins' story became public through despatches received here from Erie, Pa. These despatches quoted Perkins as saying that after his operatives had failed to obtain any evidence that McNamara could have known of the dynamiting at Columbus, of the Omaha courthouse explosion, or of the Los Angeles Times outrage, his offices wre looted during his absence in court and many private papers and all the McNamara records were stolen. Perkins alleged that Burns' detectives had followed his men and knew just where the records were.

Perkins Good Man.

Los Angeles, July 29.— While declaring that he had received no direct information concerning alleged intimation by Detective Gilbert Perkins that agents of Detective William J. Burns had rifled Perkins' office in Indianapolis of evidence in the McNamara case, Attorney Clarence Darrow admitted this afternoon that Perkins was in the employ of the defence.

"Perkins is a good detective," said Darrow, "but unlike some other sleuths is not disposed to give anything to newspapers. Perkins came to us soon after Burns made the announcement that he had evidence against John B. McNamara and declared that he could show absolutely just how the so-called evidence had been secured. We told Perkins to go ahead and since then he has been working under the personal direction of the Attorney Leo Rappaport. Whether Perkins secured the evidence he hoped to obtain I do not know."

PARALYZED LIMBS

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Honsburger, 10 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

DOUBT IS EXPRESSED

PARIS, FRANCE, AUG. 4.— With significant unanimity the French press favours the idea of submitting the Morroccan question to another European conference. At the same time some doubt is expressed as regards a peaceful settlement of the crisis..

BOWLING TOURNAMENT BEGINS ON MONDAY

Many Rinks Have Entered the Grand Tournament for the Stratton Cup

Secretary Renwick of the Bowling Club is a busy man these days. Entries are still pouring in for the grand tournament to be held on Monday and Tuesday next, and many rinks have so far entered that the event will be the biggest of its kind ever pulled off in Peterborough goes without saying. A cordial invitation to attend the tournament is given to all the bowling enthusiasts, the ladies especially being invited. The match for the Stratton Trophy will begin on Monday and will be open to all teams, while the second match will be a consolation competition, open to all rinks defeated in the first match, except the one winning the prize. The rinks will start off at 10 o'clock.

To-morrow's Game With Toronto Dufferins To Be The Best Yet

The attendances at the ball yard across the Otonabee are growing, and there's a reason. The disheartening scenes witnessed at the opening of the season, when the second division clubs of the Midland League looked bats with our trusty nine at things of the past and the ball of fare for the rest of the season gives the cushy to all clubs but those of known merit. The visitors are coming strong and a most favourable opportunity will be given the fans of oozing the Petes up in action against perhaps the best all round amateur team in Toronto. The locals have taken no chances, and the strenuous workouts of the past few nights have put them on edge for the Saturday entertainment. Quinlan will pitch himself, and as he has performed against them on previous occasions, he should be able to serve up most effectually a good repertoire of angulations. The game will start promptly at three o'clock with Mr. Dan McCabe behind the indicator.

Regular Semi-Monthly Shoot Of The Peterborough Gun Club

The regular semi-monthly shoot of the Peterborough Gun Club was held at the Driving Park last evening, when there was a large turnout of members, and a great deal of interest was shown by those present. Mr. W. Bellegham and R. Brown shot for the first time, the former doing exceptionally well for a beginner, Bellegham taking 10, and Brown 3.

R. Pavy	14
C. Jones	10
C. Loch	12
H. Rowley	22
C. Wood	17
W. Bellegham	10
H. Sweet	10
C. Gutteridge	14
H. Cook	18
G. Mills	13
R. Brown	3

The next shoot will be held on Thursday, Aug. 17, 1911.

PREPARATIONS FOR BOWLING TOURNAMENT

Extensive arrangements are being made by the committee in charge of the bowling tournament, which is to be held here on Monday to make this a splendid success. The tournament will be opened by the Hon. J. E. Stratton. Citizens, particularly ladies, are invited to be present. Over 100 members will take part in the proceedings. Seats will be provided for ladies.

FLUNKED AGAIN

The Hornby printers, who were to play Peterboro tops slingers here to-morrow, have flunked again. They could not get enough names and as a result they decided to cancel their trip until a later date, which the local printers hope will be soon.

THE STONE OF MYSTERY

In the chair of Edward the Confessor in Westminster Abbey, the chair upon which King George sat when he was crowned, there is a stone. It is only a piece of limestone. Its intrinsic value is nil. In shape it is square-sided, its length being greater than its width and its width greater than its thickness. Beyond the fact that it has holes in it, which may have held some sort of device by which it could have been carried, and that its general appearance indicates that in its present shape it is very ancient, there is nothing remarkable about it at all. A hundred better looking stones could be had almost anywhere for the asking. Yet this stone is in a sense the heart of the British Empire, the one permanent thing associated with the greatest political fabric the world has ever seen. Green, in his History of the English People, after describing how the Scottish nobles did homage to Edward I., says: "The sacred stone on which their sovereigns has been installed, an oblong block of limestone, which legend asserted to have been the pillow of Jacob as angels ascended and descended upon him, was removed from Scone and placed in Westminster by the shrine of Edward the Confessor. It was enclosed by Edward in a stately seat which became from that time the Coronation chair of the English Kings. This is the chair that is known as Edward the Confessor's, the name being derived from the shrine, and not from the fact that it was ever occupied by the Saxon king. One of Edward's successors proposed to restore this stone to Scotland, but the citizens of London refused to permit it to be removed, resisting by force those who came to take it away. Speaking of the removal of the stone from Scone, Sir Walter Scott says: "The fatal stone was said to have been brought from Ireland by Fergus, the son of Eric, who led the Dalriads to the shores of Argyleshire. Its virtues are preserved in the following rustic verse:

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocunque locatum
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenetur ibidem.

Where must be placed Jacob's stone
The fates have forbidden found
And prophets' words be vain.
Whatever this monument is found
The Scottish race shall reign.

These were Scots, who learned the accomplishment of the prophecy at the accession of James VII to the throne of England and carried the stone with them to the palace of Holyrood. Tradition says that when Cromwell's troops were quartered within their walls and made stables of the lower floors of those rooms the stone was left undisturbed. The stone is still preserved and forms the support of the throne of King Edward in Westminster Abbey, a very common testament of antiquarians and [illegible] Scone to Scotland in 1296, and the Dalriads, whom he led, were natives of Ulster. They were one branch of what seems to have been a predominant caste among the ancient Irish Septs. Thus we are able to trace the Stone of Mystery back over a period of more than fourteen hundred years without having recourse to simple tradition. At what time this stone was removed to Scone (pronounced Scoon) is not certain, but in the early part of the Ninth Century, or four hundred years after Fergus landed, the town was known as "regalis civitas," or royal city. At this time there stood a great monastery there, and in it, and seated upon this stone, the Scottish kings had been crowned for several generations. Robert Bruce seems to have been the last king of Scotland to be crowned upon it, and after the relic had been removed to England the Scottish kings were crowned in such places as suited their convenience.

There is a great mass of tradition surrounding this Stone of Mystery. It is said at one time to have been kept at Tara, where the ancient Irish Parliament met more than a thousand years before the Christian era, and the Ard-Rhis, or the chief kings of Ireland, held their court. One of the traditions says the stone was brought to Ireland by a daughter of Pharaoh, King of Israel. Thousands of people believe implicitly that some remarkable virtue attaches to this block of limestone. It is claimed to be a proof that the British race descends from the Lost Tribes of Israel, and that one branch of them, the Anglo-Saxons, journeyed across Europe to meet the representatives of the Royal House of David, who had found their way to Ireland by water. Queen Victoria is said to have been fully convinced of her own descent from David. The pedigree of His Majesty George V. may be of interest in this connection. He is seventh in descent from George I., who was third in descent from James I. of England and VI. of Scotland, who was ninth in descent from Robert Bruce, who was seventh in descent from Malcolm Canmohr, who was ninth in descent from Kenneth Macalpine, King of the Picts and Scots, who was second in descent from Aydan IV., King of the Scots, who was a descendant of Fergus, son of Eric, who came from Ireland in A.D. 506. His Majesty's family has therefore been connected with the Stone of Mystery for thirty-seven generations, through ancestors who can be specifically named, and how many more can only be surmised. He must be at least the fiftieth in descent from Eric.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

Yes, but that's what people always say about anyone when they can't think of anything else nice.

The girl who said that had just been told that someone had remarked what a wonderfully sweet disposition she had.

I quote her comment on the compliment, because I've heard other girls say the same thing and because I most strenuously object to this belittling of one of the highest compliments anyone can receive.

If this girl had been told that someone had said that she was a wonderful musician, she would doubtless have been very happy.

She has been complimented on being proficient in a much more rarely mastered art than music—the fine art of being good to live with—and she thinks cheaply of the compliment.

Listen, little girl and all your sisters, in the folly of this queer point of view. Storm if you will what I say, but I want you to give ear to what some real folks have said about the value of the sweet disposition and the life-importance of the fine art of being good to live with:

"A happy man or woman is a Letter thing to find than a five-pound note. He or she is a radiating focus of good will, and their entrance into a room is as though another candle had been lighted. We need not care whether they could prove the forty-seventh proposition, they do a better thing than that; they practically demonstrate the great theorem of the Livableness of Life."—Robert Louis Stevenson.

"The habit of looking at the bright side of things is worth more than a thousand pounds a year."—Samuel Johnson.

"Perhaps just pleasantness has not a very heroic sound, but the human heart, that knowing its own bitterness, can yet carry itself cheerfully is not without heroism. Indeed, if that human heart does no more than hold its tongue about its own aches and pains, it has a certain moral sound that the world cannot afford to lose. "Pleasantness" does not sound so well as self-sacrifice or wisdom or spirituality, but it may include all these words. And certainly, just to start one's husband out to his work cheerily, to make the hobbledehoy of a son feel a gentler and sweeter sentiment towards women because of his own mother's sound, sweet gayety and strength, to help one's servants to put good humour and friendliness into their services—these things make for righteousness in the world."—Margaret Deland.

"I do not know of any way so sure of making others happy as of being so one's self."—Sir Arthur Helps.

FIRST OUTING A SUCCESS

The Boys' Department Bicycle Club held their first outing yesterday. It was a decided success. Sharp at one-thirty the party left the Y.M.C.A. and headed for Chemong. The trip was made in thirty-five minutes. After resting at Chemong for a short while it was decided to journey on to the Boy Scouts' camp at Bass Rock. This was where the real fun commenced, nobody knowing exactly the location of their camp. The job of showing the lead was entrusted to K. Brown who, after running us along paths so crooked that you almost met yourself coming back, finally succeeded in running to the end of a road which led to a farmer's house. Here we stood gazing at each other, wondering what to do next when, finally, the leader, in spite of a very distinct objection by a dog, proceeded to the farm house for further instructions. He seemed a tremendous long time, but we afterwards discovered the cause to be a nice young girl, who finally succeeded in giving him a few complicated instructions by which we landed safely in the camp, but not till we had crossed through several fields and jumped several fences. On our arrival we were all made welcome by Mr Miller, who is in charge. We were shown around the camp and after a good rest enjoyed a swim. The scouts have a really fine camp and many of the boys hated to leave. Sharp at five we left for home, and this time, knowing where to go, had no trouble in landing safely back at six p.m., hungry and tired, but well satisfied with the outing.

There will be another outing conducted next week. Watch for further announcements.

IT GROWS HAIR

Here Are Facts We Want You to Prove at Our Risk

Marvelous as it may seem, Rexall "93" Hair Tonic has grown hair on heads that were once bald. Of course, in none of these cases were the hair roots dead, nor had the scalp taken on a glazed, shiny appearance.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic acts scientifically, destroying the germs which are usually responsible for baldness. It penetrates to the roots of the hair, stimulating and nourishing them. It is a most pleasant toilet necessity, is delicately perfumed, and will not gum, nor permanently stain the hair.

We want you to get a bottle of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and use it as directed. If it does not relieve scalp irritation, remove dandruff, prevent the hair from falling out and promote an increased growth of hair, and in every way give entire satisfaction simply come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand back to you every penny you paid us for it. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Sold only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

TORONTO'S SLUMS

TORONTO, AUG. 4.—Next week will see a start made by Dr. Hastings, M.H.O., on the cleaning out of Toronto's slums.

City Counsel Drayton has given it as his opinion that under the law Dr. Hastings has power to dispossess any person living in houses unfit for human habitation.

Provision has been made, however, for the housing of those dispossessed from filthy and uninhabitable houses and Dr. Hastings will make a recommendation along this line in a day or two. The Board of Health will hold a special meeting and will forward the recommendation to the special meeting of Council.

This morning Dr. Hastings, Ald. Rowland, Ald. McCarthy, and a nurse on the M. H. O.'s staff, took an auto trip around the slum districts, visiting the Ward and Eastern avenue.

"Never again for me; I'll never go back again," said Ald. Rowland to the Star, after the tour. "It was terrible. I didn't think there was anything like that in Toronto. We found a house in Chestnut street with 22 inches of water in the cellar, and that water had been lying there stagnant for a year. There were certainly some tough joints, but we are going to clean them out, and we will start right away"

THE BURDENS OF AGE

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, lame, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys, and bowels.

OWNS 300 ACRES OF HAMILTON

LONDON, AUG. 4.—If what David Welch, 580 Dufferin avenue, says is true, he owns a large-sized chunk of Hamilton, and he is going to try to recover what belongs to him right away. Welch says he holds deeds to 300 acres situated in the heart of the Ambitious City, which is part of a grant made by the Crown a century ago to one Caleb Reynolds. The balance of the grant changed hands legally, but Welch, whose wife is an heir of Reynolds, claims that the 300 acres referred to were not sold, but were squatted upon, and that the present deeds are not good. The land is situated along Burlington Bay, and includes much property, a rough estimate of the value of which is $20,000,000. Caleb Reynolds was a United Empire Loyalist, and, after losing everything in the American Revolution, he came across the border, and the Government made him a grant of several hundred acres.

SWAT THE FLY

WASHINGTON, AUG. 3.—If there is any slogan, any motto, that accurately expresses the feeling and attitude of the people during the summer months it is "Swat the Fly." All over the country flies are flying and folks are swatting them, while enthusiastic boards of trade and chambers of commerce are offering large sums to those who turn over the greatest number of the dead pests.

But it remained for Dr. L. C. Howard, chief of the bureau of entomology of the department of agriculture to point out that there is at least one manufacture—the extent of which is larger than is ordinarily imagined—that will be severely injured, if not totally destroyed if all the flies are swatted. It is the fly screen industry, in which there is over $50,000,000 invested.

According to Dr. Howard, who has made a deep study of the subject, all this money could be saved if systematic fly swatting was engaged in all over the country.

"Not to speak of saving through the decrease in doctor's bills and the infinitely greater conveniences and comfort when these winged pests are done away with," the doctor added, "the country will save an enormous amount of money every year by not having to buy screens. I have found that there is close to $50,000,000 invested in these fly-preventers in this country to-day and the extermination of the fly will naturally mean the saving of just this amount within the next two or three years.

FIRST MOTORIST FINED

A local motorist was fined $10.00 at the Police Court this morning for speeding on Charlotte street. The chief stated that last night, about 9.30, he was sitting on his verandah, on Charlotte street, west, and the accused, with three others in the machine, went past at a rate he judged to be at least 18 miles per hour, and probably 20, and when they got out to the boundry, he heard something crack and they turned around and went back to the garage. The chief held that the rate they were travelling was dangerous, as there was always a number of little children on the street. The accused stated that he had been running an auto for five years, but had only been in the city for a few days, and did not know anything about the city. He said that the machine struck a bump on the road and a spring broke, but he denied running any more than 15 miles per hour, however. He admitted that it was an emergency call he was on. He said that there was another motorist happened with an accident out on the road, and he was going to help him repair the machine. The minimum fine of $10 was then imposed. This is the first motorist to be fined since Magistrate Dumble fixed the speed at six miles per hour inside the city limits.

Robert Burns, a river driver, was fined $5.75 for being drunk and disorderly, and Thomas Kehoe, a 'bus driver for a local hotel, was fined a like amount for the same offence. He raised a disturbance at the G. T. R. station yesterday.

Robert Douglas was charged with vagrancy. He said he had worked hard all his life at construction work, but his failure was drink. He asked for a chance, but the Magistrate thought he had had his chance and gave him one month on the hill.

John McDonnel was up on the same charge, and was allowed to go with a warning.

Bibles Placed In Local Hotels

The assistant secretary of the Gideons and the Christian Commercial Travellers' Association was in town yesterday for the purpose of placing Bibles in some 375 rooms of the local hotels. He was received very courteously by the proprietors and was given receipts for all the Bibles placed.

Peterborough is to be congratulated for being the first town in the East to receive Bibles at the hands of the Gideons. The gentleman who looked after the work here will next visit Port Hope and Oshawa to perform a similar mission there. Berlin, Stratford, London, and some Western towns are the next that will receive due attention at the hands of the Gideons.

ARM AMPUTATED

Thomas O'Leary, no home, was found early this morning lying under a freight car. He was unconscious and his right arm so badly lacerated that it was amputated at Grace Hospital, where he now lies in such a critical condition that his recovery is hopeless. The man was lying on the tracks, and an examination by physicians showed that he was badly hurt otherwise. It is thought that he was trying to steal a ride. O'Leary is about 45 years of age.—News.

Mr. J. L. Wood, superintendent of construction at the C.G.E., believes this to be the man who was formerly employed on the construction of the new building. He was a structural iron worker by trade and in such capacity had travelled from coast to coast and also over two continents. O'Leary was of a roving disposition, but was a good workman.

USES FOR OLD KID GLOVES

Cut off the hands and save the arms of your long kid gloves, to use for polishing silver, mirrors, cut glass and jewels. Out of the tops of old tan or grey gloves you can make charming bags for carrying glasses, etc. Cut the kid to the same pattern as is used for silk or velvet bags, line with silk of any pretty colour, and trace your initials on the outside.

The Greatest Blouse Sale of the Season Saturday

White Blouses worth up to $4.50---All at One Price 95 cents Each

WE ARE STRIVING to beat all records in our special offerings for August and we will succeed because the QUALITY and PRICES will do it. For the first Saturday Sale we have perhaps the strongest leader we will have during the month. In going through our White Blouse stock we have taken nearly 100 Blouses that for various reasons we have decided to clear—some because they have been on "appro" and were returned somewhat mussed; some are samples (about 30 New York samples, made by one of the most prominent manufacturers) only one of a kind; others because they have not sold readily at the prices marked; and still others because they have been slightly soiled during the season. The original prices are marked on the tickets—they range in price from $1.50 to $4.50—the large number were marked to sell at $2.50 and $3.00. The quantity is large but the "clean-up" will be quick and sharp; no matter how many blouses you have you can use some of these at this price. There are about 50 or 60 different lines represented, so you have a splendid chance to secure exclusive styles. These Blouses will be displayed in our centre window Thursday afternoon and Friday. Will positively not be sold before Saturday morning. We cannot fill "phone" orders or send on approval, but in case you get any you are not satisfied with, your money will be cheerfully refunded. Sale starts sharp at 8:15 Saturday morning and continues until all are sold. Saturday Snap price, each 95c

Scare Was Unwarranted

A slight scare was caused this morning by a rumour to the effect that a well known East City resident had the misfortune to become poisoned in some accidental or incidental manner. On investigation, however, it was found to be a case of cholera.

FINE POINT OF LAW

TORONTO, AUG. 4.—The finest point which Magistrate Denison has yet encountered in the Lord's Day Act came up yesterday morning in the case of Jacob Rumm, holder of a restaurant license, who had sold ice cream in cones, but whose customers had neglected to take a nibble from the edge before leaving the premises.

Rumm's chief defence was a copy of The Star, quoting the Magistrate's latest decision that cones could be sold on Sunday. In these cases, however, the buyers were just eating the remnants away from the stands, and never had tables to sit at.

"This is just a bit different," the Magistrate rejoined. Then he puzzled some more, and it appeared hopeless.

"It's about the finest point I ever saw," he concluded. "If we want you again we'll send for you."

The Magistrate states, however, that the earlier decision, taken strictly, is intended to apply only to stands in parks, etc., where people must move along to make room for others, and where there is no proper place to eat. Rumm's place was a store, with tables.

Harry Ruben, Queen street, baker, made loaves on Sunday. Fine, five dollars. Three workmen, Gavel Pere, Max Bochner, and Mirris May, who assisted, got off with $2 each.

Lizzie Lavidovitch, who worked as a presser on Sunday, pays a dollar.

Nathan Tank, deliverer of Sunday bread after 8 a.m., was fined $2.00.

WEDDING BELLS

MUNRO—KELLY.

A very fashionable wedding ceremony was solemnized on Wednesday, August 2, at "The Maples," the home of Mr. T. A. Kelly of Cavan Township, when his youngest sister, Bertha Beatrice, was united in marriage to Mr. R. J. Monro, of Peterborough. The bride looked charming in a gown of white duchesse satin, veiled with chiffon and embroidered with sequins and pearls. She wore the customary bridal veil, with orange blossoms and Scotch heather, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and smilax. She wore a pearl sunburst, the gift of the groom, and was given away by her brother, Mr. T. A. Kelly. The bride was attended by her sister, Ethel, wearing a handsome gown of pink satin, veiled with embroidered chiffon and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The groom was ably supported by Mr. F. Clarke of Peterborough, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Johnston of Millbrook, and the wedding march was played by Mrs. S. E. Eakins, of the same place.

After the ceremony a sumptuous repast was served in the dining-room, which was prettily decorated with smilax and white satin ribbon. The guests numbered about fifty. The bride was the recipient of many handsome gifts, including a cheque for one thousand dollars from the groom. His gift to the bridesmaid was a gold bar pin, set with rubies and pearls, and to the groomsman a handsome signet ring.

The bride's going-away gown was a suit of tan broadcloth, with hat to match.

Mr. and Mrs. Munro left on the 9.30 train for Montreal, Quebec and other eastern points. On their return they will reside in Peterboorugh.

After Nine Years

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Matthews of Vancouver, B.C., are in the city on a visit to Mrs. Stanley's parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. Matthews, London street. It is nine years since Mr. Matthews left Peterborough, and although he is most optimistic regarding the future of the West, he expresses himself as being amazed and delighted with the progress made by his native city in the period of his absence. Mr. Matthews is getting the glad hand from a host of old friends, who have noticed, with great pleasure, to the prosperity he has experienced in the Pacific Province.

A PLEASANT TRIP

The members of the Mark Street Methodist Church Choir made a very enjoyable trip up the lakes yesterday through the kindness of their choir leader, Mr. Callender, who was responsible for the supply of the tickets. The Rev. and Mrs. Coon were a very acceptable addition to the assembly.

The members visited Burleigh Falls and called at all the principal points of the Lake. At mid-day Juniper Island was reached, where dinner was served. The steamer then proceeded round the lakes, reaching home about 8 o'clock. Despite the showers that prevailed during the greater part of the day, a very pleasant time was spent.

LECTURE AT LYCEUM

On Monday evening, August 7, at the Lyceum, Mr. D. O'Connell of this city, will lecture on "The Life and Times of Daniel O'Connell". The treatment of this subject rests in the hands of a most able speaker, and one particularly conversant with the history of the times and a large crowd should be in attendance. The hall has been fitted up for the occasion with electric fans. No admission fee will be charged, but a silver collection will be taken to defray expenses.

BODY GUARDS OF KINGS

In speaking of the personal guards of the sovereign says the London Field, the uninitiated are apt to confuse with them the ordinary household troops of the king. From the days of Harold, who maintained his Huscarles, to the present time, when we are all familiar with the household cavalry and the bridage of foot guards of King George V., successive monarchs have had an establishment of household troops, quite distinct and separate from the select few who form the personal bodyguard of the sovereign.

Without doubt the oldest bodyguard in the United Kingdom, though it has long since lost its military character, is the corps of sergeants-at-arms, now represented by some half a dozen officials, two of whom are lent by the sovereign to, amongst others, the lord chancellor and the speaker of the house of commons; and the next time our readers have the opportunity of seeing the dignified official in black court dress carrying the important symbol of royal authority—the mace—in front of Mr. Speaker they may recognize in him one of the oldest royal bodyguard in Great Britain—the sergeant-at-arms, created by Richard I in Palestine in 1190-91 as a protection from the assassins of the powerful chief known as the Old Man of the Mountain, who made a trade of murdering Christian princes. The present strength of the corps of sergeants-at-arms is eight; they are still part of the royal household, though lent in certain cases to prominent high officials.

Of the existing personal guards of the sovereign the oldest without doubt is the king's bodyguard of the yeoman of the guard, the first permanent corps of trained soldiers in our history. Copied, perhaps, from the Scottish guard of the French kings, the corps was formed as far back as the year 1485. When Henry VIII landed in England from Normandy he was accompanied by a small guard of English and Welsh who had shared his exile. They were with him at Bosworth, and surrounded by them he received the crown of England. It was this body of personal attendants that became, in September, 1485, the yeomen of the guard, ever since the personal bodyguard of the sovereigns of England.

It still retains the picturesque dress, with the original title of yeomen, which it wore under its first captain, John de Vere, earl of Oxford. The title of "Beefeaters," by which the corps is familiarly known, organized some 400 years ago, when beef, of which a considerable portion was allowed daily by the court, was the principal ration of the yeomen. They are now all ex-non-commissioned officers of the army of marines of distinguished service.

The proud distinction of being the "nearest guard," the one on duty in the royal presence, is the royal bodyguard of the honorable corps of gentlemen-at-arms, which celebrated the 400th anniversary two years ago. It originally consisted of a captain, a lieutenant, and 10 gentlemen of noble blood, all of whom were mounted in the field. It is still a mounted corps, though for many years it has not been called upon for such service. It was in every sense a military body, periodically drilled and trained, and has a long record of brilliant war service.

Originally the corps was clothed in a gorgeous dress of gold, silver, goldsmith's work, and red and yellow damask, but its present uniform closely resembles that of a heavy cavalry officer of the earlier years of Queen Victoria's reign. Admission to the corps is restricted to those, not under 5 feet 8 inches, who have held commissions in the regular army, who have seen active service in the field, and who are in possession of a decoration. The corps was conspicuous at the coronation as the bodyguard privileged in England to be nearest the royal person. Hence its title of the "nearest guard."

Probably the least familiar of the bodyguards of the sovereign is the king's bodyguard for Scotland, or royal company of archers, which occupies in Scotland the position which the gentlemen-at-arms occupy in England—that of the "nearest guard." It is an interesting and fascinating organization, select to a degree. Of its limited number of 26 officers, no fewer than 21 are peers of the realm, while among the gentlemen of the bodyguard, or the ordinary rank and file, are to be found dukes, ex-prime ministers, cabinet ministers, noble lords, judges, admirals, generals, lairds and persons distinguished in all walks of life.

Tradition assigns the date of its formation to the year 1424, and is responsible for the belief that it acted as the bodyguard of James IV. at Fladden, but the earliest documents in existence do not go back further than 1676. The bow and arrow always was and still is the recognized weapon of the guard, which has invariably been suspected of a leaning towards Jacobitism. Indeed, to the present day the members wear the white cockade in their bonnets. The corps is very jealous of its privileges, and will tolerate no other body usurping its proud rights in Scotland as the guardians of the King's person.

No account of the bodyguard of the sovereign would be complete without a reference to the "battle-axe guards of Ireland," an organization which existed in that part of the United Kingdom until as late as 1833, although for many years it had acted more as a body-guard to the lord-lieutenant, and was scarcely recognized as a royal bodyguard. Their origin is the subject of considerable difference of opinion. By some authorities they were recognized as the successors of the "Galloglasses," the ancient Irish heavily armed men-at-arms.

But the more reliable authorities assume the guard to have come into existence when the yeomen of the guard left Ireland in 1510, on the retirement of the Earl of Surrey, deputy of Henry VIII. The only official records in existence in the Dublin Heraldic College speak of the formation of the guard in 1664, as if it had had no previous existence. The guard consisted of a colonel, two lieutenants, two sergeants, and fifty yeomen, all of whose appointments were obtained by purchase, and on the disbandment of the guard in 1833 it cost the government more than £30,000 to buy out the officers and yeomen."

SHEEP STORIES

Adelaide Gosset's "Shepherds of Britain" tells us that a lamb was burned alive by a farmer in recent times to deliver his flocks from a spell which he believed to have been cast upon them, and that Professor Rhys knew a very old woman who told him that she remembered seeing a live sheep burned as a sacrifice. A lady contributor states that lambs have been sacrificially burned, whether alive or not she does not say, within living memory in the Isle of Man on May Day. The author, as well as one of the contributors, believes that the name collie is taken from the blackfaced Highland sheep, which were formerly called collies, or colleys; hence the dogs which drove them came to be called collie dogs, now abbreviated into collies.

It may astonish some southerners to learn that in Shetland, during the winter, when the pastures have become bare of grass, the sheep, and for that matter the ponies also, feed largely upon seaweed; but this is not so much to be wondered at when we remember that human beings sometimes eat the same food on the west coast of Ireland. One of the greatest enemies of the shepherd is an eagle, when he takes to lamb eating, which very many eagles do. "The eagle is the most voracious of gluttons, and the best chance for the shepherd to take his revenge is when he weathers on a bird gorged to the beak with drowned mutton. Then the prince of the air and the mountains may be knocked senseless with the staff."

In return for the pleasure of reading her book we offer the author the following information relating to a sheep. As is well known, there is no bad habit of which it is more difficult to break a dog than that of chasing sheep. In many cases all that can be done is to destroy the dog. The next neighbour of the reviewer had a pack of hounds, one of which became a confirmed and apparently incurable sheep runner. Its master had also a fine flock of Shropshire sheep, and selecting the largest and most powerful ram he coupled the delinquent to it and turned them into a large grass field. Much alarmed at being attached to its canine companion, the ram galloped furiously round and round the field, dragging the reluctant hound after it until both lay down thoroughly exhausted. Nothing would induce the hound ever to look at a sheep again. Indeed, instead of running after sheep, for the future it ran away from them.—"The Tablet."

WOMEN IN MANY LANDS

Women in different countries have what appear to us queer ideas of comeliness.

Hindoo women, when they wish to be particularly lovely, cover their faces with a mixture of saffron and grease.

The Chinese women stain their teeth black.

Persian women have a strong aversion to red hair, and when it is this colour they dye it.

OUR SATURDAY SERMON

He who prososes to lead a new and better life immediately ecomes conscious that the past is his enemy, his most formidable enemy; in many ways it discourages, entangles, paralyzes. Could he get rid of the past, its relics and memories, the new and better life immediately becomes conis attractive. Is it, then, possible to break with the hateful tyranny, and to enter upon the heavenly pathway? If so, how may it be done? This is the question to which the serious man addresses himself. Our text incidentally answers the question and answers it in the affirmative. Cleansing from old sins is possible; the apostle speaks of those who were actually made clean. Let us at once recognize the inevitable struggle by which emancipation from the past is achieved, and yet insist on the glorious possibility of complete redemption.

The condemnation of the past must be dealt with . The solemn truth that "God requireth that which is past" is registered in our conscience, and urged by it. The sins of past years hold us with a firm grip. They may have been committed in scenes far removed; those of a past generation who survive may have forgotten our falls, or perhaps never knew of them; but the painful incidents cannot be glossed over by us who are personally concerned. It may be objected. What is easier of God than forgiveness? The thoughtless regard forgiveness as the simplest, easiest, and least costly of acts; and old sins are dropped into oblivion indifferently with old almanacs . Yet, awakening to the truth of things, we are at once acutely conscious of the extreme seriousness of the pride, self-will, and wickedness which poisoned the years that have gone. For the first time sin becomes a reality.

To a true penitent all this is changed. Sin is henceforth a dark reality, the liability to punishment a reality, the sentence of death which he receives within himself is a reality, and the possibility, much less the probability, of condonation and discharge becomes increasingly doubtful as the law does its work. Conscience knows nothing of the facility of absolution. It is easy to give play to imagination and sentiment; but the divinest faculty of our nature testifies solemnly of law, guilt, retribution, and of these only. Science finds no place for clemency. He who breaks the law must pay the penalty. Government does not find it easy to forgive. Society is so constituted and maintained that it must sternly punish offences. In the personal and domestic circle it is repeatedly well-nigh impossible so to pardon that forgiveness may prove a blessing. To the unawakened, sin is a matter of illusion, but when we come to think deeply and truly, to give conscience a chance, to reason out our action as in the sight of God, we know that nothing short of a miracle can purge our guilt and set us free from the dead, unrighteous past.

That miracle has been wrought in Christ. The whole of revelation testifies that God did not find it easy to forgive. The elaborate system of temple worship and sacrifice depicted in the Old Testament symbolized the majesty of moral law and the immense difficulty of showing mercy to the sinner. And this is the tremendous problem which the New Testament sets itself to solve. The wisdom, the power, and the love of deity are summed up in that Incarnation and Atonement which secure mercy to the offender, and yet maintain the righteous law. Revelation is a record of miracle. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses, according to the riches of His grace." There are no less than thirty distinct theories of the Atonement; but at this crisis we need not concern ourselves with any of these speculations; we need only thankfully and believingly to recognize the fact that God has found in the crucified the ground on which He, the righteous Ruler of the world, can consistently and fully accquit the penitent. "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake ,and will not remember thy sins. Put Me in remembrance; let us plead together; declare thou, that thou mayest be justified."

"I believe in the forgiveness of sins." Do you believe it in your very heart? Have you so grasped the divine love and faithfulness that pardon has become as real as sin? Ah, how imperfectly have we done this? "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins." Why, then, do we not look up with confidence if the threatening storm cloud, tinted with the rainbow, has melted into the infinite azure of the divine love? "For Thou has cast all my sins behind Thy back." Where that region lies who may say? But if God comes between us and all our sins, it is enough; why affright ourselves seeking to discover that realm of silence and forgetfulness? "Thou wil cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." The sea is deeper than Micah knew, and the sea into which heaven plunges our sins is one that shall never give up her dead; why, then, this deep-sea dredging to fish up what the purple ocean of the eternal merit and power has swallowed in unfathomable deeps? First, we make a mock of sin and lightly assume its forgiveness; then, when the law comes home, we believe it to be so profound and incurable that we despair of salvation. The last thing we do is to believe in the reality of forgiveness as in the agony of conviction in the reality of sin.

The higher life we covet is impossible except we cordially take God at His word. Terrible is the very suspicion of uncancelled sin! What can be more repressive to our best impulses, more blighting to our heart, more chilling and paralyzing to all our upward-seeking desires and strivings, than the misgiving that our death warrant obtains, and that at any hour of the day o rnight we may be thrust into the prison house? This it is that robs the grass and flower of their glory, and renders doubly dark the watches of the night, brings black shadows into sunshiny places, and spoils the peace and joy of life. The burden of Bunyan's Pilgrim rolled into the sepulchre, and he "saw it no more"; it is thus we must set out on the new life, the heavenly pathway . Leave the old life and the old sins in the depths of God's love, Christ's merit, the Holy Spirit's grace. "If we confess our sin," believe in God's nobleness; and what is forgotten in heaven, let us no more remember on earth to our detriment or despair. Take the cup of salvation and fill it with the water of Lethe, calling upon the name of the Lord. Then ours is the peace that passeth understanding, and we shall not be confounded.—Rev. W. L. Watkinson, D.D.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

"The strong Egyptian fetters I must break,
Or lose myself in dotage."
—Antony and Cleopatra, Act I., Sc. 2.

Marc Antony was bound by the most fatal fetter than can shackle a man, body and soul ,passion for a dissolute woman. His words,

"The strong Egyptian fetters I must break,

Who is this Antony? Since Julius Caesar's death he was the most striking figure in the Roman world, which is equivalent to saying the world of his time. He was one of the rulers of the "three-nook'd world." His partners, Octavius Caesar and Lepidus, were commonplace compared with him. As he appears on Shakespeare's page he was the most brilliant man of his time—a general without a rival, an orator with few equals, a statesman worthy of a place in the councils of any empire. He has superfluous energy, and when not on the march, in the tented field, or in the forum, heunfortunately worked off his energy in "lascivious wassails." At first these outbursts were no doubt the ebullition of his full-blooded youth, but as he gave them loose rein they became the habits of his age. When he met Cleopatra he was in bondage to his baser self, and he had no power of resistance when the Egyptian queen dazzled his eyes and mind with her voluptuous beauty.

The fetters she cast around him, the spells with which she charmed his spirit, Antony describes as "strong." It is the right word. There is nothing stronger than the chains of love. Love has made kings and dethroned them . It has ennobled and exalted lives and dragged others down. Antony knew the character of the fetters the Egyptian had cast about him. They were strong. The musi cof her voice, the flashing keenness of her wit, the thrill of her lips, bound him to Alexandria when he should have been in Rome ,and made him a wea krales and a faithless husband. He knew likewise that the remedy for his disease lay in himself. Of his own volition he must break these feetters. That was the only way of escape. The "I" is significant. No external aids could rescue him. He had willingly yielded to the fascinations of Cleopatra, and only by the exercise of wil lcould he be saved. However, while he thus correctly diagnosed his case, his disease was too deeply seated. His will through lack of use had become atrophied. He tried by flight to break the fetters. He removed his body from the scene of temptation, but ht ws not sufficient. He ws not chnged in spirit: his heart was in Egypt and the seductive charms of Cleopatra served as a magnet to draw him back to her feet.

His use of the word "break" is likewise significant. He realized that he must not trifle with his feelings. His passion for Cleopatra was dragging him down. His life in her capital was enervating him, body and mind. He was losing the high reputation he had won as a soldier, and his voice was no longer heeded in the councils of the republic. To save himself he must, with soldierly resolve, turn right about face, not only flee from temptation, but root the weakness that caused him to yield out of his being. It was peculiarly hard for Antony to do this. The long years of careless living had left him spiritually weak . The animal in him had triumphed over the man. Revels, sensuous pleasures had so possessed him that he yielded to them instinctively.

However, there was hope for Antony. He could criticise himself. He saw where his conduct if persisted in would lead. Utter destruction of character is the fate o fthe man who consciously maintains an evil course. Moral dotage are the right words for the condition brought about by the voluntary continuance in sin. There was only one way of escape, an absolute break with the past, and determined effort along entirely different lines. If weeds are plucked up, plant and cultivate healthful fruit or a flourishing and more persistent crop of weeds will soon be in possession.

The saddest thing about the downfall of Antony is his wasted opportunities. The possibilities of the man were infinite. He inspired admiration for him in the citizens of Rome. To theme there was no nobler man living. He won the affection of Julius Caesar and even of Brutus. He was generous to foes, and nobly forgiving to such faithless followers as Enobarbus. In him, as Professor Corson has written, the angelic was in close neighborhood with the brutal. He was a splendid animal with a generous heart. These excellent qualities destroyed the man as they have many another man. To animal impulse he continuously yielded. His generous nature caused him to give way to temptation where a less kindly sould would have resisted. Had he been but able to break with his past, to fill what was left of his life with noble, honourable action he would have escaped the inevitable dotage into which any man must fall who selfishly yields to enervating, degrading pleasure.

TRIED TWO DOCTORS WITH NO BENEFIT

Then Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Wrought a Lasting Cure

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made so many remarkable cures in serious cases that people are liable to overlook their value as a tonic for the blood and nerves in debility and general run-down conditions. That such conditions are the cause of much misery and unhappiness is fully known to those who suffer from them and the need of curing them is as vital as is relief from diseases with higher sounding names. We commend the following statement to any one suffering from weak, thin blood, or shattered nerves. Mrs. Mac Macabe, Gleichen, Alta., says: "A few years ago I became run down, not seriously ill, but just tired and weak all the time, I consulted our family doctor, who gave me tonic after tonic with no effect. I gradually got weaker and weaker until I could not do my work. Then I went to another doctor, who pronounced my case one of decline, and recommended a warmer climate with complete rest. This I could not afford and I began to worry and fret, until I became a complete nervous wreck. One day while visiting a neighbour an old gentleman who was taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for partial paralysis recommended them to me. I sent out and got three boxes, but without much faith that they would help me, but before they were gone I noticed an improvement and I continued taking the Pills, constantly growing stronger, until I had taken seven or eight boxes ,when I was completely cured. I could do my work as easily as ever I had done in my life, and the doctor told me that he could scarcely believe the change in me, as he had not had the least hope that I would be strong again. Now I always keep the Pills on hand and if I feel fatigued or weary take them for three or four days so as not to get run down."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BIGGEST MUSKELLUNGE

"Until someone beats the muskallonge record made by Mrs. Howard Kennedy," said a member of the Laura Fishing Club, "we will rest easy.

"Lacking only five ounces of 62 pounds was the muskalonge of which Mrs. Kennedy bereaved Lake Lorine. Five feet it stretched from tip to tip. As anyone who lands a 20-pound muskalonge nowadays gets himself talked about, you may get something of an idea as to what a sensation the catching of that fish made all through the muskallonge country of Minnesota, and Minnesota is pretty much all muskallonge country at that.

"Mrs. Howard Kennedy didn't hook that 62-pound muskallonge, but just about all the credit of its being on record as a catch belongs to her. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy belong in Minneapolis and were having an outing at Lorine Lake. They were out trolling for muskallonge, or at least the husband was trolling for 'em, and this one struck the troll and got fast to the hook.

"For just one hour Mr. Kennedy see-sawed and hauled in and was towed about on the lake in his struggle to get that fish in, and at last, when he was on the verge of being tuckered out himself, the big fish gave up and came along toward the boat. Mr. Kennedy stood in the boat ready to gaff the muskallonge, when the fish turned, made a lunge and tumbled the fisherman out of the boat into the lake.

"Then it was that Mrs. Kennedy came to the front and showed that she wasn't there to let that fish get away after all the trouble her husband had been to in hooking it. Not she. Mrs. Kennedy handles the rifle with skill and precision. She had taken her rifle along with her on this fishing trip.

"When Mr. Kennedy followed the yank of that muskallonge out of the boat he kept right on going until the only thing that marked the spot where he had struck the lake was the big rumple he made in the water and a few bubbles that rose from the depths. Being quite sure that he would reappear at about the same place, Mrs. Kennedy got the boat in position so that when he came up it would be handy to his reach. His rod had gone out of the boat with him, and from the fact that it had gone down out of sight too it was evident that the muskallonge had no little vim in him yet.

"Mr. Kennedy came up promptly, sputtering and gasping. He struck out for the boat good and strong. Then up came the rod to the surface a little distance beyond him, and after a nervous bobbing or two it began to move away out in the lake, showing that the muskallonge still had it in possession.

"Mr. Kennedy was for getting right into the boat, but Mrs. Kennedy hailed him and suggested firmly that the boat was all right, and for him never to mind the boat.

"'Go grab the rod! Grab the rod!' she said. 'Don't let the muskallonge run away with it.'

"So Mr. Kennedy changed his course and grabbed the rod. While he was doing it Mrs. Kennedy brought the boat about and sent it after her husband.

"Mr. Kennedy grabbed the painter of the boat with one hand, held himself up, and dropping the rod began to pull in the line with his other hand. The big fish was at the end of about seventy feet of line. When he felt the hook tugging at his jaw again he came up out of the water and cleared it more than three feet. He poised just long enough to escape a rifle bullet that Mrs. Kennedy sent after him.

"The muskallinge turned a somersault, and he cavorted and twisted and twisted and hurled the water about like fountains playing. The bullet had spoiled his disposition to get below the surface.

"Mr. Kennedy, clinging to the painter of the boat, gave another yank on the line and up rose the muskallonge in the air again. Bang went Mrs. Kennedy's rifle, and down came the muskallonge again with the second bullet in him. But still he had life enough to fight against being hauled in.

"Mr. Kennedy was getting tired now and wanted to get into the boat, but Mrs. Kennedy told him to wait until she made that muskallonge a sure catch. She had to put two more bullets into the tough patriarch of the lake, though, before he was beaten. Then Mrs. Kennedy helped her husband to regain the inside of the boat and they hauled the monster muskallonge in and landed him. After Mr. Kennedy had got back some of his wind he was able to gasp:

"'That was a close shave, I tell you! I couldn't have held on to that painter and kept treading water much longer.'

"'But just think, dear!' said Mrs. Kennedy, 'if you had wasted the time in getting into the boat we'd have lost the muskallonge sure! And your rod too!'

"And the muskallonge lacked only a foot of being as tall as Mr. Kennedy and lagged the scales down almost to the sixty-twopound notch.

"Strictly speaking, I suppose we ought to say that that record muskallonge was caught by Mr. Kennedy and bagged by Mrs. Kennedy; but whichever way the credit of its capture is handed down the challenge is open to all the muskallonge waters to beat it if they can."—New York Sun.

TO CHECK A COLD
It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

Don't Wear Old Appearing Glasses
Why have Glasses that are awkward to wear and that give an unnecessary "old" appearance? Why duck and peer over your Reading Glasses to see objects at a distance? Why wear two pair of glasses, one for distance, the other for reading? Why wear conspicious pasted wafers cemented to your distance lenses, when it is not necessary?

Wear Our Toric Kryptoks
Toric Kryptoks have the appearance of single lenses but give perfect distant and close work service. There is no marked "old appearing" dividing line to distract the vision and collect dirt, there is no plaster to blur or fall off—instead you have solid lenses which you can wear at all times for all purposes as naturally as you would use your eyes without glasses.

Kryptok Lenses
The NEW INVISIBLE double vision lens. On the market but a few years, more than 200,000 ARE BEING WORN.

EVERY TIME—
You wipe "cemented on" bifocal lenses you run the risk of ruining their efficiency and making yourself expense by wiping off the wafers of thin "cemented on" glass.

EVERY TIME—
You wipe Kryptok double vision lenses you make them brighter and better. You cannot—mind, you cannot—wipe off a wafer because there is no wafer to wipe off.

EVERY TIME—
You see a person wearing "cemented on" bifocal lenses, the lines say "Over forty if a day." The absence of lines in Kryptoks makes you think the wearer under forty.

EVERY TIME—
Someone looks at you they'll think the same. With our complete line of up-to-date Flager Mounts and Spectacles we can make your glasses look well and your eyes see well.

By JACK LONDON

Sheldon retraced his steps.

"Never mind," he said. "You can go sailing on the Martha any time you please—recruiting on Malaita if you want to."

It was a great concession he was making, and he felt that he did it against his better judgment. Her reception of it was a surprise to him.

"With old Kinross in command?" she queried. "No, thank you. He'd drive me to suicide. I couldn't stand his handling of her. It would give me nervous prostration. I'll never step on the Martha again, unless it is to take charge of her. I'm a sailor, like my father, and he could never bear to see a vessel mishandled. Did you see the way Kinross got under way? It was disgraceful. And the noise he made about it! Old Noah did better with the Ark."

"But we manage to get somewhere just the same," he smiled.

So did Noah."

"That was the main thing."

"For an antediluvian."

"You are a slovenly lot down here when it comes to boats — most of you are, anyway. Christian Young is all right though, Munster has a slap-dash style about him, and they do say old Nielsen was a cracker-jack. But with the rest I've seen, there's no dash, no go, no cleverness, no real sailor's pride. It's all humdrum, and podgy, and slow-going, any going so long as you get there heaven knows when. But some day I'll show you how the Martha should be handled. I'll break out anchor and get under way in a speed and style that will make your head hum; and I'll bring her alongside the wharf at Guvutu without dropping anchor and running a line."

She came to a breathless pause, and then broke into laughter directed, he could see, against herself.

"No!" she cried, incredulously, swiftly looking, then running for the telescope.

She regarded the manoeuvre steadily through the glass, and Sheldon, watching her face could see that the skipper was not making a success of it.

She finally lowered the glass with a groan.

"He's made a mess of it," she said, "and now he's trying it over again. And a man like that is put in charge of a fairy like the Martha. Well, it's a good argument against marriage, that's all. No, I won't look any more. Come on in and play a steady, conservative game of billiards with me. And after that I'm going to saddle up and go after pigeons. Will you come along?"

An hour later, just as they were riding out of the compound, Joan turned in the saddle for a last look at the Martha, a distant speck well over toward the Florida coast.

"Won't Tudor be surprised when he finds we own the Martha?" she laughed. "Think of it! If he doesn't strike pay-dirt he'll have to buy a steamer passage to get away from the Solomons".

Still laughing gayly, she rode through the gate. But suddenly her laughter broke flatly and she reined in the mare. Sheldon glanced at her sharply, and noted her face mottling even as he looked, and turning orange and green.

"It's the fever," she said. "I'll have to turn back."

By the time they were in the compound she was shivering and shaking, and he had to help her from her horse.

"Funny, isnt it?" she said with chattering teeth. "Like seasickness—not serious, but horribly miserable while it lasts. I'm going to bed. Send Noa Noah and Visburi to me. Tell Ornafri to make hot water. I'll be out of my head in fifteen minutes. But I'll be all right by evening. Short and sharp is the way it takes me. Too bad to lose the shooting. Thank you, I'm all right."

Sheldon obeyed her instructions, rushed hot-water bottles along to her and then sat on the veranda, vainly tring to interest himself in a two-months' old file of Sydney newspapers. He kept glancing up and across the compound to the grass house. Yes, he decided, the contention of every white man in the islands was right; the Solomons was no place for a woman.

He clapped his hands and Lalapuru came running.

"Here, you!" he ordered; "go along barracks; bring 'm black fella Mary, plenty too much, altogether."

A few minutes later the dozen black women of Berande were ranged before him. He looked them over critically, finally selecting one that was young, comely as such creatures went, and whose body bore no signs of skin disease.

"What name, you!" he demanded. "Sangui?"

"Me Mahua," was the answer.

"All right, you fella Mahua. You finish cook along boys. You stop along white Mary. All the time you stop along. You savvee?"

"Me savvee," she grunted, and obeyed his gesture to go to the grass house immediately.

"What name?" he asked Visburi, who had just come out of the grass house.

"Big fella sick," was the answer. "White fella Mary talk 'm too much allee time. Allee time talk 'm big fella schooner."

Sheldon nodded. He understood. It was the loss of the Martha that had brought on the fever. The fever would have some sooner or later, he knew; but her disappointment had precipitated it. He lighted a cigarette, and in the curling smoke of it caught visions of his English mother and wondered if she would understand how her son could love a woman who cried because she could not be skipper of a schooner in the cannibal isles.

CHAPTER XX

A Man-Talk.

The most patient man in the world is prone to impatince in love; and Sheldon was in love. He called himself an ass a score of times a day, and strove to contain himself by directing his mind in other channels; but more than a score of times each day his thoughts roved back and dwelt on Joan. It was a pretty problem she presented, and he was continually debating with himself as to what was the best way to approach her.

He was not an adept at love-making. He had had but one experience in the gentle art, in which he had been more wooed than wooing; and the affair had profited him little. This was another affair, and he assured himself continually that it was a uniquely different and difficult affair. Not only was here a woman who was not bent on finding a husband, but it was a woman who was not a woman at all; who was genuinely appalled by the thought of a husband; who joyed in boys' games and sentimentalized over such things as adventure; who was healthy, and normel, and wholesome, and who was so immature that a husband stood for nothing more than an encumbrance in her cherished scheme of existence.

But how to approach her? He divined the fanatical love of freedom in her, the deep-seated antipathy for restraint of any sort. No man could ever put his arm around her and win her. She would flutter away like a frightened bird. Approach by contact — that, he realized, was the one thing he must never do! His hand-clasp must be what it had always been, the hand-clasp of hearty friendship and nothing more. Never, by action, must he advertise his feeling for her. Remained speech. But what speech? Appeal to her love? But she did not love him. Appeal to her brain. All the deliciousness and fineness of a finely bred woman was hers, but, for all he could discern, her mental processes were sexless and boyish. And yet speech it must be, for a beginning had to be made, somewhere, some time. Her mind must be made accustomed to the idea, her thoughts turned upon the matter of marriage.

And so he rode overseeing about the plantation with tightly drawn and puckered brows, pushing over the problem and steeling himself to the first attempt. A dozen ways he planned an intricate leading-up to the first breaking of the ice, and each time some link in the chain snapped and the talk went off on unexpected and irrelevant lines. And then, one morning quite fortuitously, the opportunity came.

"My dearest wish is the success of Berande," Joan had just said, apropos of a discussion about the cheapening of freights on copra to market.

"Do you mind if I tell you the dearest wish of my heart?" he promptly returned. "I long for it. I dream about it. it is my dearest desire."

He paused and looked at her with intent significance; but it was plain to him that she thought there was nothing more at issue than mutual confidences about things in general.

"Yes, go ahead," she said, a trifle impatient at his delay.

"I love to think of the success of Berande," he said. "But that is secondary. It is subordinate to the dearest wish, which is that some day you will share Berande with me in a completer way than that of mere business partnership. It is for you, some day, when you are ready, to be my wife."

She started back from him as if she had been stung. Her face went white on the instant, not from maidenly embarrassment, but from the anger which he could see flaming in her eyes.

"This taking for granted!—this when I am ready!" she cried passionately. Then her voice swiftly became cold and steady, and she talked in the way he imagined she must have talked business with Morgan and Raff at Guvutu. "Listen to me, Mr. Sheldon. I like you very well, though you are slow and a muddler: but I want you to understand, once and for all, that I did not come to the Solomons to get married. That is an affliction I could have accumulated at home without sailing ten thousand miles after it. I have my own way to make in the world, and I came to the Solomons to do it. Getting married is not making my way in the world. It may do for some women, but not for me, thank you. When I sit down to talk over the freight on copra, I don't care to have proposals of marriage sandwiched in. Besides—besides—"

Her voice broke for the moment, and when she went on, there was a note of appeal in it that wellnigh convicted him to himself of being a brute.

"Don't you see?—it spoils everything. It makes the whole situation impossible—and—and I so loved our partnership and was proud of it. Don't you see?—I can't go on being your partner if you make love to me. And I was so happy."

Tears of dissappointment were in her eyes, and she caught a swift sob in her throat.

"I warned you," he said gravely. "Such unusual situations between men and women cannot endure. I told you so at the beginning."

"Oh, yes; it is quite clear to me what you did." She was angry again and the feminine appeal had disappeared. "You were very discreet in your warning. You took good care to warn me against every other man in the Solomons except yourself."

It was a blow in the face to Sheldon. He smarted with the truth of it, and at the same time he smarted with what he was convinced was the injustice of it. A gleam of triumph that flickered in her eye because of the hit she had made, decided him.

Baby Eczema For Three Years

Three Doctors and Scores of Treatments Failed

The Dreadful Itching Was Stopped and the Sores Healed by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Here is an illustration of the wonderful control which Dr. Chase's Ointment has over torturing, itching eczema. By its soothing influence it stops the itching, and it heals the sores as if by magic.

Mrs. W m.Miller, St. Catharines, Ont., writes:—"My daughter Mary, when six months old, contracted eczema, and for three years the disease baffled all treatment. Her case was one of the worst that had ever come under my notice, and she apparently suffered what no pen could ever describe. I had three different doctors attend her, all to no purpose whatever, and all kinds of balms, soaps and lotions were tried, with no results. Finally I decided to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and to my surprise she immediately began to improve, and was completely cured of that long-standing disease. That was four years ago, when we lived at Cornwall, Ont., and as not a symptom has shown itself since, the cure must be permanent. With a grateful heart I give this testimony to the great value of Dr. Chase's Ointment."

In scores of ways Dr. Chase's Ointment is useful in every home to allay skin irritations and heal and cure sores, wounds and ulcers. 60 cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

WHAT I WENT THROUGH

Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Natick, Mass.—"I cannot express what I went through during the change of life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. My limbs were cold, I had creepy sensations, and I could not sleep nights. I was finally told by two physicians that I also had a tumor. I read one day of the wonderful cures made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it had worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish my letter."—Mrs. NATHAN B. GREATOR, 51 N. Main Street, Natick, Mass.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

FOR SATURDAY
AUGUST 6, 1911.
(Copyright ,1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Jeremiah Tried and Acquitted.—Jer. xxvi.

Golden Text—The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?—Ps. xxvii., 1

1. Verses 1-6—What was the character of Jehoiakim, also of Josiah, his father?

2. To whom did the word of the Lord come?

3. How did God probably speak to Jeremiah?

4. May all persons to-day, with the goodness and ability of Jeremiah, hear the voice of the Lord as distinctly as he did?

5. What was the message which the Lord gave Jeremiah to deliver?

6. If the people had repented at the command of the Lord, would the kingdom of Judah have been preserved?

7. Why can there be no escape for sinners from the just punishment of their sins, unless they repent?

8. Verses 7-10—How do you account for it that the priests and the prophets wanted to kill Jeremiah for delivering the message that God had given him?

9. If a professional priest, or preacher, is backslidden and living in sin, why is he apt to be more cruel to a faithful preacher of righteousness than an ordinary sinner?

10. From the days of Jesus until now, by whom have the martyrs been put to death, or, admittedly men of God, expelled from the churches?

11. Which are the more cruel to those who rebuke them—men who under cover of religion are doing wrong, or outstanding sinners such, for example, as gamblers?

12. Verses 11-12—Did these priests and pupphets, who wanted to put Jeremiah to death for preaching the truth, believe that he was wrong and they right: or knowing he was right, want to get rid of him for exposing their sins?

13. What qualities did Jeremiah possess which are essential to all who obey God in rebuking sin?

14. Must a good man always rebuke what he knows to be wrong, no matter how much danger it may involve himself? Give your reasons.

15. Is it the lack of knowledge that they are wrong, or something else, which causes people to remain in sin?

16. Verses 13-15—Do you know of any Bible threat against sinners, that is not associated with a promise of forgiveness on repentance?

17. Is it possible for a good man to die, or be put to death, before his work is done? Why?

18. Verses 16-24—The priests and the prophets are the accusers of Jeremiah and want to put him to death, and the princes and the people appear to be the judge and jury; what was their verdict and upon what was it based?

19. Is it safe in these days to trust the people to decide moral issues?

20. What were the two historic incidents mentioned as precedents for the acquittal of Jeremiah?

21. What has been the fate in the past of true and courageous prophets, and how are they treated to-day?

22. Which is better, to faithfully do the will of God at the expense of our lives, or to dodge His will and save our lives?

Lesson for Sunday, August 13, 1911—Jehoiakim Burns the Prophet's Book.—Jer. xxxvi.

Get the "EXAMINER" in Your Home

This furnace is built to keep gas, dust and smoke out of the house.

No matter how cozy your home, an odor of gas, however slight, is unpleasant and sometimes dangerous.

The health of your whole house demands a furnace that will give pure warm air without gas or dust.

Gas cannot escape from a "Hecla" Furnace. Every place where experience has shown that gas might otherwise find an opening has been made absolutely tight by our Patent Fused Joint.

"Hecla" Furnace

The "Hecla" has other safeguards against gas. The cast iron Combustion Chamber will not burn through and allow fumes from the fire to pass into the house.

The air jets in the door assure proper burning of any surplus gas.

The 'Hecla' Saves One Ton of Coal In Seven

How steel ribs added to the "Hecla" Fire Pot make this saving is told in our booklet "Comfort & Health."

GET THIS BOOKLET

It tells how to get heat for a minimum cost.

THE FUSED JOINT

In the "Hecla" the steel and iron of the radiators are fused by our patented process to the cast iron plates at the top and bottom. This process welds the steel and iron into one piece, making an inseparable joint—one that cannot spread with the heat, and one that has proven perfectly gas and dust proof, even after years of service.

KIT'S COLUMN

Old Michael Fraser's money has been taken from him and his wife by the law; that is, the law is taking care of it for him and incidentally lining its own huge pocket. All "in the interests of humanity," which ought to be grateful. The outspoken old Irishman has certainly had his basket of linen washed for him in public. He remains, not insane, but incompetent, the victim of senile decay which entails loss of memory and indifference to property. Extremely hard has been the public verdict on Mrs. Fraser. She has suffered abuse and humiliation—deservedly, you may say, and there may be some little truth in it, but "the little girl" has her good side. She has been an honest and faithful wife. She has done more for the old man than any of his so-called friends would ever have done. She keeps him clean and sound and sane, and if ever anyone was entitled to reward for work of that sort, she is. The old man was doped with drugs and made silly with whiskey. Miss Robertson was not the only spinster who wished to find at once a mate and a well-feathered nest. Her marriage may well be called amazing, but I question whether it was not the best thing that happened to old Michael Fraser in all his long hard-working, honest life. Many and many a single woman of her class would have done exactly as Margaret Robertson. Of course this will be vehemently denied, but the marriage of a young woman to an old man for his money is too commonplace a feature of everyday life, either high or low, to be gainsaid. Some there are who argue that it was not the fact of the marriage, but "the nasty way she did it." that has so disgusted them. What other way could she, or could anyone do it? And she may have thought it a pity that so good-hearted a man should be left in the hands of hirelings, and we know she certainly has taken the best of care of him since. I consider that old Michael Fraser was lucky in getting her, and no doubt, in his dim mind, some such thought wanders.

The three justices gave the only possible verdict according to the testimony which he who ran could read, but they seemed to be unduly hard on this young woman. Not on her head should all the blame be placed. What more natural than that she should try to control her husband's money instead of letting him sign checks for anyone who asked? After all she is his wife and has her rights. She has acted throughout with reticence and dignity and an eye out for the main chance. And wouldn't you do the same? Of course everybody knows you would not, dear young lady, marry anyone merely for his money, much less would you abduct an old man from his bed-chamber and stand him up in the early morning to marry you with your sister's wedding ring. All the same I believe old Michael Fraser's "little girl" cares for him as well as looks after him, and that he is fond of her, and much better off than he would be without her.

There is some talk of an appeal from the judgment. That is a pity, for it will only result in the dissipation of all the money down the maw of the law, and none of the "friends and relations" will get any benefit of it. One thing ought to be remembered—that Margaret Robertson is now Margaret Fraser; and is legally entitled to her share. And I have little doubt that her husband, had he all his senses about him, would agree to let her share equally with him all that he is worth, and moreover would leave her everything he possessed were he capable of making a will that would stand. The end, however, of this interesting case is not yet.

Jardine, of Goderich, had not half a chance. To those who care for humanity and human progress, the story told of this youth's execution was as disheartening as it was sordid. His brother and uncle drinking at an hotel in the town, and quarrelling in their cups on the eve of the wretched lad's shocking end: the apparent indifference of his nearest relations, the brutal fact that one brother was at a ball game the day before, and that another cried out jocosely when he heard the trap sprung—these, with the fact that the boy had not been baptized until the night before his death, prove how much need there is for home missions. Why not let the Jews alone to reverence their stately and venerable religion in their own way without pressing upon them religious attentions which they abhor, and are, for all we know, better off without it, and turn our attention to the youth of our own race and religion who, judging from recent revelations, are growing up without faith or morals? What chance had Jardine to be a good boy? No one directed this weakling towards what was sound and sane and decent. He was left to work out the problem of his being for himself, without counsel or advice or warning. He had no chance from the beginning. What wonder he ended where he did in a shameful death on a beautiful summer day, leaving behind him not one gracious memory that a mother can use to console her heart, leaving merely a futile, ungrammatical, pitiful little screed urging all boys to be good and go to church and Sunday school. Poor young creature, sprouting like an ill weed in the garden of humanity and like an ill weed uprooted and cast aside? And this in Canada, with our churches and free schools and gabble about "our century," our prosperity and progress and ambitions? We send round the hat for the "converting" of the honest pagan or the intellectual Jew and utterly neglect the young of our own race until with outcry and denunciation we send him to be hanged by the neck till he is dead for committing crime against that society or a community which should have taught him and guarded him and helped him. Alas! What shall any one of us answer when we are asked the whereabouts of our brother?

Whether you be a suffragette or not you can hardly help offering a meed of admiration for the intense perseverance of the women who started the movement and are so well maintaining it. I believe women will get the vote and that it will be a splendid thing for humanity all round. That this is woman's age none can deny. She is more considered than she has ever been, and—she is listened to. British women living in the "seagirt isles" need adjustment of many things which deal intimately with them. They need "rights" against the grievous wrongs under which as married women they suffer. They need proper legal status, and I think they are going to have it, and I hope they will. The coronation parade of suffragists embraced in its ranks some of the brainiest, brightest, most cultured women in the world. When fifty thousand women take up a thing and fight for it by pen and word—and I may even add sword—they are going to get it. All too long have women been called "weak," "fickle," "inconsistent," and other foolish things like that. In fact, for ages woman's natural character has been wrongly summed up. I would—merely as an onlooker — delineate woman's nature as curiously steadfast, surprisingly strong, absolutely determined and capable of astonishing development, and until lately a nature unconscious of its own strength and power. You cannot discourage a woman when she has firmly fixed her mind and soul and brain on the attainment of an object. Ridicule runs off her like water off feathers. Abuse she hears not. Her patience—thanks to the maternal instincts and qualities which are at rock bottom of her being—her patience is infinitely enduring and her perseverance matches her patience. My admiration for her—again merely as an onlooker—increases every day. A little illustration will serve my purpose as showing woman's capabilities and business sense, and may not be inappropriate here. Not long since the writer had occasion to deal in a purely business fashion with a number of editors of both sexes. In every case the woman editor was more prompt in answering, in deciding, and in quickly understanding the proposals laid before her. Her reply came by return post; those of the men concerned—in all but three or four instances—dribbled in after a week or more of waiting, and then they asked questions, and then some. All the small details were instantly understood by the women editors, who were prompt, accurate and of a blessed understanding, and I take off my hat to them every time I think of them.

You and I, friend, may elect to withdraw in our small boats to the back-waters of life and observe things from our quiet coign of vantage, but that should not prevent us from cheering, sturdily and long, the brave fleet of valiant women which is sailing down the broad river of life with banners of hope for all women and for the little children spread to the wide winds of heaven.

"Don't you feel it a great responsibility, being the eldest son?" the young prince of Wales was asked by a naval cadet "chum" after he made his maiden speech at Bristol the other day.

"Well, I don't know about that," answered "Sardines." "I never thought of it that way. It's always seemed to me great luck to be born the eldest because you haven't got to wear any of your brother's old clothes."

It was he, too, who answered the late King at luncheon one day. The little chap had been chattering too much, and King Edward told him the old sad story we've all heard, that little boys should be seen and not heard. When the King had finished his salad he told the boy that he could speak. "It's too late now," said the little Prince. "I wanted to tell you there was a slug in your salad. And now you've eaten him."

You Can't Leave the Beard Behind

So Don't Forget the Gillette

The hearty open-air vacation life seems to makes the beard grow as it never grows at home. To the man without a GILLETTE it becomes a downright nuisance.

Cleanliness, comfort and self-respect demand the morning shave. But boats, trains, summer resorts and camps provide scant shaving facilities.

That never worries the man with a GILLETTE Safety Razor in his grip or his pocket. In lurching cabin or swaying Pullman—on the back porch or beside a convenient stump—wherever the morning finds him—he can enjoy his regular three-minute GILLETTE shave in solid comfort, with a lordly independence of place or circumstance.

Pack your grip with discrimination. Travel light. Leave out the "unnecessaries" of life. But whatever you do, don't discount your holiday by starting out without "The Razor of To-day."

LONDON VERDICT ON BIGGER FEET—'YES'

Women of England, Too, Are Now Obliged to Wear the Large Sized Shoe.

CHATS WITH DEALERS

The Men Who Know Tell of the Increase in Size and Have Good Reasons to Advance.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THAT the women of the present generation have larger feet than their mothers, which, according to cabled dispatches received in London, was the unanimous finding of the National Conference of American Shoe Manufacturers, is something of a surprise to society people, but not to their shoemakers. They have known it for a long time, but kept a discreet silence on the question. Now the truth is out, they are not loath to admit it.

The manager of Messrs. Seeden Brooks, shoemakers to the King and royal family, in King street, St. James', said:—"It is quite true that women are buying bigger shoes nowadays, and that is easily accounted for. The modern girl is much taller than her mother and grandmother. That is the result of the athletic exercises, the outdoor sports and generally healthier life she leads. See the ladies who are our customers. They all belong to the upper classes, and they are all tall. So you cannot expect a tall woman to wear a small shoe. The day of the twos and threes in shoes is gone, and I should say that fours are more generally used for small women, while tall women wear sizes that run up to sevens and nines.

"Let me put it in another way. If you examine the feet of a domestic servant you will note that as a rule they are broad, the natural result of the amount of rough work she has to do. So it has become with the modern girl. She does so much standing on foot that naturally her feet have grown larger and she requires more comfortable shoes, and our ladies will no longer buy a shoe that has the least tendency to pinch."

Mr. Francis Bauer, of Nos. 40 and 41 Burlington Arcade, is another shoemaker whose chief business is supplying footwear to English society women. He and his assistant showed much interest in the subject, and they agreed that the statements made at the American convention were quite correct, the latter remarking:—

"My experience is that English ladies' feet are bigger than the feet of American women. We do not stock anything less than [illegible] nowadays. Indeed, young women of eighteen to twenty-five years take sizes of six and seven, whereas their mothers were as small as two and three. But it does not follow that because the girl of to-day is taller and bigger than her ancestors and that her feet are larger and developed by the amount of outdoor exercise in which she indulges that they are less beautiful. On the contrary, the feet of the present generation are more symmetrical than they used to be. We have a customer who wears sevens and her feet are really beautiful. Another wears nines, and her feet are absolutely perfect in shape."

Mr. J. C. Hitchcock, manager of the Walkover Shoe Company, which is an American firm, in Regent street, agreed on all the points referred to as to size of women's footwear.

"My experience," he said, "is that the woman of to-day is becoming more sensible in regard to her footwear. Unlike the woman of yesterday, who did not care if a shoe pinched, if it looked small and neat, the woman of to-day insists on comfort. And she gets neatness as well. That is what the American manufacturer has done for women. It is not so much the custom for women to dress and say they wear such and such a shoe. They leave the matter to us, and they are ready satisfied with a comfortable and neat shoe."

The manager of the American Shoe Company, No. 109 Regent street, said:—"Most of our business is in large sizes. The twos and the fours of even five years ago are seldom if ever required. Of course the make of shoes has greatly improved. With short vamps and the improved Cuban heel we can make sevens long as small as fives. In fact all sizes now look two sizes smaller than they used to do. That explains a great deal. The making of shoes has become a fine art, mainly due to the improvements effected by American makers, whose methods and style are being copied by home English and French makers. The day of the narrow pointed French shoe has gone, and comfort combined with neatness is insisted upon."

NIGHT VESSEL LINE FOR FLUSHING TRIP

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

A COMPANY has been formed, called the Anglo-Flushing steamship line, for the purpose of running night vessels between London and Flushing, and a beginning is to be made with two steamships of 1,000 tons.

They will start from London Bridge, thus saving a tedious railway journey to Tilbury. From Flushing special trains will carry passengers direct to Paris or Brussels. The journey by this route will occupy about thirteen hours, but the idea of the promoters is not the saving of time but the securing of comfort, as the boats, leaving centre of London, will do railway journey, leaving from steamer to rail.

London Hears the Duke of Sutherland Will Dispose of Crown Lease of Stafford House

STAFFORD HOUSE FROM THE GARDENS

This Splendid Mansion, Built as a Dwelling for the Duke of York, Second Son of George III., Although He Did Not Live to Inhabit It, Is One of the Most Palatial of All of the London Residences.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THERE is talk that the Duke of Sutherland is contemplating the sale of the remainder of the Crown lease of Stafford House, one of the most historical and certainly the most palatial old house in London. The mansion was built as a residence for the Duke of York, second son of George III., and was known at first as York House; but the Prince did not live to inhabit it, and after his death in 1827 the Crown lease was sold to the Marquis of Stafford, who was created Duke of Sutherland. This Duke spent an enormous sum in adding the upper story and the interior decorations. It is estimated that over $3,500,000 have been spent on the fabric of the house since it was acquired by the family which has made it famous all over the world.

Americans, according to the reports of the house agents at the end of this season, never showed so much desire to rent furnished houses or flats as they have done this year. They seem to be finding out that they can make themselves more comfortable in a house than in a hotel—that is to say, if they are to be stopping in London for a couple of months or more.

"A certain set of Americans are getting into the habit of coming to London each spring for 'the season,'" said a big estate agent who understands the market well. "Many who used to take apartments in a large hotel have of late begun to take private houses for eight or twelve weeks. Now it is becoming the general thing for an American to take a house instead of going to a hotel. We find that the Americans like English establishments. They are surprised that the English owners are willing to risk their heirlooms in the care of strangers. They say that it is a pleasure to run an establishment where every servant, from the butler to the scullery maid, is an expert in his or her special line."

Mr. John Hays Hammond, special American Ambassador to the coronation, occupied Mr. Burdett-Coutts' residence, in Piccadilly during his stay in London. The American Ambassador's daughter, the Honorable Mrs. John Ward, rented the London residence of the Marquis of Bristol, at No. 6 St. James' square.

Other Americans who availed themselves of private residences were Mr. Julius Rosenwald, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, who took a residence in Belgrave Park; Mrs. Walter Parwell, also of Chicago, took a house in Grosvenor square. Mr. William Crocker, of San Francisco, president of the San Francisco World's Fair, rented a house in New Cavendish street. Mrs. James Henry Smith leased a house in Grosvenor square.

Queen Mary has not been really resting since the termination of the coronation tour through Ireland, Wales and Scotland. She did not accompany the King to Goodwood, it is true, but she has been engaged looking into a number of things she likes to do for herself. For instance, she keeps her own personal accounts, and balances every sheet with the precision of a chartered accountant, and she has taught her only daughter to do the same.

At the end of every week Princess Mary comes along with her "expense book," in which is inscribed everything she has spent of her allowance. Queen Mary adds the figures to see that they are correct, which they usually are for the young Princess has a "head" for arithmetic. Nevertheless, she is not to waste much time over it, for her royal mother believes there is no necessity for a girl in her position to learn to do difficult sums.

There is talk in court circles that King George, who believes in economy, or at least a judicious expenditure of his money, will dispense with the services of some of the "Silver Greyhounds," as the Foreign Service messengers are called, for most of their work can be done as expeditiously through the ordinary post. In King Edward's reign they were requisitioned considerably, owing to the fact that his health necessitated his spending so much time on the Continent, and it was often well that a verbal message should accompany a despatch.

The Silver Greyhounds wear a broad silver disk which is stamped with a greyhound in full gallop, surmounted with a crown. These men are entrusted with the most delicate duties. The chief qualification for the post is a knowledge of the gentle art of "holding your tongue in several languages"—a definition given by Lord Palmerston to a friend who applied to him for the office of Silver Greyhound.

Prince Christian, after the turmoil of an unusually busy season, has once more settled down at Windsor, where he is the most popular personage. It is impossible to believe that he is an octogenarian. He is very upright, and rides his horse with rather better grace than younger men. Wherever he goes he is welcome, and the royal employes in Windsor Great Park, of which he is ranger, and the people of Windsor simply love him. His Royal Highness and the Princess are credited with knowing all of the staff of the Park and their children.

Princess Louise, the daughter of Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, is one whose name is almost every day associated with some work of philanthropy. She is a familiar figure in every hospital in London, and she knows the wards of at least one as well as the matron herself. As for her knowledge of prisons, she laughingly explained at a church meeting recently that she was as intimately acquainted with their workings and their rules as any of the prisoners.

A poor coster who stole a wheelbarrow once asked her to have tea with him when he finished his term. She kept her word and was introduced to his wife in a damp, dark cellar in Bermondsey, the only seat in the room being her chair, the only furniture a bed and a kettle, the other tea accessories having been borrowed for the occasion.

The Princess lives in South Kensington in an unpretentious house, and she tells her friends that her choice of vehicle is an omnibus, in which she may be seen every other day when she is in London going via South Kensington to Whitechapel or some other standard.

Irish Folk Plays To Be Presented in America

Lady Gregory, Coming Across with William Butler Yeats, to Supervise Productions of Liebler & Co., Chats of the Merits of the Dramas and the Artistic Aims in View.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

LADY GREGORY, who, with Mr. William Butler Yeats, is to go to America to supervise the production of the Irish Folk plays that will be presented under the management of Messrs. Liebler & Co. next fall, believes that the visit of the artists of the Abbey Theatre Company will be gloriously successful, but evidently fears that Irish politics may have some effect upon the support to be given to the company by some of the Irish in America.

"We are not politicians and have kept clear of politics," said Lady Gregory, "because it is hard to go in for politics in Ireland and keep up our artistic independence. 'Kathleen Ni Houlihan' and 'The Rising of the Moon' were criticised by the unionists because the plays were accounted nationalist. On the other hand, some of the nationalists thought 'The Playboy of the West' didn't give a sufficiently harmless and engaging picture of the Irish to indicate they could be safely trusted with home rule.

"Our choice of play is based simply upon the quality of a play, not because it is elevating or for any other reason than that it has real dramatic merit. More and more are coming in; our school of dramatists is 'coming on.' Wherever we go a crop of dramatists springs up. Irish genius is now turning toward drama as its expression, and does not develop in the direction of novels, as in England.

"I began to write plays because I was a great admirer of Mr. Yeats' verse plays. When it was found that audiences would not listen to verse for a whole evening some one had to write some comedy for the sake of contrast. Probably the most successful of my comedies have been 'The Rising of the Moon,' 'Hyacinth Halvey' and 'The Workhouse Ward.'"

"Are you planning to go on writing plays?" I asked.

"Yes, as long as I have the ability, but I have already had two of the three warnings foretold by Dobson—rheumatism and a grandson.

"As to the much discussed 'Playboy,' which we are to introduce to America, I have a good deal of sympathy with the honest objectors to it, but none at all with the organization of a group of men, armed with tin trumpets, who in Dublin attempted to prevent other members of the audience from hearing it at all."

In speaking of Lady Gregory, Mr. Bernard Shaw, after referring to her as "the nurse of the Irish National Theatre," said that "no dramatist living or dead has shown the gift of the born playwright—the gift of Moliere—more unmistakably than Lady Gregory."

Difficult to Get King on Wire

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

Although His Majesty's telephone number, "332 Westminster," can be duly rung up by any of his subjects, it does not follow that they will be able to speak to King George direct. As a matter of fact, the arrangements in the palace make it impossible for any one casually to call up His Majesty for a friendly chat. As the writer of an interesting article on the telephone at Buckingham Palace, published in the Morning Leader, however, remarks, all the high functionaries, from Lord Knollys upward, to say nothing of minor officials and servants, are in touch with His Majesty, who can speak to them in their own apartments or private residences.

Every lady and gentleman of the royal household, every functionary, can be reached in a twinkling. Then there are, of course, private lines to Marlborough House, St. James' Palace and York House. Even the schoolroom of Buckingham Palace is "on the wire."

There are three fifty line switchboards in Buckingham Palace. Two are used for the day service and one for night purposes, and during the twenty-four hours the staff works in shifts. The transfer of the lines from the day to the night service is accomplished by means of a change over switch, either in the palace post office or the palace itself.

The King possesses an extension from the switchboard to his private apartments, and, in addition, His Majesty has a private exchange line to Lady Princess Mary also enjoys; she can his own apartments. This is used for special communications of a private nature in connection with state affairs.

Queen Mary has a private line and also an exchange line. The latter facilitates converse with her parents or with the occupants of the school room. Miss Knollys has a telephone in her sitting room, from which she can converse with Queen Mary or Queen Alexandra.

DISPUTE OVER THE COMMUNION CUP

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE English clergy and the medical profession are at variance with regard to the alleged danger of communication of disease by means of the chalice at Holy Communion. It is an old subject, which has been revived again and again, but Dr. Marcus Paterson, medical superintendent of the Brompton Hospital Sanitarium, has brought it to public notice once more in an address which he delivered on the educative value of sanatoria.

"The chalice," he said, "is one source of infection, especially as many people who keep away from church when they are well go there when they are ill."

This statement has brought the clergy down on him. The Rev. A. H. Stanton, of St. Albans, Holborn, on being asked what he thought about the matter, said:—

"I believe the suggestions put forward at the tuberculosis conference were without any practical foundation as regards the communion cup. I have never heard of any clergyman who actually got consumption by partaking of the wine that remained in the chalice which had been handed round to communicants. I should even regard the wiping of the cup immediately after a communicant had used it as nothing short of profanation."

This seems to be the general view of the clergy, none being ready to admit that they ever knew of any case of consumption being traceable to the chalice.

But medical opinion favors Dr. Paterson. Medical men always make a stipulation when interviewed that their names must not be published, but one noted physician said in reply to a question:—

"Unquestionably there is serious danger in taking of sacramental wine. It is notorious that the mouth harbors germs freely. These are transferred to the outer edge of the cup and are directly communicable to those who use the cup afterward. There is a danger of spreading consumption by this means and also of communicating skin disorders. In fact, it would be true to say broadly that any infectious disease can be communicated in this way."

"There is undoubtedly great danger in the practice," said another, "and I think the clergy should try and exercise some sort of supervision over those who commune. Consumptives should not be allowed to take the communion in public. It is for the Church to decide what measures it can adopt in accordance with ecclesiastical law to prevent the present insanitary practice."

RECTOR GRINDS AN ORGAN FOR MONEY

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE Parish of St. George's, in the East End, is so poor, and the rector, the Rev. F. St. John Corbett, has been so distracted to get enough money for the maintenance of his church and to help the poor of his parish that he has struck upon a novel method of "raising the wind" which looks like proving successful. He and his curate have begun playing a piano organ at garden parties, fairs, anywhere at all where they may earn a little money.

The rector was busy turning the handle of his organ at a garden fete which he had organized when a correspondent asked him about it.

"You see," he said, "we live in one of the poorest parishes in England. It costs at least £6,000 a year to do the least we can do, and I want very much more than the least. But from subscriptions we get only £1,600 a year at the outside; so there is nothing left for us but to get the money ourselves. Fairs, plays, entertainments of any sort at all that are clean we go in for. We have more souls to deal with than in most parishes. To do our work we must have money, and get money we will, even if Mr. Iselen, my curate, and I have to grind the organ day and night."

SHORT CLAY PIPES AN AID TO CANCER

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

ONE of the interesting statements in Dr. E. F. Bashford's report to the Imperial Cancer Research Fund is that peculiar customs render persons especially liable to cancer. Dr. Bashford mentions specifically the practice of eating very hot rice in China, the use of kangri in Kashmir and the chewing of betel nut.

It is not only in the East, however, that customs conducive to cancer prevail. Inquiring at the laboratories of the Imperial Cancer Research Fund a correspondent was told that the smoking of clay pipes was one danger.

"Such pipes get very hot and the clay often sticks to the lips," it was stated. "Any smoker who wishes to run the least possible risk of this dread disease should taboo such pipes, especially short ones.

"Alcoholic excess which may lead to irritation of the stomach is another practice which introduces the risk of cancer. Curries and highly seasoned food generally, if taken habitually, are also a source of danger.

"There are trades which render the workers more liable than usual to cancer. The workman who runs most risk is the chimney sweep, whose body is covered with soot. Unless the sweep is extremely careful to keep his skin thoroughly clean the aniline products in the soot will cause irritation, which may end in cancer.

"In the same way workers in aniline factories run considerable risk, and all persons who make use of X-rays are particularly liable to cancer."

CROWHURST PLACE FOR A DUCHESS

Ancient Manor House in Sussex Has Been Bought by Duchess of Marlborough.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE Duchess of Marlborough has just purchased the lease of a famous old manor house in Sussex known as Crowhurst place. It is not far from Battle-cum and near the junction of the three counties of Kent, Surrey and Sussex. Mr. George Crawley, of No. 1 Cadogan terrace, from whom she bought the property, acquired it about nine years ago and has since used it as a country seat. He relinquishes possession to the Duchess on September 1.

The house is very old, dating to the Norman times. It was originally a fortified stone manor house, not quite big enough to be termed a castle. The moat is still preserved around it and kept filled with water, but the drawbridge, if there ever was one, has disappeared. The moat is now crossed by a substantial stone bridge and a long, shaky wooden structure of modern times.

The lands of the manor have been gradually sold off till now there are only about twenty acres belonging to Crowhurst. The lease which the Duchess of Marlborough has bought has twenty-one years to run. At the back of the house there is a very fine Italian garden, while the lawns and old trees are of the usual type of English perfection.

Crowhurst has had many vicissitudes. For about two hundred years it fell from its proud position as a manor house and was occupied by peasants and small farmers. During that time it not only fell considerably into ruin, but the beauties of its interior construction were covered up and seriously marred. When Mr. Crawley took it he had taken out more than twenty tons of plaster, wall paper and temporary woodwork. Beautifully panelled ceilings and walls had been covered over with plaster and cheap wall paper stuck on. In the great high hall a flooring had been built to make two stories of it. The age of the house can be proved by the fact that it was built before chimneys were in use. Fires were lighted on a big stone hearth in the middle of the room, while a hole in the roof above allowed the smoke to escape. Mr. Crawley restored and retained these old features, but naturally equipped the manor with modern comforts and conveniences. The Duchess of Marlborough will doubtless do much more in the same line to make the manor thoroughly suitable to her use.

Crowhurst is about thirty miles from Sunderland House, the Duchess of Marlborough's town residence in Curzon street. The road after leaving London is very pretty and a favorite one with automobilists.

BRITISH REPORT ON MENTAL HEALING

Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Winchester, Has Some Startling Views on the Spiritual Methods.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE committee, including medical practitioners, physicians, neurologists and alienists, appointed to consider questions connected with healing by spiritual means has just finished its deliberations and issued its report. Among the conclusions arrived at are:—

"That the essential factor in all forms of psychic healing is mental suggestion, which has been used from remote periods, although more fully explained by modern psychology.

"That there is abundant evidence of the efficacy of mental suggestion in the treatment of many disorders. No evidence has been forthcoming of any authenticated cure of organic disease."

Dr. Ryle, as Bishop of Winchester, was chairman of the committee of the Lambert Conference, which dealt with the whole question, and his reply to the British Medical Association, printed in the British Medical Journal, is quoted "as an interesting and candid specimen of the answers received."

"Personally," says Dr. Ryle, "I do not draw any marked distinction between the claims of such healing alleged by Christian Scientists, by Church of England healers, by faith healers, by Mohammedans or by members of other religions. Where the Christian faith is firmly held I believe that the patient may, by the wise and hopeful inculcation of Christian truth, be predisposed in will and mind, and consequently, in some unintelligible manner, in physical conditions, toward the successful combat with disease or disorder. But I have seen no reason to accept the view, which in some quarters has been maintained, that gifts of healing are the prerogative of clergy or of members of the Church of Christ as such.

"In the course of the investigation I seemed to discern that there was evidence of the traces of curative influence upon the physical conditions of patients produced by personal agents to which these different names have been given. But I have been very unwilling either officially to recognize such alleged cases of healing or to encourage the claims to work such results until scientific men had investigated the phenomena, and so far as the physical condition is concerned had seen reason to admit that physical changes had been produced and healings effected in which the causes alleged to be spiritual or psychic had been vigilantly recorded and scientifically registered and defined."

ENGLISHMEN WILL EXPLORE CANADA

Duke of Sutherland and His Party Only One of the Groups Which Will See the West.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

CANADA, now that it is no longer "terra incognita" to Englishmen, thanks to "threatened" reciprocity and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, will have many visitors from this tight little kingdom. The Duke of Sutherland and his party, which will include several well known English legislators, all eager to see the wonders of the Canadian West, will leave England on board the Olympic on August 8.

They will travel from New York by river, canal and lake to Port William, on Lake Superior, aboard the Duke's yacht, the Cassia; thence they will visit the properties which the Duke has acquired in the Western provinces.

It is expected that the bungalow residence which is being built for the Duke on his settlement at Brooks, Alberta, will be ready for occupation when he arrives. The ducal party will go as far West as Vancouver and return to England via New York about the end of October. Mr. Winston Churchill and Mr. Louis Harcourt have also arranged to visit Canada at the end of August and will make Toronto their headquarters.

ROYAL DUKE WILL PLEASE DOMINION

Britain Predicts Success for the Duke of Connaught as Governor General of Canada.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE Duke of Connaught, who is to take up his new duties of Governor-General of Canada in the fall; the Duchess and Princess Patricia, with their suite, will leave Liverpool on October 8 for Ottawa.

There is no doubt that Canadians here are delighted with the selection of one of the royal family to preside over the short in the land of Laurier.

The Duke's speech at the Dominion Day dinner here has entirely dispelled any apprehensions which might have been entertained that the new Governor General would not adapt himself to the mild democratic traditions of the Dominion.

The genuine pleasure displayed by the Duke when the banqueters sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" convinced everybody that in addition to being a prince of the blood royal he is a prince in the sense understood by Americans when applied to a citizen who voted for Taft or has the habit of voting for Bryan.

The Duke is tactful—far more so than the English writer who declares that "His Royal Highness is responsible for a new American invasion of Canada, that the number of simple republicans from across the border who are taking houses in Ottawa for the winter season is unusually large."

ST. PAUL'S IN PERIL, ARCHITECT BLAMED

Condition of Foundations of Great Cathedral in London Is Now Found Bad.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THAT England's national cathedral, St. Paul's, is in danger is now evident from the evidence of experts which has been taken before a select committee of the House of Commons. Some years ago, when the danger to the cathedral was reported in the newspapers, the mere idea of such a thing was flouted as the report of alarmists. Now it is made very apparent that there was nothing alarming in the story at all, and the investigations that were made show that the foundations require serious attention if the cathedral is to be made secure.

The evidence of experts shows that the cathedral rests upon an eighteen foot layer of "pot earth," with sub-strata of gravel and clay. At the bottom stratum of gravel a stream of water is constantly flowing; and there is strong evidence of the face of the building itself of settlements having occurred from time to time. The top of the south tower is ten inches out of the vertical, to quote one or two of the changes, and sufficient movement has taken place to imperil the stability of the portico and columns.

Sir Christopher Wren is blamed for "the most gigantic mistake ever made by any architect."

"That Wren's judgment was at fault in not making the foundations deeper is shown in the fact that shortly after the cathedral was finished it did actually give way, sinking several inches and making repairs necessary, which were taken in hand by Edward Strong, one of the great architect's pupils," is the conclusion come to by one expert, "and the danger lurking in the bed of sand and the possibility of its running off and leaving the pot earth insufficiently supported was realized very vividly in 1710. Since then the city near the cathedral has been honeycombed by railways, sewers and tube railways, and the extent to which the bed of sand underlying the cathedral foundations has been tapped can only be guessed at. It follows, therefore, that the extent of the danger which threatens St. Paul's, although a real one, cannot be actually gauged without careful and lengthy examination, and no one can be sure of it being an alarmist who suggests that it should be done without delay."

THE FAMILY HEARTH

Never go in for cheap dish towels if you dislike dingy effects. Linen ones keep much whiter than cotton, as the latter turn gray from constant use, however carefully handled.

Never let dishwater dry in the towels. They should be washed after each using, and once a day a bit of washing soda may be added to the water. Rinsing in cold rather than in hot water invariably keeps the towels whiter.

Before using the inner dish of the new casserole put it in a pan filled with cold water, let it on back of stove and bring to boil, boiling five minutes. This tempers the earthenware and makes cracks less common.

Tiled vestibules, especially the old fashioned black and white tiles, may be kept shiny by rubbing once a week with a little linseed oil. Polish with a dry cloth or chamois.

FRUIT COMPOTES

COMPOTE OF MELONS

Compote of Melons—Peel the melons, cut them into slices, trim them and put into a saucepan with enough sirup to cover. Add a small piece of cinnamon and let all simmer for about fifteen minutes. Remove saucepan from the fire and let the contents remain for several hours in the sirup. Arrange slices in a glass dish and serve.

* * *

COMPOTE OF GRAPES

Compote of Grapes — Take out seeds from a few bunches of grapes, put them in cold water and let them boil. Take from the fire, let stand covered some time and then drain. Put into boiling sirup aned let them boil for fifteen minutes, and when they are cold put in compote dishes. Then boil sirup thick and pour over.

* * *

COMPOTE OF PLUMS

Compote of Plums — Wash sound plums, put them into a saucepan with just enough water to cover. Cook until tender, and then cook in boiling sirup for fifteen minutes. This takes away the bitter part of the plum taste. Serve cold.

* * *

PRESERVING FRUITS

Perfection in preserves presupposes perfect material. — Underripe rather than overripe fruit is to be preferred, but "just ripe" is best of all. Use the best granulated sugar. Impure sugar, when boiling, shows a blue scum on the surface. Peel fruit with a silver knife and drop in cold water. Immerse plums and peaches in boiling water for two or three minutes, then plunge into cold water and the skins will slip off easily. Use new rubber rings each season and dip in boiling water before using. Do not put an overamount of fruit in the kettle. If necessary use two kettles. The wise housekeeper puts up two or three jars of jelly each day or so, as convenient during the process of preparing dinner. Her shelves are filled by slow and easy stages without any strenuous preserving days. The old proposition of a pound of sugar to a pound of fruit still holds good, though in the case of fruits containing little acid three-fourths of a pound of sugar does equally well. For jelly one should allow a pound of sugar for each pint of fruit-juice. When making quince preserves simmer the fruit in water until tender before placing in the sirup for preserving. Save all cores and parings of apples and quinces and convert them into jelly. Spoiled fruit is the price of carelessness in sterilising fruit jars. Remember that the manufacturers have been given free hand in the use and abuse of fragments of soda, so make your own jams, jellies and preserves.

TO CAN STRING BEANS

Fill your cans nearly full with freshly gathered string beans; then fill to overflowing with cold water; seal tightly; stand them in wash boiler in cold water sufficient to well cover the cans, and bring slowly to the boiling point. Boil four hours. When cold lift out carefully and tighten the covers. Either thin boards or cloths should be put in the bottom of the boiler to stand the cans upon.

* * *

CANNED CORN

Cut the corn from the cob as soon as it comes from the field; put a little at a time in the can, press it down firmly; keep doing this until the can is so full that the juice flows over the top. Screw on the tops tightly; put a wooden rack on some hay in the bottom of a boiler, stand your cans in it, cover with cold water and bring slowly to a boil; let boil five hours; let stand in the water until cold. Tighten the covers and store in a cool, dark place.

* * *

PICKLED ONIONS

Pour boiling brine over the small button onions; let them stand 24 hours; then drain and cover with hot vinegar spiced to taste.

* * *

SMALL CUCUMBER PICKLES

Wash and wipe your cucumbers and place them in jars; cover them with boiling brine strong enough to bear an egg; let stand 24 hours. Take them out, wipe, place in clean jars, and cover with hot vinegar, spiced to taste.

* * *

BLACKBERRY CORDIAL

Mix together two quarts of blackberry juice, one pound of loaf sugar, a half-ounce of cinnamon, a half-ounce of allspice, a half-ounce of cloves and the same of nutmeg. Boil slowly for a half-hour. Take from the fire and when cold add a pint of French brandy, bottle and cork tightly.

CANNED BEETS

Wash the beets, being careful not to break the skin, leave about two inches of the tops; drop them into boiling hot water and cook until tender. Take them out and pour cold water over them; cut off the skins and slice them. Take one quart of water and half pint of vinegar, if very strong, two-thirds of a cup of granulated sugar; bring to the boiling point; put in the beets; let them stand until thoroughly heated; then can.

* * *

CIDER VINEGAR

Buy good cider and let it stand in a warm place. In time it will turn to vinegar. The process may be hastened by getting some "mother" and putting with the new cider.

A good washing machine costs from five to eight dollars, but a washboard can be bought for twenty-five cents. This kind of economy gives a good many men a chance to look for a second wife.

* * *

There is a demand for good boys. The boy who is honest, earnest and industrious will not be long out of a job. There are lots of prosperous business men, merchants and mechanics, who are constantly on the outlook for good boys. They do not look for them on the streets, however, but in some sort of employment. They have no use for an idle boy. He is too apt to make an idle man.

* * *

The difference between good and bad mothers is so vast and so far-reaching that it is no exaggeration to say that the good mothers of this generation are building the homes of the next generation, and the bad mothers are building the prisons. For out of families nations are made; and if the father be the head and the hands of a family, the mother is the heart. No office in the world is so honoured as hers, no priesthood so holy, no influence so sweet and strong and lasting.

* * *

There are none of us so poor but we can train a few roses on the humble wall and their sheer and beauty will long be remembered; and many a boy, instead of going to loaf upon the public highway, will linger at home among the flowers. Moral degradation always begins at home.

* * *

What beautiful and tender associations cluster thick around the word "memory." The thought of it is a very shield; the name of it has a spell to call back the wanderer from the path of vice, and far away where the myrtle blooms and the palm trees wave, and the ocean sleeps upon coral strands, to the exile's fond fancy it clothes the naked rock, or stormy shore, or barren moor, or wild height and mountain with charms he weeps to think of and longs once more to see.

Encouragement is something we naturally look for. A little praise, a word of hope or a cheerful smile—something for the hungry soul to grasp and the weary mind to rest upon, as we climb the toilsome mountain of life. How many poor hearts have sunken into despondency, when a little encouragement has reassured them. The soldier looks for it on the field of battle; it is the cheering voice of his leader that urges him on through the danger of death and crowns the day with victory.

Fine clothes and costly jewellery do not convert a rough into a gentleman any more than a stovepipe hat and a cigar make a mast of a monkey. A few smart, well-learned quotations from eminent authors will not convey the impression that you are conversant with literature. You are apt to become scorched in the flames you kindle, for your literary companions will soon sound your shallow depths and your ignorance will appear more glaring than before.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

Never go in for cheap dish towels if you dislike dingy effects. Linen ones keep much whiter than cotton, as the latter turn gray from constant use, however carefully handled.

Never let dishwater dry in the towels. They should be washed after each using, and once a day a bit of washing soda may be added to the water. Rinsing in cold rather than in hot water invariably keeps the towels whiter.

Before using the inner dish of the new casserole put it in a pan filled with cold water, let it on back of stove and bring to boil, boiling five minutes. This tempers the earthenware and makes cracks less common.

Tiled vestibules, especially the old fashioned black and white tiles, may be kept shiny by rubbing once a week with a little linseed oil. Polish with a dry cloth or chamois.

FRUIT COMPOTES
COMPOTE OF MELONS

Compote of Melons—Peel the melons, cut them into slices, trim them and put into a saucepan with enough sirup to cover. Add a small piece of cinnamon and let all simmer for about fifteen minutes. Remove saucepan from the fire and let the contents remain for several hours in the sirup. Arrange slices in a glass dish and serve.

• • •

COMPOTE OF GRAPES

Compote of Grapes — Take out seeds from a few bunches of grapes, put them in cold water and let them boil. Take from the fire, let stand covered some time and then drain. Put into boiling sirup and let them boil for fifteen minutes, and when they are cold put in compote dishes. Then boil sirup thick and pour over.

• • •

Compote of Plums — Wash sound pluma, put them into a saucepan with just enough water to cover. Cook until tender, and then cook in boiling sirup for fifteen minutes. This takes away the bitter part of the plum taste. Serve cold.

• • •

PRESERVING FRUITS

Perfection in preserves presupposes perfect material. — Underripe rather than overripe fruit is to be preferred, but "just ripe" is best of all. Use the best granulated sugar. Impure sugar, when boiling, shows a blue scum on the surface. Peel fruit with a silver knife and drop in cold water. Immerse plums and peaches in boiling water for two or three minutes, then plunge into cold water and the skins will slip off easily. Use new rubber rings each season and dip in boiling water before using. Do not put an overamount of fruit in the kettle. If necessary use two kettles. The wise housekeeper puts up two or three jars of jelly each day or so, as convenient during the process of preparing dinner. Her shelves are filled by slow and easy stages without any strenuous preserving days. The old proposition of a pound of sugar to a pound of fruit still holds good, though in the case of fruits containing little acid three-fourths of a pound of sugar does equally well. For jelly one should allow a pound of sugar for each pint of fruit-juice. When making quince preserves simmer the fruit in water until tender before placing in the sirup for preserving. Have all cores and parings of apples and quinces and convert them into jelly. Spoiled fruit is the price of carelessness in sterilizing fruit jars. Remember that the manufacturers have been given free hand in the use and abuse of bicarbonate of soda, so make your own jams, jellies and preserves.

• • •

TO CAN STRING BEANS

Fill your cans nearly full with freshly gathered string beans; then fill to overflowing with cold water, seal tightly; stand them in wash boiler in cold water sufficient to well cover the cans, and bring slowly to the boiling point. Boil four hours. When cold lift out carefully and tighten the covers. Either thin boards or cloths should be put in the bottom of the boiler to stand the cans upon.

• • •

CANNED CORN

Cut the corn from the cob as soon as it comes from the field; put a little at a time in the can, press it down firmly; keep doing this until the can is so full that the juice flows over the top. Screw on the tops tightly; put a wooden rack on some hay in the bottom of a boiler, stand your cans in it, cover with cold water and bring slowly to a boil; let boil five hours; let stand in the water until cold. Tighten the covers and store in a cool, dark place.

• • •

Pour boiling brine over the small button onions; let them stand 24 hours; then drain and cover with hot vinegar spiced to taste.

• • •

SMALL CUCUMBER PICKLES

Wash and wipe your cucumbers and place them in jars; cover them with boiling brine strong enough to bear an egg; let stand 24 hours. Take them out, wipe, place in clean jars, and cover with hot vinegar, spiced to taste.

• • •

BLACKBERRY CORDIAL

Mix together two quarts of blackberry juice, one pound of loaf sugar, a half-ounce of cinnamon, a half-ounce of allspice, a half-ounce of cloves and the same of nutmeg. Boil slowly for a half-hour. Take from the fire and when cold add a pint of French brandy, bottle and cork tightly.

CANNED BEETS

Wash the beets, being careful not to break the skin, leave about two inches of the tops; drop them into boiling hot water and cook until tender. Take them out and pour cold water over them; cut off the skins and slice them. Take one quart of water and half pint of vinegar, if very strong, two-thirds of a cup of granulated sugar; bring to the boiling point; put in the beets; let them stand until thoroughly heated; then can.

• • •

CIDER VINEGAR

Buy good cider and let it stand in a warm place. In time it will turn to vinegar. The process may be hastened by getting some "mother" and putting with the new cider.

A good washing machine costs from five to eight dollars, but a washboard can be bought for twenty-five cents. This kind of economy gives a good many men a chance to look for a second wife.

• • •

There is a demand for good boys. The boy who is honest, earnest and industrious will not be long out of a job. There are lots of prosperous business men, merchants and mechanics, who are constantly on the outlook for good boys. They do not look for them on the streets, however, but in some sort of employment. They have no use for an idle boy. He is too apt to make an idle man.

• • •

The difference between good and bad mothers is so vast and so far-reaching that it is no exaggeration to say that the good mothers of this generation are building the homes of the next generation, and the bad mothers are building the prisons. For out of families nations are made; and if the father be the head and the hands of a family, the mother is the heart. No office in the world is so honoured as hers, no priesthood so holy, no influence so sweet and strong and lasting.

• • •

There are none of us so poor but we can train a few roses on the humble wall and their sheet and beauty will long be remembered, and many a boy, instead of going to loaf upon the public highway, will linger at home among the flowers. Moral degradation always begins at home.

• • •

What beautiful and tender associations cluster thick around the word "memory." The thought of it is a very shield; the name of it has a spell to call back the wanderer from the path of vice, and far away where the myrtle blossom and the palm trees wave, and the ocean sleeps upon coral strands, to the exile's fond fancy it clothes the naked rock, or stormy shore, or barren moor, or wild height and mountain with charms he weeps to think of and longs once more to see.

• • •

Encouragement is something we naturally look for. A little praise, a word of hope or a cheerful smile—something for the hungry soul to grasp and the weary mind to rest upon, as we climb the toilsome mountain of life. How many poor hearts have sunken into despondency, when a little encouragement has reassured them. The soldier looks for it on the field of battle; it is the cheering voice of his leader that urges him on through the danger of death and crowns the day with victory.

• • •

Fine clothes and costly jewellery do not comfort a rough into a gentleman any more than a stovepipe hat and a cigar make a man of a monkey. A few smart, well-learned quotations from eminent authors will not convey the impression that you are conversant with literature. You are apt to become scorched in the flames you kindle, for your literary companions will soon sound your shallow depths and your ignorance will appear more glaring than before.

THAT'S a straight, emphatic statement which we are prepared to prove—

This way: Every merchant handling "Monarch Knit" will guarantee our garments to give utter and absolute satisfaction.

Big as we are—even suppose our business is International—we could not make that announcement over our name, unless—we knew positively the superiority of "Monarch Knit" garments. We do know.

"Monarch Knit" garments are all wool—selected wool at that. Every ounce of the raw material is imported from Australia, where the best wool comes from.

Then it's assorted, combed and cleansed by our special germ-destroying process—

And spun into the yarns which have made "Monarch Knit" famous—and knit to the exact measurement of individual types, after being specially preshrunk.

So—when you want the best sweater, coat or toque tell your merchant that you want "Monarch Knit."

Can You Have Your Ceilings Washed?

You cannot if they are plaster. You could, if you ceiled with PRESTON Steel Ceilings. And unless you do your home, your office, your store, has at least one surface that is a dust-trap, a harborage for germs, an absorber of grime and dampness—as every plaster ceiling is. Put a PRESTON Ceiling on over the old cracked, crumbling, dangerous plaster ceiling. It will cost but little; it will be fire-proof and damp-proof; and it will outlast the building itself. Will you look at some of our beautiful new designs? Just send for the book to-day.

difficult of access the height may be, fit yourself for it by slow and laborious process of study and toil. Begin at the very bottom round of the ladder, lay the foundation firm and secure; build your structure of future greatness upon a thorough knowledge of your life work in all its bearings. In fact be what you seem, and seem to be nothing but what you are.

* * *

Let us not wait for chances for doing good to come to us, but to go out to meet them. Too many beautiful opportunities escape us otherwise. As charity begins at home, so should love. We don't care much for either the charity or love that would leave its nearest to want for duty or affection and go out into the world to work. We find it a delightful plan to make each one of our homefolks happy about some one thing each day of our life—plan little surprises for their delight, do little deeds for them, brighten a dull hour, or congratulate them upon some achievement of their own.

* * *

Money is a good thing, especially in these times, but there is something much more valuable. It is character, the consciousness of a pure and honourable life. Thus it should be a young man's first aim to preserve at any cost.

* * *

Sometimes the hasty word has been spoken, the sharp, snappish word been carelessly uttered in the home circle. The true wife's heart so often bleeds at the bitter, thoughtless, but cutting word of a husband. When she is gone to heaven, and he "weeps o'er her bier" he will remember it.

* * *

Men and women don't need to swing clubs to threaten home concord. The husband, armed with a sneer, and the wife who carries waspish tongue, are just as well comparisoned for death-dealing battle, as though they pounded each other with baseball bats.

* * *

The woman of to-day is a different being from the woman of fifty years ago. The shrinking, trembling, weeping heiress of Thackeray and Dickens have disappeared. It is better that it is so. Not only has the woman of to-day shaken off those old-time weaknesses, not only has she assumed a stern independence, which to some is well nigh disheartening, but she has made her determination known to the world, has waved it defiantly in our faces in the shape of certain signs and symbols which have a tendency to add emphasis to her emancipation.

Mix together one pint of sifted flour, one-half of a teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar and one teaspoonful of baking powder and rub in two tablespoonfuls of butter. Mix with sufficient sweet milk to make a soft dough, turn out on a floured board, work with the hands for a moment, then roll out in a sheet one-half of an inch thick. Spread thickly with black or red raspberries, sprinkle with a spoonful or two of sugar and roll up like a jelly roll, pinching the ends to keep in the juice. Lay on a greased pie plate and steam for half an hour, then place in a hot oven for ten minutes to dry off the crust. Serve with sweetened cream or hard sauce.

* * *

BUTTERMILK SPOON BISCUIT

One quart of buttermilk, one teaspoonful each of soda and salt, two tablespoonfuls of soft butter and flour enough to make a stiff batter. Drop in hot gem pans and bake in a quick oven.

* * *

Never use a metal spoon in stirring fruit and vegetables when canning. A wooden one is best, and those with short handles are preferable.

* * *

During the summer keep on hand a syrup made by boiling 1 cup sugar to 1 pint of water. When cool put in fruit jar. Mix with lemon juice for lemonade. It is a good thing to keep it in stock for various summer drinks.

* * *

Mutton dripping will not set hard and suety if directly the fat is poured from the baking tin the vessel containing it is put at the back of the stove and allowed to stay there until the stove itself cools.

* * *

To remove the smell of fresh paint put a pail of cold water in the room and change it every two or three hours.

* * *

Dish covers may be easily kept bright and clean. Remove grease with warm water and soda, dry with a soft cloth, then apply a little metal polish with a flannel. A final polish with fine whitening will then make the covers look like silver.

* * *

Nickel silver should be cleaned with ammonia and whitening. Take half a cupful of finely powdered whitening and work it into a paste with a cupful of cold water in which a tablespoonful of rock ammonia has been dissolved. Keep this in a well-corked bottle and use it for scouring. Afterward polish with a leather.

* * *

Before broiling a slice of ham rub brown sugar on it. The ham will have a delicious flavour.

* * *

Hot soda water is an excellent cleanser for hair brushes. Rub the bristles well without bending them too much or breaking them, and dry the brush in the sun. The bristles will be white and stiff as new after such treatment.

* * *

Ivory knife handles which have become yellow may be improved in appearance by being rubbed with cloth dipped in turpentine.

* * *

Salt and powdered borax added to the water in which they are will help to make cut flowers last much longer. The stems should be clipped each day and cut slanting to allow the water to rise in the stalks.

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH SHEEP?

The Department of Agriculture does some tall guessing at the number of our domestic animals. However, once in 10 years the census enumerators go to each farmer and learn from him how many animals of each kind he has. When these figures are compiled the Department of Agriculture takes note of them, and there are some extraordinary discrepancies between the estimated number of animals just before and just after enumeration. The Census Bureau has given out the number of sheep in this country last year. Owing to the different seasons of the year at which the enumerations were made, the number of lambs last year and in 1900 cannot be compared, but the number of mature sheep can be. During these 10 years the population has increased about 20 per cent. There are many reasons for believing that wealth has increased in a higher ratio, and the requirements for both mutton and wool should have increased, but to meet the increased requirement for woollen clothing there was a large increase in importations.

The total number of mature sheep in 1910 was 39,470,312, and 10 years earlier the number was 39,852,967. There was actually a decrease. In Pennsylvania the number of sheep decreased one-third. In New England, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania the number of wool sheep decreased in 10 years from 2,515,753 to 1,545,784. There was a little increase in the average weight of the fleece, but a decrease of a million sheep in the New England and Middle States, and a slight decrease in the number of mature sheep for the entire country is sufficient that something is needed to make sheep raising more profitable.

WOOD ASHES

It should be remembered that wood ashes are a one-sided fertilizer. They contain no nitrogen and the small amount of phosphoric acid they contain is of very little importance. Their chief value as a fertiliser, therefore, depends first upon the potash they contain, therefore ashes may be expected to give the best results when used on soils or crops especially requiring potash, such as potatoes, tobacco, clovers and fruits, all of which are heavy potash feeders. Ashes also contain a considerable amount of lime, sometimes as much as 600 or 700 pounds in a ton of ashes. They are, therefore, of great value in improving the texture of the soil and correcting its acidity. For any of the crops above mentioned, it would not be amiss to apply these ashes at the rate of from 1500 pounds to one ton per acre. This would not be expensive, as the ashes can be had for the hauling.

TOMATO ROT

Air-slaked lime would have no effect on the rot. Tomato rot may be kept in check by spraying with Bordeaux mixture, sulfocide, or ammoniacal carbonate of copper. However, it is difficult to apply these materials to untrained plants, especially upon rich soil where they make a rank matted growth. In small patches, or in gardens where the plants are trained to stakes and pruned, there is some chance to spray them. Do not plant tomatoes on the same ground two years in succession.

Got Overheated—sat in a Draught—that night I had a chill—and the next day, my back nearly killed me.

"Luckily, I happened to think of my old friends, GIN PILLS, and started right in to take them. In a few hours, the pain was easier—and by suppertime, I was able to sit up. Next day, I was all right again."

You have got to be mighty careful in hot weather, if you don't want to be laid up with Kidney Trouble. You are so apt to be imprudent and do things which you shouldn't, in warm weather. And it is so easy to take cold, even on the hottest days.

We all sit in draughts and get chilled, in our endeavor to keep cool. The first thing we know, we have a pain in the back. Some times it is preceeded by a fit of sneezing, then a chill and finally a good hard pain in the small of the back; at other times, the pain just grips you and you know you have "Kidney Cold".

When the first symptoms appear, you should take "Gin Pills". They will cure pain in the back and Kidney Colds quicker than any other medicine known.

GIN PILLS are wonderful in their action on the Kidneys and Bladder. They relieve the congestion—soothe and heal the inflamed membranes—and neutralize the excess of uric acid which accumulates.

You feel the relief at once—and a short treatment with GIN PILLS will promptly cure the trouble.

A SWING-OF-VICTORY MASS MEETING NOMINATES HON. J. R. STRATTON

An Enthusiastic Mass Meeting of Liberals and Supporters of the Liberal Policy, Gives Unanimous Nomination to Mr. Stratton—Confidence in Laurier Enthusiastically Voted—Speeches by Local Liberals—A Presage of Victory.

At one of the most enthusiastic Liberal mass meetings ever held in West Peterborough—the most prophetic of victory — Hon. J. R. Stratton was unanimously nominated to not only to contest the riding in the general election, but to represent it in the next parliament. The acclaim given the name of the Liberal leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to that of Mr. Stratton and to reciprocity, the clear-cut issue of the election, left no doubt of the earnestness of the convictions of the audience, the popularity of the leader and the candidate, or of the determination of the Liberal and moderate minded electorate to put up a fight and roll up a vote that would make Mr. Stratton a winner on the night of the 21st of September, and give emphatic endorsation of the policy of the government.

The meeting was called for two o'clock, but the outbreak of the storm about half past one, made the people rather late in gathering, but in spite of this, before the proceedings got under full swing, the auditorium was well filled with representative Liberals and supporters of Mr. Stratton from every part of the riding, so that the unanimous nomination he received was one that would meet with hearty approval in every part of the constituency. He has made, during the past twenty-five years, so excellent a representative, has showed so much capacity to look after the interests of his riding and his constituents, that it was felt that, not only was he the man best equipped in all respects to carry the riding, but a man eminently well qualified to represent all its interests and all elements of the electorate. In the past, Mr. Stratton has been the ideal representative. In this capacity, he considered himself the representative of all the people, not only of those who supported his election, but also of those who opposed him. He held the balance evenly and was always ready to confer with and consult the interests of his opponents as readily as those of those who had supported him. He represented West Peterborough as a whole, not one party or section of it—but every man, woman and child in the riding.

The chair was taken by Mr. J. J. Hartley, president of the West Riding Reform Association.

The first business was organization, which was effected by the election of the following officers:

President—J. J. Hartley (re-elected).
1st Vice-Pres.—Patrick Crowe, Ennismore.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Thos. H. Graham, Smith.
Secretary—G. N. Gordon.
Treas.—J. J. Duffus.

Committee.

South Monaghan—Henry Dawson.
North Monaghan—John Fowler.
Smith—H. C. Garbutt.
Ennismore—John Young.
Harvey—Robt. Shaw.
Galway—Chas. Coben.
Cavendish—Austin J. Ford.

It fell to Mr. G. N. Gordon to move a resolution of confidence to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In so doing, Mr. Gordon referred to reciprocity, the issue in this campaign, as a question that had engaged the attention of statesmen of all parties since Confederation, but in the past no Conservative leader had been able to consummate reciprocity. Sir John Macdonald, had tried for years without success. Now, when a Liberal government had accomplished what Conservative statesmen had failed to do, brought to a successful issue the policy that Conservatives had striven for, we find Mr. Borden and Mr. Burnham going back on the policy of their Conservative predecessors and leaders, and thrusting into the front side issues, that had only an incidental interest in the present campaign. As to the cry of annexation, Mr. Gordon showed that the bond between Canada and the Mother country and empire was never closer than it was at present. We found arrayed against reciprocity the same elements of opposition that had fought against all the reforms, which had made Canada the great, free, prosperous and progressive country it now is. He had great pleasure in moving the following resolution:

Moved by Mr. G. N. Gordon, seconded by Mr. F. D. Kerr, that this mass meeting of Liberals of West Peterboorugh take pride and pleasure in most heartily expressing its complete confidence in Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the distinguished Premier of the Dominion and Leader of the Liberals of Canada. That it recognises in him the highest qualities of statesmanship, under whose administration Canada has made the greatest material progress of its history, and has been advanced to a position of prominence, influence and respect in the eyes of the world; under whom vexed questions that defied the skill of his predecessors, and that threatened the rupture of the harmony of Canadian citizenship, have been settled and the people left free to pursue in peace and mutual confidence the work of developing our great natural resources; a statesman who has evenly held the balance without fear or favour as between all classes of our citizenship; who has shown himself, at once, a strong champion of Canada's rights of self-government and a vigorus promoter of strengthened bonds of connection between Canada and the Mother Country; and who now appeals to the people on a policy, the first in the history of Canada expressly designed in the interests of all classes—a policy upon which both agricultural and artisan unite.

And the mass meeting individually pledges itself to the employment of all legitimate effort to vindicate his record and uphold his policy, by returning as a supporter the candidate to-day nominated to represent West Peterborough.

MR. F. D. KERR.

In rising to second the resolution, Mr. F. D. Kerr said it was a great pleasure to him, a Liberal by training and conviction, to stand before a gathering of Liberals, to second a resolution of confidence in a leader who is not only Liberal in politics, but Liberal in a broader and more inclusive sense. According to the Conservative press, Sir Wilfrid and his followers were disloyal. This was an old game. As far back as 1861, Sir John, then John A., Macdonald, raised the disloyalty cry against the Liberal opposition, and Mr. Kerr quoted from the Globe of April 21st, 1861, a reply to the effect that Sir John should have paused and reflected that the premier of the Conservative government had carried a musket in the rebellion of 1837 and that two of the ministers were the chief advocates of annexation, and that two others have in private, frequently advocated connection with the United States. But the Conservatives had improved and had now come to be loyal as well as the Liberals. The Conservatives now charged Sir Wilfrid Laurier with having destroyed the work of the Imperial Conference, and Mr. Kerr quoted in disproof the statements of Asquith, premier of Great Britain, and Harcourt, colonial secretary, in praise of the righ rank, prominent position and excellent work of Sir Wilfrid at the conference—almost as good testimony as the party blind opinions of the Mail and Review. Sir Wilfrid was the champion of the doctrine accepted by the Confrence, that the true imperial spirit was not imperial concentration but cooperation of the several units of the empire. That is what Sir Wilfrid stands for, and he can well defy the puny attacks of his detractors. Personally, running in a riding very much interested in reciprocity, Mr. Kerr, said he could not understand how Mr. Sexsmith, the Conservative candidate, could pose as a farmer with things to sell, and oppose reciprocity. Last year Canadian fruit growers, in face of a high tariff, sent berries to the value of $140,000 to the United States. They sent $500,000 worth of sheep against a tariff of $1.50 per head; oats to the value of $534,000 against a 15 cents per bushel duty; hay against a duty of $4 per ton, $67,000. Recently in Cobourg he inquired the price of hay—$13 per ton; just across the lake, in Rochester, it was $27 per ton. Such prices would not be a bad thing for the farmers. We sent these goods because the Yankees wanted them and we had them to sell. Sir Wilfrid's desire was for a policy that would bring him a big vote, through its benefit to the country,—a policy that would benefit the farmers and not hurt the manufacturers.

MR. O'CONNELL.

Mr. D. OConnell, in supporting the resolution, had warm commendation for reciprocity, the issue of the campaign. But Conservatives would try to draw a herring across the trail by injecting other issues. Every time the Liberal party had appealed to the country, the Conservatives have sought to becloud the real issue by appeal to passion and prejudice. If we wanted to see the results of wise and Liberal administration for the past fourteen years, we had only to compare the conditions of Canada in 1896 with that of the present day. The man responsible for the vast improvement in every national, commercial and industrial condition was Sir Wilfrid Laurier through his progressive policy. In 1896 the Liberals were to ruin Canada, according to their opponents; the British preference was to bring ruin. This evidence of the sincere attachment of Canada and the Liberal government to the empire, had resulted in a vast improvement of trade and more cordial relations. Now, reciprocity had provided another market in addition to the home and British market. The Conservatives, by obstruction in parliament, had forced a vote on reciprocity and now they refuse to discuss it and becloud the real issue with inflammatory side issues. As to annexation, there was not a man who had a spark of patriotism, would have his loyalty affected. They had met to select a candidate. We had a man available he believed, who had made a splendid representative in the past, who had preached and practised fair play to all classes. Mr. Stratton well deserved the confidence of the people of West Peterborough. He had sat in the legislature twenty years and fought four or five contests. In all these, while appeals had been made to all sorts of passions, Mr. Stratton had always given fair play. The greatest enemy to a young country was the man who places party advantage before national interests, and to effect some sinister purpose, injects false cries and mischievous appeals. Mr. Stratton had always measured out fair play to all parties. Mr. Stratton had made an excellent representative, and he was sure to be triumphantly returned on September 21st.

The resolution was put and carried with great enthusiasm.

CANDIDATE NOMINATED.

Mr. R. R. Hall remarked that the United States had passed reciprocity, in the face of the opposition of the great moneyed interests. We had a clean cut issue to deal with in this election. Shall we have free trade in natural products? We had a reciprocity treaty from 1854 to 1866, and Sir John Macdonald had helped to pass it. It was greatly to the advantage of Canada, but the United States, perhaps dut to the spirit engendered by the civil war, wanted to abrogate it, to force Canada into annexation. But Canada said no. The answer of Canada to the United States, was Confederation— not annexation, but a solider Canada. At Canadas first session of Parliament Sir John placed on the statistic books a standing offer of reciprocity, and reciprocity in natural products was one great feature of the "National Policy." As an example of the effects of duty on trade: In the ten years, from 1881 to '90, when eggs were on the free list, Canada shipped to the States 18 million dollars worth of eggs; in the ten years, from 1901 to 1910, with a duty of 5 cents per dozen, Canada's shipment of eggs amounted to only $120,000. In ten years, from '81 to '90, with a ten cents per bushel duty on barley, Canada shipped 92 million dollars' worth to the United tSates; the past ten years under the high McKinley tariff the shipments of barley only totalled $1,000,000. Why should we reject such a market? Reciprocity appealed to all classes. The gain of the farmer passed to the merchant and from the merchant to the manufacturer. With such an important issue, we needed a strong candidate—one who would win. Give the nomination to Stratton, a strong, safe man, and a sure winner.

Mr. A. McFarlane, president of the William Hamilton Company, in a few brief words, seconded the nomination. He said we wanted to select a man who would carry the riding in support of a government under which Canada had made more progress in the past fifteen years than any country on God's earth. He had great pleasure in seconding the nomination.

The nomination was submitted to the meeting and was carried unanimously, the audience rising and giving three rousing cheers to the nominee.

MR. STRATTON ACCEPTS.

Mr. Stratton assured the audience that he felt proud and pleased that, after twenty-five years of practically continuous service as a representative, he still held the respect and confidence of the people of West Peterborough. He had desired them to select some other candidate—he had a great many things on hand that demanded his time and attention, but seeing that they wished him to be a candidate, he accepted the nomination as heartily as it was offered. In no previous contest had he received so much urging to enter the field, not only from his Liberal friends, but from many Conservatives. He never went into a contest with such a cause to champion and defend, as was now presented. The prosperity of the farmers was the basis of all prosperity. The Conservatives—some of them—said, let well enough alone—we were doing well now. But apply that argument otherwise than to the prospect of improved prosperity through larger markets. Looking at the prosperity of the past fourteen years, attending, and the result of a good, capable, business like administration. If our good Conservative friends wanted to "leave well enough alone" let them re-elect the present government.

In all his past contests he had never had an election on a square issue, so far as his opponents were concerned. In his first election, we had the "Rosa Bible" side issue; but he had overcome that and was returned by the modest little majority of 32. Then we had the "Equal Rights" agitation and his majority that election grew to nearly 500. We had at subsequent elections different cases of the same kind, and the result was that on every occasion his majority grew. Now, we were being called upon to save Protestantism by electing S. H. Burnham instead of J. R. Stratton. He had occasion when invited to address both Orange and Roman Catholic gatherings, and had considered that his own Protestantism was not endangered either by that or by contributing to the funds of churches of all denominations, in all parts of the riding. We now had a "Protestant Protective League," whose object, he understood, was to induce youn gmen to sign a pledge not to vote for a Roman Catholic. By mean of that style of tactics employed against him, Mr. Stratton remarked that in this contest they were urged to oppose him. He had been twenty-five years in the limelight, and no man could rise and say that he (Mr. Stratton) had ever done him an injustice. He was going to Ottawa in spite of such tactics. The people would select a representative, one who could serve and help them on other grounds than appeals to bigotry and passion. Bourassa and Burnham were each fomenting his own cry to serve his own ends —one from hatred to Laurier—one from hatred to himself. But he would appeal to no class in Peterborough to elect him, nor would he appeal on any other platform than his and sincere desire to efficiently serve and fairly represent West Peterborough. The WEST PETERBOROUGH NOMINATION.

At the enthusiastic mass meeting on Saturday afternoon, Hon. S. R. Stratton was nominated — which is equivalent to saying that he was elected—the terms are convertible, as the result of the short, sharp fight ahead of us will, we believe with confidence, emphatically show. There is a reason for this confidence. It is engendered by the fact that the confidence of the electors of West Peterborough have reposed in Mr. Stratton with increasing emphasis at every election for the past twenty-five years, remains undiminished in every way. And not even his bitterest political opponents, will refuse to admit, that in his representative capacity; that in respect of the watchful and unceasing oversight he has given the interests of West Peterborough; in respect of the broad view he has always taken of his representative responsibility—that he considered himself the representative of the whole riding, friend and opponent alike, he held the balance with an even and fair hand—always ready to stand by his friends and always willing to do a favour for an opponent in his personal or business interests. Whatever claims the constituency had upon the government for improvements or advantages, Mr. Stratton saw that such claims were effectively considered. Any elector, by pausing and thinking, can recall hundreds of substantial advantages Mr. Stratton has brought to West Peterborough. He has done much for his riding; and a more vivid idea of the solid value of his services can be formed by contrasting what he has done for West Peterborough, with what has been done in any regard by Conservative representatives, either in the Dominion or Provincial Legislature. The people of the west riding want a representative who represents, and they recognize and will so declare on September 21st, that Mr. Stratton is the man for West Peterborough.

Not only is Mr. Stratton worthy of public confidence, by virtue of his past service, but by virtue, or his position and policy in the present contest. He has never been an extremist, in any regard, neither is he now. He believes that the present issue—the reciprocity agreement, involving, simply, free access for the products of Canadian farms to the United States, must and will be a benefit to the farmers, while it will not injuriously affect any other interest, but affect them favourably, as will result from increased prosperity of the farmers, whose crop returns set the standard of financial and commercial conditions. As he said in his address at the acceptance of the nomination, Mr. Stratten is neither an extreme free trader nor extreme protectionist. He describes himself as a modified protectionist and, while admitting the benefits of the British Preference, does not, having regard to Canadian industrial interests, favour its increase. As in all other things, he believes in fair play to both farmer and manufacturer.

Everybody will admit that Mr. Stratton, possesses the business capacity, and the business and parliamentary experience, necessary to make a good member to a larger degree than any opponent that has offered. We want a representative that can express his ideas in action in the interests of his constituents; doing, and not dreaming, is demanded. Mr. Stratton is in the field to win, but he cannot do so without the united aid of his friends. The fight against him will be bitter, and it will not be an open fight either. All the more necessity, then, for every friend of good and progressive government and every friend of West Peterborough, who desires it to continue receiving the benefits of good, live, alert and capable representation, to declare himself and join the battle for another term of good representation and good government.

A TRANSPARENT GAME.

Was there ever a Conservative election campaign in Canada without an appeal to racial and religious bigotry, without an attempt to stir up racial and religious prejudices, and passions? We have had experience with every sort of sectarian cry. We have had the "equal rights," we have had the "Protestant Protective Association," and orators of the Margaret Shepherd type saving the country and Protestantism—always in Conservative party interests. The agitation has been entirely partisan, and the anxiety was not for Protestantism—which is in most danger from the defence of those who trample it under-foot, by making it a stepping stone for party profit—but in the interests of only one party.

Protestantism was in no danger when the Conservatives of Ontario, including the Protestant "protectors" to a men, stood by Sir John Macdonald, literally worshipped him, when he had a solid Quebec behind him. Quebec was all right when the Protestant "protectors" could work with the "slaves of the hierarchy" to keep the Conservative party in power.

The Protestant "protectors" of Ontario followed with faithful steps Sir John Thompson, a Roman Catholic, premier and leader of the Conservative party, a position to which the was entitled because he had the majority of the representatives in parliament behind him, and was placed in the position by the help of the Protestant "protective" element of Ontario — by the way, the same element of the Conservative party which to-day is hounding Laurier because he is of French ancestry, and declared to be anti-British, anti-Imperial, and all that is bad—especially because he's Liberal and in power.

Now, Sir Wilfrid has a Quebec element which wishes to destroy him because he is too British—the "Nationalists" of Quebec, because he betrayed them, because he "sacrificed the Catholics of Manitoba to the Orangiste fanatics."

Now, Laurier is to be assaulted on both flanks. As is shown in an article in yesterday's issue Mr. Borden and his Conservative friends, including the Protestant "protectors" of Ontario are joining hand in hand with the "Nationalists" of Quebec, headed by Mr. Bourassa, to defeat Laurier, whose head is demanded on one hand because he is too British, and on the other, because he is un-British.

Could hypocrisy and humbug go further? What a farce it is for the champions of Protestantism in Ontario to join hands with the French renegade element, which is down on everything British, to destroy a man who is declared to be a menace to Protestantism. Protestantism is not in question at all; it is only used as the tool to bring about a party triumph.

But the game is too transparent, and it will fail, as have failed the other race and religious games that have marked every election for the past quarter of a century. He is a weak-kneed and weak-headed Liberal who will be deceived by such a claptrap conglomeration of inconsistency.

HON. J. R. STRATTON NOMINATED

question from a representative standpoint, was to select the man for member who was best fitted by business capacity, business experience and parliamentary service, to look after the wants of the constituency. At the last election he had thought that he was elected for five years, but Mr. Burnham appeared to think that it was only for five weeks. A protest was brought alleging corrupt practices, but the only corruption shown at the trial was that practised by his opponents, and some of them narrowly escaped the penitentiary over the methods adopted for securing evidence to unseat him. Mr. Borden and his followers in Parliament had forced this election by their obstruction and opposition to the only measure of tariff relief ever proposed specifically in the farmer's interest. He appealed to the farmers in both ridings to vote in their own interests, which would be in the interests of every merchant, manufacturer and mechanic. Since the agreement was proposed, farms from Toronto to Prince Edward had increased from $15 to $20 per acre in value. He did not mind defeat—surely a man could stand one defeat in twenty-five years, but he would be sorry to have the farmers of the two Peterboroughs show the country that they could not see their own interests by sending their products through the doors thrown open to them by the reciprocity agreement.

A Few Reminders.

Mr. Stratton then went on to refer to what had been procured in the way of public improvements for West Peterborough. When he entered the Dominion Parliament he had been able to finish the work on the Wolfe Street Wharf, begun by Mr. Hall.

The growing importance of the commerce of Peterborough demanded large increase of wharfage accommodation, which would be much greater when the canal was completed. In view of this, an appropriation—as a starter—had been made, of $20,000, to erect wharfage of such proportions as to amount to docks. It was proposed to construct it on the lake front between the Matthews establishment and the McDonald saw mills. The $20,000 appropriation, as mentioned, was only a beginning, for a work which, when completed, would cost perhaps $70,000, or $80,000.

In addition, important local works had been built down the river, in the interests of the farmers and the public. Among these was a $5,000 wharf, at Pengelly's; one at Hall's Landing, at $600; another at Smithson's Landing; another at Campbellton, in the East Riding; one at Hall's Bridge, North Monaghan. These had been erected in the interests of the farmers to assist them in getting their stuff to the Peterborough market, something in the same line as reciprocity. He had had for some time in contemplation, and had made preliminary arrangements for the work, which he would complete, if the people gave him the opportunity, that of a concrete retaining wall along the river, between the C.P.R. and the Hunter street bridge. Then they would have a splendid property for public purposes for all time. He was glad to have been instrumental in securing this property from falling into private hands.

When he was in the Local House he found out and told Mayor Denne that private persons had their eye on the river front property, and advised him to apply for the transfer of the property to the city. He had used his influence with the Government, and the splendid river front became the property of the city and would be greatly increased in value when the retaining wall was erected. Then a chute for logs had been placed in the Dickson's dam, by which a minimum quantity of water was used. A good deal of dredging, to improve navigation, had been done down the river, and more would be done in the canal between Nassau and Lakefield. The money had been voted, and the work would be done this year. A splendid new wharf had been built and extended at Lakefield, in addition to a wharf below the dam, to be used in the shipment of lumber and cement. Young's Point had been greatly improved, the grounds beautified and a new bridge and retaining wall had been erected. At Burleigh Falls a work was in progress that would cost about $80,000, raising the dam six feet, so as to increase its hydraulic power and dispense with Lovesick Lock. The entire cost to rearrange the canal, in accordance with the new conditions, would be about $300,000. In the north country seven conservation dams had been constructed, with the result that we had a steady flow of water the year round, and the power capacity available in Peterborough had been doubled. He was not paid to look after the preservation of these waters, but they were stored by the means of the works erected in the public intrests, and three more dams, also of concrete, would need to be erected to make the water conservation system complete. At Buckhorn Mr. Hall had begun, and he (Mr. Stratton) had completed through the Government, a dam costing $70,000, with a highway bridge on top, which would have cost the county to erect a sum of about $12,000. The county was to pay $3,000 for this addition, but he had urged the Government to relieve the county of this payment, which had been done, and the county and county taxpayers were so much the gainers.

Mr. Stratton said he had fought out and settled the vexatious bridge question with Victoria, with the result there was now peace and the bridges were jointly maintained and the farmers of Victoria have now access to Peterborough—the best market in the Province.

Then there had been provided free rural mail delivery over one hundred miles of mail route in the townships of Smith, Ennismore, North Monaghan and Harvey, by which farmers along the route had mail matter delivered daily at their doors, both going from and to Peterborough. Mr. Stratton said he did not know of a county in Canada that had less cause of complaint than Peterborough. The Government had dealt liberally with Peterborough, perhaps because they were not allowed to forget its claims. Whatever he had been enabled to do he could say that he had, during twenty-five years' representation of West Peterborough, done nothing that he was ashamed of.

In regard to the issue of reciprocity they would see that a high tariff had lost to the farmers of the county ninety million dollars of trade in the single article of barley. There was no disloyalty in mutual trade. In the past fourteen years, in spite of the tariff, we had done a large and growing trade with the United States and had at the same time increased our tarde with Great Britain by 224 million dollars. He urged his hearers to keep their minds clear on the main question and forget side issues, and they owuld see that reciprocity was a good thing. They must.

The Farmer's Right To His Turn In Sharing Benefits Of Tariff Re-Adjustment

Does anyone doubt that reciprocity, such as arranged for under this Taft-Fielding agreement, is essentially a farmers' measure? Let him look at the signs and see.

Where is the support for the measure admittedly strongest? In the Prairie Provinces, where there is as yet little or no manufacturing industry.

When Hon. Walter Scott was asked whether he would enter the fight he answered, "What fight?"

There is no fight against reciprocity in Saskatchewan, where Mr. Scott, the Liberal leader, and Mr. Haultain, the Conservative leader, the rival leaders on other issues, both favour it.

Where are the principal enemies of reciprocity? They are in Toronto, and in Montreal, cities which have grown up while industry and transportation and financial enterprise have been given everything they have needed for success, the farmer assenting, and largely paying the cost.

Ask where the money is coming from that is counted upon to prevent ratification of the agreement by Canada. Is it the farmers who subscribe? Or do the hints point to people who have had their turn, who have enjoyed the favour of Parliament, who have grown rich while the farmer was waiting for Sir John Macdonald's prediction to be realised, for the American market to be opened?

* * *

Emphatically, it is the people who have had their turn who seem to be trying to prevent the farmer from having his turn.

Once the fact is thoroughly realized it would not be surprising if even those who are most active would see the error of their ways.

The Canadian farmer has been, in the main, indulgent towards those who have profitted by the commerce his labour has helped to create. The Canadian farmer has been generous where, of late, the American farmer has been captious. The first harsh words spoken out loud against Canadian manufacturers by Canadian farmers were heard when Mr. Borden went West and told the farmers he would not let them have the American market.

In the States the active complaint of the farmers against privileged greed has resulted in the overthrow of the Republican party, and has made imminent a reversal of the policy which had been steadily supported for twenty years. If the beneficiaries of high tariff really wanted to preserve the amicable relation that has existed for so long in Canada, between farmers and manufacturers, if they really wanted to prevent the development in Canada of such a conflict as that which has turned politics inside out and threatens to disturb the stability of industry in the States, they would come forward and in all friendliness rejoice that the farmer's opportunity had come.

* * *

There are some so shortsighted as to argue that the farmers must be prevented from accepting this boon for fear if he got in his appetite might be sharpened for more. No estimate could be more unjust. Not since this agreement was brought down has there been the first hint that the farmer desired any one's injury. Not from the moment Sir Wilfrid said manufacturers would be left in possession of their vested rights—would not be hurt by the Government by tariff reduction—has any spokesman of the farmers so much as argued for a wider measure of reciprocity. The satisfaction is general that what the farmer wants can be given him without hurting the manufacturer.

But supposing, just supposing, Mr. Borden was enabled to defeat reciprocity, and thus make good his refusal to let the farmers of Canada take what is offered them, does anyone suppose it would be very long before the farmers of Canada occasioned a greater disturbance than the American farmers have made?

Deny to the farmer the right to seize an opportunity for which, at Sir John Macdonald's demand, he has waited for thirty years, and base the refusal on ill considered orders from those who have asked for and had their share of the good things: that would be to proclaim the farmer the bond slave of those whose power is derived from his generosity. We, in Canada, cannot afford to have such a war of classes as would follow on the heels of an act so charged with ingratitude.

People who are ashamed of their real design may shout about annexation till they are blue in the face: they cannot convince even themselves that the men on the land are disloyal to it, or ever will be.

If we could have a straight vote on the one simple question involved, whether the Canadian farmer shall have his chance now that his turn has come, city people and country people would give but the one answer. And Canada will give that answer. Watch and see.

in representative matters, put confidence in someone. If they put confidence in him he would see that it would be abused no more in the future than it had been in the past.

While he supported the freer trade brought by reciprocity, he was not a free trader. Neither was he an extreme protectionist. He was a modified protectionist. He thought that we had given Great Britain a sufficient preference and should not increase it if we considered our own industries. He did not believe that every manufacturing industry was a monopoly. He did not believe that reasonable manufacturers should, or would object to helping the farmers, for he did not see how free exchange of farm products could injure them. He would never support any measures that injured or even threatened to injure, our manufacturing industries.

Mr. Stratton said he would conclude by again accepting the nomination so heartily offered him, and would do his best, with their help to continue to be their representative. It seems that Mr. Burnham is not going to discuss reciprocity, but "go for Stratton," but he hoped that he would leave enough of him to enable him to be of continued service to West Peterborough, and, looking over the whole field, he thought it would be admitted that he had done fairly well by West Peterborough. He was grateful for the confidence reposed in him in the past, and one reason that influenced him to overcome his desire to not again be a candidiate was because he could not and would not go back upon the people that had stood by him for twenty-five years.

The most successful and harmonious and hopeful nomination in local history closed with loud cheers for the King, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the candidate and prospective representative of West Peterborough.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON

The blood must be filtered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

By JACK LONDON

"It is not so one-sided as you seem to think," he began. "I was doing very nicely on Berande before you came. At least, I was not suffering indignities such as being accused of cowardly conduct, as you have just accused me. Remember, please remember, I did not invite you to Berande. Nor did I invite you to stay on at Berande. It was by staying that you brought about this—to you—unpleasant situation. By staying you made yourself a temptation, and now you would blame me for it. I did not want you to stay. I wasn't in love with you then. I wanted you to go to Sydney, to go back to Hawaii. But you insisted on staying. You virtually—"

He paused for a softer word than the one that had risen to his lips, and she took it away from him.

"Forced myself on you—that's what you meant to say," she cried, the flags of battle painting her cheeks. "Go ahead. Don't mind my feelings."

"All right, I won't," he said decisively, realizing that the discussion was in danger of becoming a vituperative, schoolboy argument. "You have insisted on being considered as a man. Consistency would demand that you talk like a man, and like a man listen to man-talk. And listen you shall. It is not your fault this unpleasantness has arisen. I do not blame you for anything—remember that; and for the same reason you should not blame me for anything."

He noticed her bosom heaving, as she sat with clenched hands, and it was all he could do to conquer the desire to flash his arms out and around her instead of going on with his coolly planned campaign. As it was, he nearly told her that she was a most adorable boy. But he checked all such wayward fancies, and held himself rigidly down to his disquisition.

"You can't help being yourself. You can't help being a very desirable creature so far as I am concerned. You have made me want you. You didn't intend to, you did not try to. You were so made, that is all. And I was so made that I was ripe to want you. But I can't help being myself. I can't, by an effort of will, cease from wanting you, any more than you, by an effort of will, can make yourself undesirable to me."

"Oh, this desire! this want! want! want!" she broke in rebelliously. "I am not quite a fool. I understand some things. And the whole thing is so foolish and absurd—and uncomfortable. I wish I could get away from it. I really think it would be a good idea for me to marry Noa Noah or Adamu Adam, or Lalaperu there, or any black boy. Then I could give him orders, and keep him pennest away from me, and men like you would leave me alone and not talk marriage and 'I want, I want.'"

Sheldon laughed in spite of himself, and far from any genuine impulse to laugh.

"You are positively soulless," he said savagely.

"Because I've a soul that doesn't yearn for a man for master?" she took up the gage. "Very well, then I am soulless, and what are you going to do about it?"

"I am going to ask you why you look like a woman? Why you have the form of a woman? the lips of a woman? the wonderful hair of a woman? And I am going to answer: because you are a woman, though the woman in you is asleep, and that some day the woman will wake up."

"Heaven forbid!" she cried in such sudden and genuine dismay as to make him laugh and to bring a smile to her own lips against herself.

"I've got some more to say to you," Sheldon pursued. "I did try to protect you from every other man in the Solomons, and from yourself, as well. As for me, I didn't dream that danger lay in that quarter. So I failed to protect you at all. You went your own wilful way, just as though I didn't exist — wrecking schooners, recruiting on Malaita, and sailing schooners, one lone, unprotected girl in the company of some of the worst scoundrels in the Solomons, Fowler and Brahms and Curtis. And such is the perverseness of human nature—I am frank, you see—I love you for that, too. I love you for all of you, just as you are."

She made a moue of distaste and raised a hand protestingly.

"Don't he said. "You have no right to recoil from the mention of my love for you. Remember, this is a man-talk. From the point of view of the talk, you are a man. The woman in you is only incidental, accidental, and irrelevant. You've got to listen to the bald statement of fact—strange though it is, that I love you.

"And now I won't bother you any more about love. We'll go on the same as before. You are better off and safer on Berande, in spite of the fact that I love you, than anywhere else in the Solomons. But I want you, as a final item of man-talk, to remember, from time to time, that I love you, and that it will be the dearest day of my life when you consent to marry me. I want you to think of it sometimes. You can't help but think of it sometimes. And now we won't talk of it any more. As between men, there's my hand."

He held out his hand. She hesitated, then gripped it heartily, and smiled through her tears.

"I wish—" she faltered. "I wish, instead of that black Mary you'd given me somebody to swear for me."

And with this enigmatic utterance she turned away.

CHAPTER XXI.

Contraband.

Sheldon did not mention the subject again, nor did his conduct change from what it had always been. There was nothing of the pining lover, nor of the lover at all, in his demeanor. Nor was there any awkwardness between them. They were as frank and friendly in their relations as ever. He had wondered if his belligerent love declaration might have aroused some womanly self-consciousness in Joan, but he looked in vain for any sign of it. S heappeared as unchanged as he, and while he knew that he hid his real feelings, he was firm in his belief that she hid nothing. And yet the germ that he had implanted must be at work: he was confident of that, though he was without confidence as to the result. There was no forecasting this strange girl's processes. She might awaken, it was true; and on the other hand, and with equal chance, he might be the wrong man for her, and his declaration of love might only more firmly set her in her views on single blessedness.

While he devoted more and more of his time to the plantation itself, she took over the house and its multitudinous affairs, and she took hold firmly, in sailor fashion, revolutionizing the system and discipline. The labour situation on Berande was improving. The Martha had carried away fifty of the blacks whose time was up, and they had been among the worst on the plantation—five-year men, recruited by Billy Bellowed, men who had gone through the old days of terrorism when the original owners of Berande had been driven away. The new recruits, being broken in under the new regime, gave better promise. Joan had joined with Sheldon from the start in the programme that they must be gripped with the strong hand and at the same time be treated with absolute justice. If they were to escape being contaminated by the older, brutal men retained.

"I think it would be a good idea to put all the gangs at work close to the house this afternoon," she announced one day at breakfast). I've cleaned up the house, and you ought to clean up the barracks. There is too much standing going on."

"A good idea," Sheldon agreed. "Their boxes should be searched. I have just missed a couple of shirts, and my best tooth-brush is gone."

"And two boxes of my cartridges," she added, "to say nothing of handkerchiefs, towels, sheets, and my best pair of slippers. But what they want with your tooth-brush is more than I can imagine. They'll be stealing the billiard balls next."

"One did disappear a few weeks before you came," Sheldon laughed. "We'll search the boxes this afternoon."

And a busy afternoon it was. Joan and Sheldon, both armed, went through the barracks, house by house—the boss-boys assisting, and half a dozen messengers, in relay, shouting along the line the names of the boys wanted. Each boy brought the key to his particular box, and was permitted to look on while the contents were overhauled by the boss-boys.

A wealth of loot was recovered. There were fully a dozen cane-knives—big, hacking weapons, with razor edges, capable of decapitating a man at a stroke. Towels, sheets, shirts, and slippers, along with tooth-brushes, wisp-brooms, soap, the missing billiard-ball, and all the lost and forgotten trifles of many months, came to light. But most astonishing was the quantity of ammunition—cartridges for Lee-Metfords, for Winchesters and Marlins, for revolvers from thirty-two calibre to forty-five, shotgun cartridges, Joan's two boxes of thirty-eight, cartridges of prodigious bore for the ancient Sniders of Malaita, flasks of black powder, sticks of dynamite, yards of fuse, and boxes of detonators. But the great find was in the house occupied by Gogoomy and five Port Adams recruits. The fact that the boxes yielded nothing excited Sheldon's suspicions, and he gave orders to dig up the earthern floor. Wrapped in matting, well-oiled, free from rust, and brand new, two Winchesters were first unearthed. Sheldon did not recognize them. They had not come from Berande: neither had the forty flasks of black powder found under the corner post of the house; and, while he could not be sure, he could remember no loss of eight boxes of detonators. A big Colt's revolver he recognised as Hughie Drummond's, while Joan identified a thirty-two Iver & Johnson as a loss reported by Matapuu the first week he landed at Berande. The absence of any cartridges made Sheldon geraint in the digging up of the floor, and a fifty-pound flour-tin was his reward. With glowering eyes Gogoomy looked on while Sheldon took from the tin a hundred rounds each for the two Winchesters and fully as many rounds more of nondescript cartridges of all sorts and makes and calibres.

The contraband and stolen property was piled in assorted heaps on the back veranda of the bungalow. A few paces from the bottom of the steps were grouped the forty-odd culprits, with behind them, in solid array, the several hundred blacks of the plantation. At the head of the steps Joan and Sheldon were seated, while on the steps stood the gang-bosses. One by one the culprits were called up and examined. Nothing definite could be extracted from them. They lied transparently, but persistently, and when caught in one he explained it away with half a dozen others. One boy complacently announced that he had found eleven sticks of dynamite on the beech. Matapuu's revolver, found in the box of one Kapa, was explained away by that boy as having been given to him by Lervumie. Lervumie, called forth to testify, said he had got it from Noni; Noni had got it from Sulefatoi; Sulefatoi from Choka; Choka from Ngava; and Ngava completed the circle by stating that it had been given him by Kapu. Kapu, thus doubly damned, calmly gave full details of how it had been given to him by Lervumie; and Lervumie, with equal wealth of detail, told how he had received it from Noni; and from Noni to Sulefatoi it went on around the circle again.

Divers articles were traced indubitably to the house-boys, each of whom steadfastly proclaimed his own innocence and cast doubts on his fellows. The boy with the billiard-ball said that he had never seen it in his life before, and hazarded the suggestion that it had got into his box through some mysterious and occultly evil agency. So far as he was concerned it might have dropped down from heaven for all he knew how it got there. To the cooks and boat's crews of every vessel that had dropped anchor off Berande in the past several years were ascribed the arrival of scores of the stolen articles and of the major portion of the ammunition. There was no tracing the truth in any of it, though it was without doubt that the unidentified weapons and unfamiliar cartriges had come ashore off of visiting craft.

Tired In Body and in Mind

Worn Out by the Monotonous Indoor Life of Winter

Spring Finds the Blood Weak and the System Run Down—Vigor is Restored by

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Just at the time when the buds are bursting and the birds are chirping merrily in the trees, many people feel most keenly the debilitating and enervating effects of indoor winter life.

The blood is so thin and watery that it fails to supply nutrition to the nervous system and to the vital organs. You feel tired, weak and discouraged, appetite fails, digestion is impaired energy and ambition are lacking, and strange depressing feelings come over you.

But nature has provided certain restoratives to be used at this time of year to form new rich blood and create new nerve force. These elements are found in condensed and easily assimilated form in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Thousands of men and women have learned to escape this spring depression and weakness and discouragement by using this great restorative. Vitality is increased, strength and confidence return, buoyancy is felt in every movement of the body, pallor and weakness and disease give place to the glow of health and vigour of mind and body.

Dr. Chase's Nerve food, the great spring tonic and restorative, 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers, or box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, who moved the vote of confidence in Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Government at the Liberal Convention on Saturday, and who was elected the Secretary of the West Peterborough Liberal Association, is a young man of brilliant attainments. He has been practising law in this city for the last six years, and is well known for his large and successful legal practice. Mr. Gordon is a most energetic organiser and a first class platform speaker with very wide and popular acquaintance with the electors of the city. His election as Secretary of the Liberal Association was a deserved recognition of his ability and popularity.

MR. G. N. GORDON,

PERMISSION GIVEN TO FISH ABOVE LIFT LOCK

The Examiner has seen Mr. John Watt, Fishery Overseer for this division, relative to the information regarding fishing in the Trent Canal, north of the Lift Lock. It will be remembered that this part of the canal was supplied with spawn three years ago, and it was made illegal to fish there since that time. This period has now elapsed, and no one need have any fear of getting into difficulties fishing for bass or lunge if if they do not break the game laws that are in operation in this province.

A few nights ago when the fishing came in a reliable estimate of the number along the banks of the canal fishing in the space of about half a mile was placed at 300. A number of good catches were made, and the fish both bass and lunge, were of good size. The fishing as a whole around Peterborough, has been very good this season.

Alderman Morgan got the fever on Saturday afternoon, and joined the throng at the Canal. As usual, he got what he went after and returned with four fine bass.

CHEMONG PARK NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Taber set a new angling record on Saturday when they landed five fine lunge, varying in weight from five to sixteen pounds. This remarkable catch was viewed by a great number of cottagers and visitors, and many snap shots were taken. Fishing is good all over the Lake now.

Mr. and Mrs. George Ball spent the week end the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. Rutherford at "Ville Marie" Cottage, Chemong. A run to Buckhorn in the boat's launch was a pleasing feature of the outing. The guests were well pleased with the splendid outing.

Misses Matilda Dawson and Mabel Ray, of Toronto, are making a two-weeks' visit to Miss G. Brooks, at the latter's cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Mulhern are spending a couple of weeks in the Park at the Cottage of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. Burritt.

Messrs. Tom Carson, A. Quinlan and D. Gonter spent the week-end the guests of Messrs. M. and W. O'Brien.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Julian Fife, an Otonabee Farmer Was Struck and Killed at Jackson Park on Saturday

WAS UNDER A TREE

A sad accident occurred on Saturday about 1.30 in the afternoon, when Mr. Julian H. Fife, a farmer of Otonabee, residing with his widowed mother on lot 24, con. 4, was struck by lightning and instantly killed at the Jackson Park. Mr. Fife came into the city on business Saturday morning, and had gone out to the park after dinner on private business. He was standing talking to some friends under a tree about half way between the south entrance of the park and the railway, when the storm came up. He suggested that it was a bad place to be—under a tree—in an electric storm. Just when he made the remark it started to rain, and he made a dash for the building at the end of the street car line. He had only gone a short distance when his friends were blinded by a fiery lightning bolt, and when they recovered from the shock, they saw the prostrate form of their companion lying on the grass near the fence. They did not move him, but phoned at once for a doctor, afterwards for the Coroner, Dr. Greer, who viewed the remains and decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The remains were then removed to Comstock's undertaking rooms, where it was prepared for burial. There were no marks on the body, other than the left side was somewhat blackened.

Hairdressers

Recommend Parisian Sage

Hugh D. McKinnon, of Brantford, Ont., says: "I consider Parisian Sage the best preparation for the cure of dandruff, falling hair and itching scalp, that I have ever used in my business. It is also a most excellent tonic and dressing, and has given perfect satisfaction to my customers. I am and always shall be pleased to highly recommend Parisian Sage."

Parisian Sage is the only scientific hair restorer in the world and it is fully guaranteed by the proprietors to do what they claim or refund your money, but you must see that you get the genuine, which is guaranteed by Wm. Mudfill, who sells it at 50c a large bottle. The girl with the Auburn Hair is on each package. Look for this.

CENSUS TAKERS GET THEIR PAY

Ottawa, August 7th.—The Department of Agriculture, yesterday afternoon issued checks to the census enumerators throughout the country where the original accounts have been corrected. It was decided after completion of the enumeration to withhold ten per cent on all checks until accounts had been examined and found correct. Many of the enumerators have been waiting their pay for some weeks. In Ottawa those who covered one section of the city were paid in full, but the money of the others was held up, much dissatisfaction arising as a result.

THE ANNUAL C.M.B.A. OUTING will be held on Tuesday, August 8th, per steamer Stoney Lake to Burleigh Falls and other points on the lake. Adults 50c, children 25c. Boat will leave Wolfe St Wharf at 8 a. m, Ashburnham wharf at 8 15 and Lift Lock at 8 30. Tickets on sale at Jos Hickey's Shoe Store and at LeBrun & Co's Clothing Store. 4d—31-Aug. 3-5-7

WOMAN SUICIDES

Examiner Special:

QUEBEC, QUE., AUG. 7.—A woman named Mrs. Telesphore Garneau, of Limoilou, cut her throat with a razor on Friday night and lingered until Sunday, when she died. She was thirty-five years of age and married. Domestic troubles is assigned for the rash act.

ARRESTED FOR SPYING

BREMEN, GERMANY, AUG. 7.—An Englishman, said to be an officer of the British yeomanry, was arrested here to-day, accused of spying on German fortifications on the North sea coast. The prisoner, whose name has not yet been learned, was admitted to bail later.

TARANTULA KILLED AFTER LONG SIEGE

The corner of Sherbrooke and Rubidge street was the scene of an exciting struggle shortly before midnight Saturday night. Mr. J. T. Donoghue was preparing to close up his grocery store for the night, and was wishing pleasant dreams to some late customers when he saw, crawling on a banana stalk in his display window, a spider, which he said had legs as long but more numerous, than a fair-sized chicken.

Mr. Donoghue had often heard of those crawling inhabitants of the banana tree, but had never seen one before, and although the tarantula is said to be not as dangerous as people suppose, the proprietor took no chances. He first picked up a pair of pliers and gingerly edged his way to the banana stalk, but hesitated when he considered that if he pinched the tool onto one of the monster's many legs it could afford to lose one and still be able to trot around the store and escape. And as for putting the pliers on that ugly body—ugh! What a horrible embrace.

Mr. Donoghue then started on a new tack. He stepped lightly upon a box where the stalk of bananas hung in the display window. This window faces the east, but there was no east or west, north or south for Mr. Donoghue just at that time. His eye was glued on that long-legged and many legged monster, and he determined to be rid of it. He reached out carefully and unfastened the rope holding the stalk. He held the rope far out and held his breath until he reached the outer air, and there on the electric-lighted sidewalk the battle began. But the struggle was a short one. The plans were well made. Mr. H. B. Mason, of Sherbrooke street was armed with a barrel top watching the enemy's movements, and after several swishings and much wriggling and hard usage of the banana stock by Mr. Donoghue to make Mr. Tarantula "come out and fight" the thing pranced proudly out into the glare, and—whack! sounded the barrel head. Mr. Mason made a sure shot, and the monster was no more.

THE WEATHER

Saturday's thunderstorm, although of short duration, was very severe, and the downpour was heavy. Over three-quarters of an inch on the level fell in about half an hour. We have had a number of very severe thunderstorms in this district this summer, and the rainfall in this vicinity has been much heavier than elsewhere—even in counties adjoining. Sunday was again warm, the thermometer rising to 86 in the shade.—W.P.

BIG ITALIAN FIGHT ON ELM STREET ONE MAN USES RAZOR ON CONSTABLE ANOTHER HAS COLLAR BONE FRACTURED

Italians in Neighbourhood of Elm Street Get Into Quarrel in Alley-way, and Some Get Badly Beaten up---Police Arrive on Scene and Have Razors Thrown at Them---Hundreds of People Blocked the Street.

There was a general mix-up among the Italian population of the city yesterday, when Sunny Italy's sons got too much of the cup that cheers. P. C. Brown distinguished himself admirably by quelling the disturbance single-handed. The Italians involved in the mix-up were Frank Carneau, charged with being drunk and disorderly; Tony Rose and two other men, who obstructed the police officer, Peter Grant and Frank Dobson, both charged with disorderly conduct. Carneau, who suffers the pain of a broken collar bone, as the result of the struggle, was fined $5. Tony Rose, who threw an open razor at the Constable, when the latter was about to arrest him, was remanded until next Friday, in order that further information may be received regarding his past record. Peter Grant who was charged with being disorderly, was fined $5.00, which he was unable to pay, and as a result will stay for fifteen days on the hill, or until his fine is paid. Frank Dobson was discharged.

The scene of action was in alley-way off Elm street, and those involved live in the vicinity.

P. C. Brown gave evidence as follows:

"I got a 'phone message last night about 6 o'clock, and I went up to Elm street, and down in this alley-way I found Carneau, pretty well done up. His lips were cut and his face was all covered with blood. Dobson was helping him out of the alleyway. Carneau was talking loudly, and was also using bad language, and when I went to arrest him and Dobson, Rose, who was standing a little distance away, ran up and caught hold of me, and tried to pull me away, but I succeeded in handcuffing the two men. Then I went to handcuff Rose, and he struck at me several times, and then drew out a razor, cutting his hands badly in doing so, and flung it at me, but I dodged. I then got him handcuffed. There were two or three hundred people assembled around them.

Frank Carneau was put in the box. His arm was in a sling, and he looked as if the battle had gone against him. He said that Dr. McPherson was called and attended to his injuries. He admitted being drunk, but he said he was sitting in a house and Peter Grant came up and called him bad names, and when he got up to come to the door, Grant fired stones at him. He further stated that after he went out, Grant struck him, and knocked him down, and then struck him on the left side when he was down. That was when his collar bone was fractured. He stated that he tried to hit Grant, but Dobson appeared on the scene, and separated them. Grant told a different story. He said that Carneau hit him, and kicked him, before he committed the assault.

Dobson, in the course of his evidence, stated that he was at Rose's house at supper, and Grant came in, all out of breath, and nearly fell on the floor, and told him that there was an Italian tried to kill him. He said that he went to see what was the matter, and when the constable came, he was trying to settle the quarrel.

A Bobcaygeon man was fined $2 for being drunk on Saturday.

TRAIN STRIKES WAGGON KILLING FOUR PERSONS

YOU NEEDN'T DESPAIR

Here's An Offer That Should Interest Sufferers of Skin Irritation

First of all we want to explain that the remedy we are about to tell you of carries our promise of money back for the mere asking to anyone not thoroughly pleased with its use. That should unquestionably establish the sincere faith we have in it.

Parasites or germs cause eczema, and eczema is probably the most prevalent cause of all skin ailments. To overcome them, the remedy must of necessity destroy or remove the parasite or germ before relief can be obtained.

Possessing remarkable antiseptic, germicidal, cleansing, soothing and healing power, the curative values of Rexall Eczema Ointment is very pronounced in the treatment of eczema and allied skin diseases, whether of the dry, scaly sort, the weeping type, where there is a flow of ill-smelling excretion, or the intermediary kind, such as pimples, blotches, discolorations, ringworm or acne. It is very useful for treating hives, nettle rash, insect bites and wounds. It is ideal for the skin ailments peculiar to children.

Rexall Eczema Ointment is grayish-white in colour, has a pleasant odour, and is very cleanly for use. If you are a sufferer of skin irritations or eruptions in any form whatever, we urge you to try a box at our risk. At the mere hint of dissatisfaction you may have your money back. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Remember, it is only sold at our store —The Rexall Store—McDermid & Jury.

MR. G. J. WHITE, SMITH, SUFFERS LOSS OF BARNS AND CONTENTS

Saturday's Storm Results Disastrously for a Smith Township Milkman---Mrs. White Stunned---Barns Struck and Burned.

While Saturday's storm did not have the appearance in the city of being likely to do much damage yet it proved by results to be one of the worst of the season. In addition to the death of Mr. Fife by lightning, several barns in the vicinity of the city were struck and burned with their contents.

While Mr. and Mrs. C. J. White, lot 2, Communication Road, were sitting watching the storm, a flash of lightning appeared to pass between them, knocking Mrs. White over, and stunning her. On looking out to see if anything had been hit, Mr. White discovered the barn in a mass of flames from end to end. It was with difficulty that several horses in the barn were rescued, and they could hardly be made to stay outside of the burning building. In addition to the loss of the barn, Mr. White lost 75 tons of hay in the barn, a stack outside, several cutters, and bob-sleighs, and the usual farm machinery found on an up-to-date farm, as well as 100 head of turkeys and hens.

While the loss is very heavy it would be much more severe but for the fact that just a week previous Mr. White placed an insurance on the barn and contents for $800. The family was just getting their place into good shape, and the disaster will be deeply regretted by all their friends.

BUOYING AND LIGHTING TO BE GREATLY IMPROVED

Suggestions Made by Canal Superintendent Endorsed in Report of Chief Engineer

Mr. Anderson, chief engineer of the Marine and Fisheries Department, as our readers are aware, visited Stoney Clear, Chemong, Pigeon, Sturgeon, Balsam, Cameron and Simcoe Lakes and Lindsay River at the request of the Hon. J. R. Stratton, with a view to the better buoying and lighting of the route. In his report to the Dept. he has approved of the suggestions of Mr. McClellan, Supt. of the Trent Canal.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has promised Mr. Stratton, who laid the matter before him, that the work shall be commenced immediately, and navigators will be heartily pleased with the improvements when completed.

FARMERS AND MERCHANTS WANT BRIDGE RE-OPENED

The City Council of Peterborough and the County Council of Peterborough are, perhaps, not appreciating the loss that the City of Peterborough is sustaining by the long closing of the Pigeon Creek bridge, thus preventing the people of Verulam and Emily coming to Peterborough and trading in our city. These people are accustomed to doing all their business in Peterborough, where the market is much better and the farmers of Emily and Verulam and the north, as well as the merchants of Peterborough are complaining loudly of the state of affairs.

The City and County Councils are certainly neglecting their duty in allowing this bridge to be in the condition it is. It is certain that the County of Victoria does not care if it is ever re-opened, and it is up to the County of Peterborough to take the initiative in the interests they are elected to promote and protect.

This bridge has been closed to traffic for three weeks and it was also closed for a period in the spring. There may be very few members of the Council aware of the importance of keeping this bridge open. It is up to the merchants to start something, as the trade which comes over that bridge is of very great importance to the city.

PLOT TO POISON CHILDREN

Was Well Known Here

We regret to announce the death of John E. Nelson of Messrs. Willis, Nelson & Co., warehousemen, Queen street, Glasgow, which occurred yesterday, at his residence, Belmont, Pollockshields.

Mr. Nelson, who was in his 83rd year, had recently been in poor health. For many years he took an active part in the public life of the city, and was identified with the work of some of the most important charitable and philanthropic institutions.

The following is from the Glasgow Herald:

He entered the Town Council in 1892, as representative of the Seventh Ward, and served a period of three years. He was a member of the Incorporation of Skinners and Incorporation of Maltmen; of the former he three times occupied the position of Deacon. He was also member of the Merchants House and of the Grand Antiquity Society. Among other offices of public character which he held were those of Director of the Blind Asylum, with which he was associated for thirty years, occupying for a time the position of chairman. He was also manager of the Royal Infirmary, Governor of the Eye Infirmary and Women's Hospital. To each of these institutions he devoted much time and valuable assistance in the direction of their affairs.

Mr. Nelson was Justice of the Peace for Glasgow.

The above is a sketch contained in a recent issue of the Glasgow Herald and referring to the death of the late Mr. E. Nelson, one of Glasgow's finest citizens.

Mr. Nelson paid periodical visits to this city and had many friends here.

He was a close, personal friend of Mr. Robert Fair and also a guest while visiting in the city. It is about five years since he visited Peterborough last.

FORMER OPPONENTS WILL VOTE FOR STRATTON

Since his nomination on Saturday, Mr. Stratton has received assurance from no less than twenty persons that voted against him last election, that they would support and vote for him in the present contest. They think he is the representative Wat Peterborough needs.

Work Plentiful

35 men passed through the hands of Mr. Chalmers, employment agent, during the past week. A number of these men were sent to Campbellford to work on the Trent Valley Canal, while a contingent was sent to the Soo to work at the lumbering industry. Mr. Chalmers says that labour is scarce and work plentiful.

WEDDING BELLS

RUTH—HUDSON.

A quiet, but very pretty wedding was celebrated at 2.30 to-day, when Pearl Hudson, daughter of the late Richard Hudson, of 336 Rubidge St., and Ernest Ruth, of Toronto, were united in the bonds of matrimony at the Park Street Baptist church, by the Rev. W. C. Biddiford.

The wedding was a private one, only the immediate relatives being present.

After the ceremony a dainty wedding repast was participated in, and at 4.28 the happy bridal couple left for Toronto.

OBITUARY

JULIAN H. FIFE.

A sad and sudden death occurred on Saturday, when Mr. Julian Fife, who resided with his widowed mother, on Lot 24, Con. 4, Otonabee, was struck and killed by lightning. Mr. Fife had been a resident of Otonabee for many years, and was well known in this city, where he had a host of friends and a number of relatives. The deceased was 52 years of age, and is survived by his mother, one brother, Levi Fife, who resides at home; also the following cousins in this city: Herb. Fife, Harvey street; John, an insurance agent at the south end; W. A., of Grafton and Co., Isaac, of Stewart street, Mrs Harry Stabler, George street, Mrs. J. Heel, Dublin street, Alex. Fife, of the C. G. E.. His father died some years ago.

The funeral was held this afternoon from his late residence to the Fife cemetery, Otonabee.

TEDDY TELLS WHY.

Ex-President Roosevelt Explains His Action In Panic.

New York, Aug. 7.—Theodore Roosevelt, ex-president of the United States, told Saturday his own story of the part he played in approving the Tennessee Coal & Iron Railroad Co.'s sale to the steel trust in the panic days of 1907.

As a voluntary witness before the Congressional investigating committee in the City Hall, he first read a statement, and then answered questions. He said the entire responsibility for favoring the sale had been his, although the Attorney-General acquiesced afterward. The peril of the financial situation, he declared, has made prompt action necessary. He had taken that action. He was ready to stand by it.

With characteristic emphasis, he said that he would have been a derelict public officer if he had done otherwise.

It was the first time Col. Roosevelt had given his story directly to the public. Since 1907 there had been many versions and explanations from his friends and foes, and criticism and defence had been prolific. The committee's chairman announced at the beginning of the session that no subpoena had been needed to summon the witness.

London Faces Famine.

London, Aug. 7.—The strike of the dock laborers is marking time to-day pending the arbitration of the dispute by Sir Albert Kaye Rollit, who is identified with large commercial and steamship interests. The award in the dispute, which is between the organizations of transport laborers and the shipowners, will probably be made to-day. A general strike of the men will be declared if the award does not suit them.

Many steamships sailed from here Saturday with thousands of tons less than the usual amount of freight. Over two hundred trainloads of freight are standing on the wharves ready to be placed on board the vessels. The latest steamships which have arrived here bring the total of undischarged cargoes up to a high point. It is estimated that 500,000 carcasses of mutton, 100,000 quarters of beef and huge quantities of eggs and butter are still on board the vessels.

London is threatened with a scarcity of food stuffs, and beef threatens to become a luxury. Prices have advanced four cents per pound in the retail market.

W. A. P. Elect Officers.

Regina, Sask., Aug. 7.—Saturday afternoon saw the conclusion of the Western Associated Press convention with the election of the following officers: Hon. President, E. S. Zienng. Wapella; president, W. F. Kerr, The Leader, Regina; first vice-president, A. Dunlop, Neepawa, Man.; second vice-president, P. Allen, Port Arthur; third vice-president, S. N. Wagner, The Enterprise, Yorkton; secretary, G. H. Shaults, Winnipeg; treasurer, John S. Lovell, Winnipeg.

Executive: A. G. Graham, Grandview; M. Tyrell, Medicine Hat; Chas. Hynds, The News-Record, Kamsden; E. K. McMillan, The News, Moose Jaw; D. Smith, Fort William.

The twin cities, Fort William and Port Arthur, were chosen as the next year's meeting place. The seven representatives of the newly-formed daily papers section met and discussed matters of special interest to them.

Divorce Defendant Killed.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—A tragic touch was given to a case which came up before Recorder DesJardins in the Hull courts Friday.

Some time ago Mrs. George Papillon of 99 Catherine street, took action against her husband for a separation and the date was fixed for the hearing of the case.

When the recorder took the bench and the case was called, Charles Papillon, son of the defendant, entered the courtroom and advised the recorder that the case would have to be dropped as his father had been run over and killed. The dramatic end to the case caused somewhat of a sensation in the courtroom.

Murdered His Father.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Joseph Vacek, jr., 17 years of age, son of Joseph Vacek, a wealthy contractor, Friday night, confessed that he shot and killed his father at their home. The shooting is believed to have followed a demand of the boy for money.

The father's body was found in his room. The murder was committed when Mrs. Vacek and her two daughters were out for a few minutes. The young man, who since his recent graduation from a manual training school has refused to go to work was suspected, and finally, under pressure, confessed.

Trouble For G.T.R.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—The machinists in the employ of the Grand Trunk have demanded a new agreement with the road, the old one having expired some time ago. Failing to get a new agreement voluntarily, the men will adopt means to compel the company to grant them one.

They opened negotiations with the road some time ago, but at first got little satisfaction. They then went to the department of labor and made application for a board of arbitration. Later, however, negotiations with the road were renewed, and are now in progress, with fair prospects of terminating successfully. Meanwhile the matter of appointing a board of arbitration will be held in abeyance.

That Flag Episode.

London, Ont., Aug. 7.—James Weldon, secretary of the Old Boys' Reunion, received telegrams Saturday from both the Chicago and Detroit London Old Boys' Associations expressing great indignation at the removal of the stars and stripes from the street decorations.

Since the removal of the flags by the committee it is noticeable that private citizens are taking pains to use the American flag in their decorations.

Pressmen In Calgary.

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 6.—The Buckeye Press Association of Ohio, numbering 170, were in Calgary Saturday. They are the guests of the city to a luncheon and are being taken about town by the Calgary Auto Club. It is expected their trip will result in much advertising for Western Canada.

The Shoe Man - - Peterborough

REGISTER! REGISTER! REGISTER!

Young man, do you want a vote in this election?

If so, and you are not already on the voters' list, you must register in order to be entitled to vote.

Every new-comer, and every one who is eligible for vote, must register to be entitled to vote.

To be eligible for registration and voting, the applicant must be a British subject, of the full age of 21 years; must have lived one year in the province and three months in the riding.

The places and dates for registration will be announced almost any day.

Meantime, the names of any persons desirous of getting a place on the voters' list by registration, may be left at the Examiner office or Mr. Stratton's committee Rooms, over Adam Hall's old stand, or, for the east ward, at Swanston's store, Driscoll Terrace, and the matter of registration will be greatly facilitated, and the action appreciated by the committee.

CITY'S OLDEST RESIDENT AT OLD BOYS' REUNION

(London Advertiser)

The oldest London Old Boy, Joseph Mantell, of Peterborough, arrived in London Friday, and is now with his daughter, Mrs. Keith Colquhon, of 9 Duke street.

The gentleman who holds this distinction is now 102 years old, and is still in excellent health. Mr. Mantell came from Peterborough unattended, and takes frequent trips about the country alone.

He usually visits London each summer, but this year was particularly anxious to attend the reunion. Mr. Mantell was born in England, and came to London 75 years ago. He conducted a shoe business here up until his removal from this city, twenty years ago, and has since resided in Tilsonburg, Brantford and Peterborough. His most remarkable good health is considered phenomenal.

Mr. Mantell is a very well-known resident of Peterborough and his ripe age, coupled with the fact that he is still hale and hearty, has made him quite a celebrity in the city. He resides on Downie street.

DELEGATES APPOINTED

A large and enthusiastic gathering of the Liberals of East Durham gathered in the town hall, Millbrook, on Saturday evening for the purpose of electing delegates to attend the convention at Newcastle, on Thursday, Aug. 10th. Among those who were appointed were: Messrs. T. A. Kelly, Vice President Cavan Liberals, W. Steward, J. Newton, J. Baptie, F. Wilson, G. Berry, T. Donaldson, J. W. Gardiner, D. Sutton, A. Sanderson, W. Sharpe, J. Douglas. A chairman for each polling division was also appointed.

Short addresses were made by Messrs. Berry, Wilson, Kelly and Sanderson, respectively.

Mr. Wilson, grain buyer at Springville, gave a couple of striking illustrations of how the present high tariff which exists between Canada and the United States, is pinching the farmers. One year ago Mr. Wilson had occasion to ship a carload of potatoes to the American side. In order to get this consignment across the border he had to hand over $170 to the custom officials, and in spite of the high duty imposed, had no difficulty in realising 25c per bushel more than he could have got in Ontario for the entire shipment. "Had we been favoured with reciprocity then, I would have had $170 more to divide with the farmers," said the speaker.

Mr. Wilson drew some interesting comparisons concerning the present prices of grains. Barley, for instance which sells for 60c per bushel here, will sell for $1.10 on the other side.

After considerable discussion the meeting closed with all present pledging themselves to rally to support to the utmost of their ability the Liberal cause in East Durham.

GOOD PROPOSITION

I am offering for sale in Peterborough, one of the best western propositions I know of. It is lots in Waverly Park, Brandon, Man., the choicest residental section of the city. These lots I am disposing of at $100 per lot, free of taxes for two years and without interest, on easy terms of payment. If you will call and see me at the National Hotel, where I will be for the next six or seven days, I will show you the particulars of this property, which is rapidly increasing in value each year.

JOS. SCHAPIRO,
National Hotel.

AMUSING INCIDENT OF SATURDAY'S STORM

It is reported that a very strange incident occurred during Saturday's storm, at the south end of the city. A citizen in the south end was startled during the heaviest of the storm by a heavy crash, and ran out to see if his house had been struck. He could see nothing, and after the storm was over, proceeded to investigate, and discovered on the roof of an adjoining verandah a huge pile of broken double diamond glass. It is quite evident that a huge pane of glass had been blown by the wind from some place, but just where, is the question of speculation. All the buildings around were examined, but there was no glass out of any windows, and there were no windows around that would be likely to have double diamond glass in anyhow. It is, and is likely to remain, a mystery as to where it came from.

Even though some kind friend did tell you "it can't be did," 1,000 living witnesses say Moon College 30-Day Shorthand is exactly as represented. Send for this list. 282-286 Yonge St., Toronto.

J. J. HARTLEY,
President of the West Peterborough Reform Association.

FUNERAL NOTICE

The funeral of Miss Annie O'Brien, who passed away at Buffalo on Friday last and whose obituary appeared in Saturday's issue, left the family residence, 777 George street, this morning at 9 o'clock and proceeded to St. Peter's Cathedral, after which the interment took place at St. Peter' scemetery. The Rev. Dr. O'Brien officiated at the service, as also did Fr. McColl, at the cemetery.

THOUGHT IT WAS CANCER

Cured By "Fruit-a-tives"

SYDNEY MINES, N.S., Jan. 25th, 1910.

"For many years, I suffered torture from Indigestion and Dyspepsia. Two years ago, I was so bad that I vomited food constantly and I lost 25 pounds in weight. I was afraid the disease was Cancer, but medicine gave only temporary relief.

I read about "Fruit-a-tives" and the cures this wonderful fruit medicine was making, and I decided to try it. After taking three boxes, I found a great change for the better and now I can say "Fruit-a-tives" has cured me when every other treatment failed and I sincerely say "Thank God for 'Fruit-a-tives'."

KING OPENS THE BALL

Young Liberal Leader is Attentively Followed When He Shows the Increased Market Agreement Will Give for Output of Western Districts

HE EXPOUNDS RECIPROCITY

Berlin, Aug. 7.—Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labor, delivered the opening Ministerial address of the reciprocity campaign before a large audience in King's Hall in this town on Saturday night.

He was received with enthusiasm and his remarks on the merits of the trade pact with Washington was accorded close attention; he being heartily cheered as he made telling point after telling point in his great argument to vindicate the course of the Ottawa Government in providing this arrangement for increased trade.

The Minister of Labor recalled that he was asking for their suffrage for the third time in three years, and, judging by the manner in which the audience received this declaration, his appeal for a return to Parliament will be responded to by the hearty endorsation of the majority of his constituents.

Some of the Labor Ministers outstanding sentences were:

"You can pass by this opportunity to secure a wider market and it may never come again.

"The United States gives us a market of 90,000,000 people and a protected market. It gives that chance solely to Canada.

"The arrangement will help transportation, business and commerce, and help every man in this community.

"Never before did a Government go out with so great a sense of victory as at the present time.

"If they do not get a chance to export to the United States, the great wheat and cattle-growing areas of the west will have to export somewhere. The first thing we shall know their products will come down to Ontario, congest our markets, and depress trade. We must look to the future and take the chance now when the opportunity comes.

"As one who believes in bringing down the cost of living to the masses, I am prepared to support that agreement.

"I am ready with you to fight anything that comes along."

Mr. Arthur Pequegnat occupied the chair, and prominent among the supporters of Mr. King present were: Mr. E. J. Stushing, president of the Laurier Club; Mr. H. J. Sims, vice-president of the North Waterloo Reform Association; Mr. C. M. Bezzo, vice-president of the Laurier Club; Mr. John Moffat and Mr. H. J. Bowman.

Total Loss Was $168,000.

Montreal, Aug. 7.—A summary of the losses sustained by merchants in the recent conflagration at Farnham is detailed as follows by appraisers: Property, $80,000; mortgage, $25,000; insurance, $39,800; merchandise, $85,000; liabilities, $23,675; insurance, $47,300. Total loss, including property and merchandise, $168,000; total fire insurance, $87,100; net loss $79,000.

The number of merchants who suffered loss was twenty-five.

To Investigate Charges.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Special allowances and preferential rates alleged to be given by interstate carriers, in official classification territory, to short lines of railroads serving iron and steel industries, particularly in Ohio, will be investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No date was fixed for the beginning of the inquiry.

The Issue Before the People of Canada is Skilfully Avoided by Speakers at Conservative Rally in Toronto

RECIPROCITY IS DODGED

Toronto, Aug. 7.—It was satisfactory and reassuring to the Conservatives—that gathering of nearly 2,000 assembled in Exhibition Park on Saturday afternoon to fire the first gun in the Ontario anti-reciprocity campaign. The flag was unfurled, British institutions fittingly vindicated, and the Empire saved. It was a great day for oratory.

Incidentally the economic merits or demerits of the reciprocity agreement were not called in question. Hon. Geo. E. Foster explained that they were unessential to the campaign being inaugurated. National extinction was the issue.

Sir James Whitney placed himself on record in reply to the twin "exponents of high political morality, The Globe and The Star, who had taunted him with being unable to make up his mind to take sides on the reciprocity issue until great pressure was brought to bear upon him. Sir James was characteristically indignant at the insinuation and repelled it with fervor. He indignantly repudiated The Globe's doubt as to where the Ontario Government and the weight of its organization would be.

"I wonder what pressure was applied to Sir Edmund Walker, and to Mr. Leigh, and on Mr. Jack Eaton, and all the other prominent Liberal gentlemen who have come forward on that side and repudiated this policy. I presume it was the pressure that every man feels as a patriot when the call comes to take a stand for the sake of the country and the Empire.

"It would be a waste of time," concluded the Premier, "for me to tell you what to do. I know what you are going to do. In reverential dependence on the providence which has guided us so far, we will go on, as far as we may, to lay the foundations of British institutions deep and strong in British America. Why? Because wherever those foundations are laid, humanity has been for ever the gainer. We will cling to our British traditions and to our British connection over the seas. And, please God, what we have we'll hold." (Loud cheers).

Sir James Whitney's speech was the important utterance of the gathering, but much interest attended also the addresses of W. F. Maclean, whose promotion was particularly happy and prolonged; George E. Foster, whose voice showed again, but whose trailing periods were many pleading; and E. B. Osler, who was equally well received.

Ex-Ald. Whitsitt took the chair and announced in the usual happy fashion calling on the speakers. Besides all the late M.P.'s and the members of the Legislature, there were: W. R. Smyth, Algoma; D. C. Boyer, Uriah Wilson, Dr. Godfrey, George Clare, Controller Hocken, ex-Ald. McGhie, Col. Belcher, Southampton; James Arthurs, Parry Sound; Ald. McCausland, John Lander, George Patterson, M.P.P., ex-Controller Stubbard, Mayor Geary, Ald. McMurrich, and a host of local politicians. Major Currie arrived late and spoke at the close.

Major Currie called for cheers for the chairman, for the Toronto Conservative candidates, for Sir James Whitney, for R. L. Borden, and for the King. The proceedings terminated at 5.30 with the Maple Leaf and the National Anthem from the band.

Gordon Wilson Will Run.

Hamilton, Aug. 7.—Gordon Wilson, M.P.P. for North Wentworth, will contest Wentworth County seat in the Federal Parliament, with W. N. Seager the present Liberal member. The Conservative nomination was offered to Mr. Wilson last week, but he was not then in a position either to accept or decline the offer.

On Saturday, however, he had an interview with Sir James Whitney in regard to resigning his seat in the Provincial Assembly, and yesterday stated that he had decided to make the race against Mr. Sealey.

Woman Takes Acid.

Toronto, Aug. 7.—"I am going to die; I am sorry to ask God to forgive me."

This was written on an old piece of paper found lying beside an empty carbolic acid bottle close to the body of Mrs. Price, in her room at 278 Sumach street early Saturday morning. Mrs. Price was discharged from the asylum three months ago. Why the woman took the acid is not known. The body was taken to the morgue.

Dominion Fire Losses.

Toronto, Aug. 7.—The estimate of the loss in the great fire in Northern Ontario is $1,250,000, according to figures appearing in The Monetary Times. The total loss by fires in the Dominion during July is said to be in the neighborhood of $5,584,300.

ARBITRATION PACT

Special Rider to First Clause Gives Great Britain the Right to Confer with the Overseas Self-governing Colonies

DOMINION TO HAVE SAY

Washington, Aug. 7.—The Senate on Saturday adopted the rather unusual but not unprecedented course of making public the text of four treaties which have not yet received action at its hands. These were the Anglo-American and the Franco-American general arbitration treaties and the treaties providing for the adjustment of the finances and customs of Honduras and Nicaragua.

Publicity was given to these important conventions at the request of the administration, which desires that the subject matter shall receive the fullest consideration by the press and the people, in order to enlighten the Senate as to the real sentiment of the country as a basis of its own action.

Some justification for this procedure developed Saturday, when in the course of a short executive session two Senators of opposite parties, Borah of Idaho and Bacon of Georgia, voiced their dissent from the conclusion of arbitration treaties in the form submitted. Their criticism was aimed at article 3 (identical in the two treaties), which, in their opinion, provides for compulsory arbitration, and thus tends to deprive the United States Senate of its constitutional prerogatives.

The treaty advocates, however, say that there had been a misunderstanding of the scope of the treaty by the two Senators named, and that a clause in article 1 of the treaties, which provides that there shall be no arbitration except under the terms of a special agreement, effectively guards the rights of the Senate, as such special agreement must receive the Senate's sanction in order to become operative.

The British and French treaties are substantially the same with the exception of the preambles, some small differences in dates of existing treaties referred to therein, and some of the differences between the treaty-making methods of the two Governments. One important provision in the British treaty requires the British Government to obtain the concurrence of any of its self-governing dominions affected by the proposed arbitration.

In view of their importance it is intimated that a motion may be made to ratify them in open Senate, an almost unprecedented procedure.

The preamble, after reciting the fact that all outstanding differences between Great Britain and the United States have been settled by arbitration since the treaty of Ghent, goes on to state that it has been found desirable to extend the scope of the arbitration treaty of 1908. The treaty which is practically the same in both cases, reads:

Article 1.—All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other, under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of Oct. 18, 1907, or to some other tribunal as may be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

The provisions of articles 37 to 90, inclusive of the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes concluded at the second peace conference at The Hague, on Oct. 18, 1907, so far as applicable, and unless they are inconsistent with or modified by the provisions of the special agreement, to be concluded in each case and excepting articles 53 and 54 of such convention, shall govern the arbitration proceedings to be taken under this treaty.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States, and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, his Majesty's Government reserving the right before concluding a special agreement in any manner affecting the interests of a self-governing dominion of the British Empire, to obtain the concurrence therein of the Government of that dominion.

Battle in Colombia.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Aug. 7.—According to advices received here on Saturday, a battle was fought between Colombian and Peruvian troops in Coquesta, a large unorganized territory in Colombia, and the Colombians were defeated with great loss.

What Ails You?

Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," belching of gas, cold risings in throat after eating, stomach pains or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, pimples at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of such abnormal conditions. It is a most efficient liver invigorator, stomach tonic, bowel regulator and nerve strengthener.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or harmful habit-forming drugs. It is a fluid extract made with pure, triple-refined glycerine, of proper strength, from the roots of native American medical forest plants. QUINLAN HAD THE INDIAN SIGN ON THE HARD-HITTING VISITORS

Leaders in Toronto Amateur League Surprised on Saturday —Game Had a Few Thrills.

GONTER'S WORK A FEATURE

Saturday's matinee at Riverside was spoiled, so far as attendance went, by the deluge that visited the city shortly after dessert, yet the loyal fans who took a chance on seeing the game, were amply repaid for their trouble, as the contest was easily one of the best attractions ever put on by a local management. The locals were shy two of the regular team. Ahearne having been called away at the eleventh hour and Bill O'Brien being on the hospital list with a twisted knee, yet this did not weaken the aggregation a little bit, as Pete Campbell, who took Jimmy's place at the middle station got everything, and Cresswell, who subbed in the outfield, got the first hit for the Petes, a pretty single to centre in the third innings. The ground was by no means in good condition, the grass being damp and the base paths slippery; the error column, however, did not have even the ordinary aggregation of errors, as both infields took particular pains to close all gaps when it was seen that a real ball game was to be played. Quinlan did the mound work for Peterborough and he pitched the best game of his career. He allowed the visitors only three scattered hits and forced no less than sixteen to take the strike-out route. On two occasions he struck out the entire side, a feat that has not been accomplished around here for some time. He was given the best kind of co-operation by Gonter, who is fast developing into a high class backstop. McIntosh who pitched for the Dufferins got great support, especially from the outfield, but his pitching was not up to the same class as that of the home twirler. Mr. Dan McCabe was a most satisfactory official.

First Innings.

The opening chapter provided some excitement. Spence and Sharpe both singled to centre. Picton fanned. McGowan was an infield out, Quinlan to O'Brien, and Spence, who tried to come home from second on the flimsy sacrifice was caught cold by Gonter. For the locals, Murphy handed Grogan a nice high fly. Shaw hit to Atcheson and M. O'Brien fanned.

Second Innings.

Atcheson grounded out, Murphy to O'Brien, Grogan fanned. Sewell got a safety on Rahmal's low throw to first. Ross fanned.

Shortstop Spence took first class care of ground balls hit by Quinlan, Gonter and Campbell, all three being easy outs at first.

Third Innings.

McIntosh, Spence and Sharpe went out in succession by the S. O. Route. Rahmel and McFadden were out, Atcheson to McGowan. Cresswell got the locals' first hit, but died on first when Murphy flew out to Grogan.

Fourth Innings.

Picton broke his back trying to connect with three of Quinlan's specials. McGowan singled to centre and went clean to third on Gonter's poor throw to head off the first attempted steal. Atcheson fanned and Grogan put up a high foul which was pie for Gonter.

The run getting began in the Petes' half of this innings. Spence fumbled Shaw's nasty grounder and the latter pilfered second. M. O'Brien gave Sharpe a fly ball. Quinlan's screaming single to the middle pasture brought Shaw across the pan, the hitter reaching second. Gonter sacrificed Quinlan to third on an infield out. Campbell fouled out to McGowan, leaving Quinlan stranded on third.

Fifth Innings.

Rahmel was out hitting to Grogan, McFadden took a fast inshoot on the slats and refused to run any farther than first. M. O'Brien took his place and stole second and third, coming home on the wide throw which Ross made to third, and which Murphy, who was batting, accidentally spoiled. The latter singled to left but remained there. Shaw striking out

Sixth Innings.

Spence grounded out, Quinlan to O'Brien. Sharpe struck out and Picton gave Murphy a nice catch.

M. O'Brien out, Ross to McGowan. Quinlan reached first on Atcheson's fumble and stole second. Gonter put up a high foul which Ross corralled Quinlan endeavoured to reach third after the catch was made but was caught on a pretty throw to that bag by the catcher.

Seventh Innings.

McGowan's hit to centre was good for two bags. McFadden got Atcheson's fly. Grogan fanned, as did also Sewell, leaving the big first baseman stalled for the third time on the bases.

Campbell and Rahmel flew out to Grogan. McFadden reached first on Picton's error, but got no further, as Sewell hit into McIntosh's mitt.

Eighth Innings.

The visitors went out in order, Ross fanning and McIntosh and Spence taking the Quinlan-O'Brien antidote for over-anxious run getters.

The locals were out in order, Murphy whiffing and Shaw and O'Brien hitting to Sharpe and Atcheson.

Ninth Innings.

The visitors made strenuous efforts to do something, but were out in order, Sharpe fanning, Picton fouling out to Gonter and McGowan grounding out to O'Brien.

Notes on the Game.

The wonder of it all is that Quinlan does not get a try-out with some of the professional concerns. He has an enviable record in this city, having beaten not a few of the twirlers now enjoying healthy stipends from the big leagues.

Gonter is solid with the followers of the game for sure. On Saturday he distinguished himself by his heady handling of the manager's great assortment of slants. His catch of Grogan's sky-scraping foul in the third innings, when he tore in among the spectators and grabbed the ball, brought the audience to their feet. It was a feature for sure.

McGowan, the Dufferin's elongated guardian of the initial pillow, is a good sticker, and only the sharpest kind of gardening kept him from getting in a few safe bingles.

As usual, Quinlan was there with a hit. He has broken up several games this summer and heads the league in hitting, an unusual thing for a pitcher.

Ted Picton, the boxer, covers second for Dufferins. He thinks it easier to slip over a solar plexus bingle than get a hit in this town.

Too bad it rained. If it hadn't been for that, a bumper house would have seen the game.

LINDSAY BOWLERS HERE

The Warder:—A Lindsay rink of lawn bowlers will compete in the tournament at Peterborough on Monday. Seventeen rinks have so far entered and that the event will be the biggest of its kind ever pulled off in Peterborough goes without saying. The match for the Stratton trophy will begin on Monday, and will be open to all teams, while the second match will be a consolation competition open to all rinks defeated in the first match, except the one winning second prize. The Lindsay rink will comprise: Messrs T. Burke, W. R. Widdess, T. Brady and G. A. Robinson.

SPORTING NOTES

Tecumsehs hung it on Torontos at the Beach on Saturday to the tune of 12-2.

Cornwall beat Shamrocks 10-1, and Capitals were easy for the Nationals, losing 14-7.

Vancouver won the eighth game of the ten game series with New Westminster Saturday, getting the long end of a 7-4 score. Newsy Lalonde was one of the star performers of the winners.

Science triumphed over sheer strength at the Island Stadium on Saturday, when the Corinthian English soccer team defeated a picked team from all Ontario after a hard fought and at one time doubtful fight. It was probably the fastest game ever witnessed on the front, and from the kick off to the time-whistle, there was hardly a monotonous moment. Their beautiful play alone saved the tourists, who won with difficulty by a 2-1 score.

Lou Marsh, who was in the motor cycle race on Saturday night, took two headers from the machine, but took second money. He was roundly cheered for his pluck.

W. E. G. Murphy, who is one of the Argo's best oarsmen, is a young brother of our own Bert who gambols around third base on Saturday afternoons. Besides being a good oarsman, he is fast developing into a splendid rugby half back, and his prowess as a hockeyist is too well known to make any further comment on. As an all-round athlete, who by his skill, speed and gentlemanly conduct, has won the admiration of a host of sport lovers, this young giant has few peers in America.

Death Of Respected Norwood Lady

On Friday last death removed one of the most respected and popular residents of this village, when Miss E. Victoria Cuffe, who had been in poor health more than a year, passed away. The deceased was a member of the Church of England, and is survived by two brothers, Mr. E. P. Cuffe, a merchant here, and Mr. B. P. Cuffe of Peterborough, and two sisters, Mrs. David Drope of Warkworth, and Miss E. Cuffe of Toronto.

Interment took place yesterday afternoon at Norwood cemetery, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. E. W. Pickford.

CONTRACTOR COMPLAINS OF VANDALISM

The contractors engaged in the reconstruction of the structure of the Central schools are lodging complaints as to the wanton inconveniences occasioned by boys.

Contractor Johnson, when interviewed by an Examiner reporter to-day, related some stories, as instances of the destructiveness of these boys.

When work is finished for the day, it appears that lads enter the buildings and in various ways cause hindrances to the workmen, and are in short a general nuisance.

One day one of the teachers' desks was found to be broken, glasses broken, ink scattered broadcast and a general waste paper basket made of the room, while two barrels of nails, as used by the men, were mixed, necessitating a sorting of the various sizes.

Seemingly unsatisfied with their capers so far, daubs of lime were thrown all over a newly made stone wall yesterday and a window broken. This lime, it is said, will be very difficult to erase from the wall. In fact, nothing but time and the elements will right the unsightly disfigurement.

CANOEING

Ottawa, Aug. 5.—Under ideal weather conditions, and over a course which at times was a a level as a billiard table, the annual championship regatta of the Canadian Canoe Association was held Saturday afternoon. The meet proved a great success, three thousand people witnessing eleven of the most keenly contested paddling events ever held in Canada.

Toronto Canoe Club repeated its big sweeps of 1909, and 1910, carrying off the grand aggregate prize and club championship with a total score of 26 points. They had twice as many points as their nearest competitors, the Grand Trunk Rowing Club. A. McKenzie, the favourite in the feature event, the senior singles, was defeated by George Kelly, of the Grand Trunk B. C.

Listen, Fellows:

Having been employed in several of the leading American barber shops, I have had experience in all the latest tonsorial arts. I have thoroughly remodelled my place of business and have everything in stock to produce the most up-to-date service to be had.

When you invest your money in a massage or shampoo, you receive full value for it, as I work the famous "Stark" system. Mothers, your children will receive the same close attention as would elders.

Dutch Cuts a specialty.

For the present I have employed a good smart apprentice, but as business increases, I will install an additional high class barber.

BIRTH.

GILMAN.— At 547 Waterford street, Peterborough, on Sunday, July 23, to Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Gilman, a son.

Monk at Three Rivers.

Three Rivers, Que., Aug. 7.—Before an audience of 10,000 people Mr. Monk, M.P. for Jacques Cartier, opened the Federal campaign here yesterday. Mr. Monk had on the platform with him the Nationalist leader, Henri Bourassa, and his lieutenant, Armand Lavergne, both of whom made speeches. It was one of those unique occasions in Quebec when the people go to mass in the forenoon and remain for political discourses in the afternoon, then go home, having done their full duty to their religion and political ideals. It was the opportune time to hold the meeting, as thousands of farmers from the country side are able to be present only on such a day.

Mayor Normand, who will be the candidate for Three Rivers, opened the fire on the Laurier Government. Mr. Blondin, M.P. for Champlain, followed on the naval question, and then came F. D. Monk, M.P., who delivered the main speech of the day. Henri Bourassa was given a good reception. He said among other things that Laurier and Borden seemed to have agreed that reciprocity should be the one theme of the coming election.

Premier Laurier had brought on the reciprocity agreement to cover up the naval bill, but Mr. Bourassa said he would not be cribbed in that way as there were too many important questions before the public.

Cochrane Fire Unavoidable.

Toronto, Aug. 7.—J. Bauldry, agent at Cochrane, in his report to Chairman J. L. Englehart of the T. & N.O. Commission, expresses the opinion that the fire of July 11 could not have been prevented. The extraordinary velocity of the wind, he contends would have spread the fire even if the bush on the railway holdings had been previously cleared. In one part of his report he says: "The velocity of the wind was so great that it carried the fire from away past our boundary and spread it completely over the whole width of the town at the same time."

Lad Tied to Track.

Austin, Texas, Aug. 7.—An unidentified Mexican boy, his hands tied behind him, was laid upon the railroad track and left to his fate, lashed lengthwise of a rail, near Elgin on Friday.

An engine crushed the life out of the lad.

Bomb-Throwers Busy.

New York, Aug. 7.—The fronts of three stores of a five-storey building on Avenue A. and Twelfth street were blown in by an explosion of a bomb early on Saturday. The bomb-thrower escaped. There was a panic among the occupants of the building.

More Trouble Ahead In Hayti.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Efforts of the diplomatic corps at Port au Prince, Haiti, to form a committee of public safety have failed. U. S. Minister Furniss has reported to the State Department that a conflict between the opposing revolutionary factions seem inevitable.

A Jingle of the Cabins.

Buildin's a-goin' almost out o' sight—
Party good stations for airships to 'light.

But come to the cabins,
Where fiddles are playin',
For there's where life's joy
In the blossoms is stayin'.

Lots o' fine sights that the airships reveal,
But there's fun joggin' on in the oxomobile.

The cabins still call,
An' the fiddles are playin',
An' Joy an' his sweetheart
In bright blossoms strayin'.
—Atlanta Constitution.

Juvenile Theory.

Sunday School Teacher—What are sins, Harold?

Small Harold—Parents.

Sunday School Teacher—Why, how do you make that out?

Small Harold—Well, the good book says "Be sure your sins will find you out," and that's what parents are always doing.—Chicago News.

Between Friends.

St. Paul and St. Peter were strolling one day
Over the stones of the Appian way.
They came to a tavern. Said Peter, "Methinks
'Twould be well here to tarry and shake for the drinks."
The very first throw Peter threw five ones.
Paul was surprised and exclaimed: "Good heavens!
That's a wonderful throw! But, all the same,
Miracles don't go in a friendly game!"
—Puck.

FINE CROP OF OATS

Mr. S. J. Brooks, of Smith left with the Examiner this morning fine samples of the oat yield on his farm this year. On counting the ears on the stalks left in the office it was found that each held from 100 to 150 kernels. The stalk, thus so well loaded, are straight and strong and do not 'lodge' in low ground or on account of rain and wind. The name of the oat is the "Mammoth Cluster."

CHEMONG PARK NOTES

CHEMONG PARK, AUG. 5.—Miss Stella Weill, who has been the guest of her cousin Miss Frances Deagecker, for the past month, returned to her home in Buffalo to-day. Last evening a farewell dinner and dance was given in her honour, at which about forty couples were present.

Miss Gladys Wanless of Toronto entertained about forty couples at the pavilion on Wednesday night, and a most enjoyable time was spent.

A party of Americans who have been putting in the past two weeks near Indian Village, report that they caught in all over 300 pounds of fish, which is going some.

Peace reigns supreme in the Park, and a feeling of absolute security prevails, as the Scouts are within striking distance.

Mr. Wm. H. Christie and family of Gilmour street, are in their cottage at the Park.

Two well-known local gentlemen rode a couple of fiery steeds out on Thursday night and one of them had a bad spill.

Mr. G. Ball and Mr. V. Eastwood went to Buckhorn on a fishing trip yesterday.

Mr. R. Merrell is staying at the hotel for a few days.

Messrs. Gordon McCarter of Toronto and Jack Eastwood of this city motored to Lindsay to-day.

Rev. Father Carr and Hurley of the teaching staff of St. Michael's College, spent Thursday and Friday at the cottage of Inspector O'Brien.

STANDING ARMIES ARE MENACE TO LIBERTY

NEWCASTLE, AUGUST 5th.—When the English Trade Union Congress opens its forty-fourth annual session here Sept. 4, several important resolutions will immediately be submitted for the delegates' approval.

On the entire list, the resolution which promises to provoke the warmest controversy will be introduced by the London Glassblowers' Trade Society which wishes the Congress to declare a regular standing army a menace to popular liberty, and to recommend as a substitute, a real citizen army, free from military law during times of peace, officered through election from the rank and file and to be used for defensive purposes only.

The National Association of Prudential Assurance Agents will ask the Congress to call upon the Government for the appointment of a Parliamentary commission to take steps toward the nationalization of industrial insurance. The Brassworkers and Metal Mechanics want a law prohibiting employers from dismissing employes solely because they belong to unions. The Miners' Federation wants it made illegal for unskilled laborers to work in mines, and the Colliery Engineers seek an eight-hour day for all members of their union.

BURNHAM AND BOURASSA BRIEFLY BRACKETED

The Amazing Alliance, in Which "Orangiste" and Ultramontane Are Seen Pulling Together---Brief Biography of the Strangely Assorted Partners.

Burnham and Bourassa.

Bourassa and Burnham.

Read it which ever way you like. This is the amazing, the almost unthinkable alliance.

This secret working arrangement is not announced on any platform. It is not published in any newspaper. It is not acknowledged in the columns of the Peterborough Review. It does not figure in speeches to mixed audiences. It is not whispered, except in carefully chosen ears. But it does its underground, gum-shoe, dark lantern business just the same. Whenever Mr. Burnham addresses his new Tory organization, the Protestant League, and preaches hatred of Laurier, just so surely is Henri Bourassa at his elbow, patting him on the back and saying, "Good boy! Soak him again!"

It's a quaint idea, this of Henri Bourassa acting as missionary to certain of the Orangemen of West Peterborough. Bourassa, who sneered at the Orangeists, and called the Grand Sovereign, Dr. Sproule, the "Yellow Pope," walking past all the signs and grips and passwords and taking his place as Mr. Burnham's side partner in the innermost sanctum sanctorum right up on to the dias under the picture of King William crossing the Boyne on a white horse.

A Troublesome Bedfellow

So surprising is it that even Mr. Burnham, eager as he is to make a telling combination, can't get quite used to it. He doesn't mention it except in picked company. He is rather ashamed of his French-Canadian running mate, wants him to blush unseen, as it were, but wants to benefit by his fine work all the same. Whenever Burnham looks at his Bourassa he reflects what strange bedfellows politics make. Bourassa is indeed a strange bedfellow, and a troublesome one, too, as Mr. Burnham will find out. He has long toenails, wants all the quilt, talks in his sleep, and lies crossways. When Burnham is through with Bourassa, or Bourassa is through with him, Mr. Burnham will find himself on the floor, and full of carpet tacks.

To get a notion how strange this reciprocity pact between Burnham and Bourassa really is you must first get a line on the two men.

Burnham's Picture

Mr. Burnham we can dismiss briefly. West Peterborough knows him well enough. He has studied at law at Osgoode Hall, and, therefore, must be a lawyer. He had a University education and got some book learning, which has been more or less useful. The university did not teach him to think clearly, for we find one paragraph in his Address to the Electors of West Peterborough contradicting the next, and all the paragraphs fighting with each other. His conceptions of reciprocity and several other practical subjects which he feels himself constrained to treat as one having authority, are muddled, but this may be because political economy is not a final science, except to original philosophers. He has a fine collection of long words and rotund phrases, which mean as little to himself as to anybody else. For some years he has had an itching for politics, without quite knowing what politics are about. He comes pretty near being a chronic candidate who runs and runs and runs, but never sits. If you looked into Mr. Burnham's mind this minute for any definite political idea you would find it as confused and fragmentary as a plate of hash. His party gospel sums up about this way: He doesn't know whether he hates J. R. Stratton less or Wilfrid Laurier more.

Goes Back to the Dark Ages

The one positive doctrine Mr. Burnham's mind shelters, is that Sir Wilfrid Laurier should not be Prime Minister of Canada, because he is a Frenchman and a Roman Catholic. Imagine any intelligent, responsible, broad-minded, Twentieth Century Canadian having Dark-Ages' opinions like that!

One of Burnham's party friends, ex-Warden Scott, has written a letter to the newspapers in which he called him a priest-killer, or rather priest exterminator. Mr. Burnham is a good name for a priest-killer. Kill 'em, and burn 'em. Did you get that? We made the joke broad, and a bad enough joke at that—broad on purpose. The world has long got past the stage where people hated and killed each other because they differed on religion and politics. What must be the backward bitter frame of Mr. Burnham's mind when he can harbour such sentiments in an age of tolerance, when church union is in the very air, and the brotherhood of man is supposed to be more than a mere form of words, and there is a universal peace tribunal at the Hague. Give Mr. Burnham a free hand with the notions he has, and he would be putting all his political opponents in jail, which was a pleasant way they had of stifling argument in Queen Anne's time. All of which leads up to this sensible proposition that we can be Protestants without being persecutors. And what's more, to Protestant and hold to and uphold our views like true men without signing our names or playing to a society pledged to strive by all manner of means to oust Laurier, because he is a Roman Catholic.

So much for Mr. Burnham. Bear this in mind. He is a candidate because he hates Laurier. This is the common ground on which he and Henri Bourassa shake hands.

The Rise and Fall of Bourassa

Henri Bourassa has turned forty. Which means that he is old enough to know better. He is the grandson on his mother's side, of Papineau, one of the Quebec leaders of the rebellion of 1837. Poor Papineau cherished the dream of a Canadian republic, with the French on top. His mind, unlike Lafontaine's and Laurier's, was not big enough to welcome the grand idea of a unified Canada, fused and solid, with two races living happily together, while they worked for the common good. Bourassa inherited from his grandfather his vanity, his restlessness, his rhetoric, his hatred of the British, and his foolish dreams, to which he has added some of his own. Bourassa is the seigneur of Monebello. He has a private fortune, and a large library of books—both rather dangerous instruments for a young man who wants to be Cæsar without going up the ladder rung by rung. He also has a newspaper, Le Devoir, which makes it worse. Bourassa came into Parliament as the member for Labelle. At first Sir Wilfrid Laurier was induced to make a pet of him. He appointed him official Canadian Secretary to the Joint High Commission, but this was not enough for the aspiring young seigneur of Montebello, who thought his right to be Cabinet Minister the day after to-morrow. That was always Bourassa's fault. He wanted to be everything all at once. Having been born with a silver spoon in his mouth, he thought Cabinet portfolios ought to come that way, too. He wasn't wiling to wait until he got a reputation. He had had a university education, just like Mr. Burnham, and it had spoiled him to some extent for sustained and laborious effort. Having cried for the moon, and failed to get it, Henri Bourassa got sore. He turned against his patron, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and made a lot of trouble for him in the Boer war. The stand he took in Parliament was that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had no right to send Canadian soldiers to fight for Mother England in South Africa. After that he made many bitter speeches, always aiming to be a thorn in the Government's side. He showed himself more Catholic than the Catholics. He was an indiscreet and intemperate advocate of reactionary ideas. Scratch Bourassa and you find a race and creed bigot. He took special delight in baiting Orangeists. After a while he came to see that his usefulness in Parliament was gone. It was the fault of his mind. It was not broad enough to comprehend Canada. It never saw further than Quebec.

A Hell of His Own.

Bourassa thought he could cut a figure in the Quebec legislature, but he was no greater success there. He never was more than a pebble in Premier Gouin's shoe. He was followed to the Quebec legislature by Armand Lavergne, his faithful, hot-headed young squire, whose Bowdlerized version of the Bourassa propaganda, when he addressed Toronto University, was no more like the real thing than milk is like ink. Armand Lavergne sticks closer to Bourassa than a high collar on a hot day. They both hate England and Laurier, and when they found they couldn't make as much mischief as they would like in the Quebec legislature they withdrew and made a small hell of their own. They called it the Nationalist party. Its three chief planks are: That Canada should have no navy to help England, if needed: that there should be no British tariff preference, and that Laurier should be ousted because he has helped these things along. Bourassa founded the Nationalist party because he hated Laurier. Hell hath no fury like an office-seeker scorned.

Bear this in mind. Bourassa hates Laurier and wants to put him out. This is where Bourassa and Burnham get together. This is where the Tories and the arch-ultramontane of Quebec rub shoulders.

The Man They Hate.

Who is this man, Laurier, that they hate? Later on in this campaign we shall go into it more fully. We shall try to tell what he stands for; what he has done, and what his noble ambitions are. Just now we are clearing away a few preliminary misunderstandings, not pertinent to the political issues at all, brought in secretly and darkly by malicious persons, but which must be met frankly at the outset. We shall not dwell now on the strong, gentle patience with which he has worked for a broader Canadian nationhood, nor on the devotion and vigilance with which he has guarded the full liberty it took us one hundred and fifty years to win. At the last Imperial Conference it was Laurier that was found heading off every resolution that nibbled at Canadian self-government; Laurier who was always at the strategic spot to

MORE BOMB THROWING

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, AUG. 5.—The fronts of three stores of a five storey building on the corner of Avenue X and Twelfth street, were blown in by the explosion of a boom to-day. The bomb thrower escaped.

THROWN FROM WINDOW AND KILLED

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 4th.—Mrs. Max Judell of 305 Union boulevard, an exclusive residence section, whose husband is out of town, died at the City hospital yesterday, following injuries received when she fell or was thrown from a third storey window of the Vendome hotel. She was found unconscious in the alley back of the hotel at 4 a.m.

Search is being made for a man who went to the hotel with her at 12.30 a.m. and registered "R. Pappas, with his wife." He left the hotel at 3.30 a.m., telling the clerk he would return in a few minutes.

Mrs. Tillie Mitchell, who lives across the street from the hotel, was awakened by Mrs. Judell's body striking the shutters of the hotel window. She said she saw the woman's body falling and heard her groans as she lay unconscious from the fall, but was afraid to sound the alarm.

WOMAN'S BODY STRUCK HOTEL SHUTTER

Immediately after this Mrs. Mitchell said she saw a man, whom she described exactly as attaches of the hotel described, the woman's escort, walk from the entrance to the hotel to the alley and stand several seconds watching the dying woman and listening to her moans. Then he walked away.

A rope fire escape hung out of the window of the room and dangled within a few feet of where Mrs. Judell was found. Bruises on her arms and legs and the fact that more than $70 was found in one of her stockings, led Police Captain Schwartz to believe that no attempt was made to rob her.

The hotel records show the man who accompanied Mrs. Judell paid for the room. This, Captain Schwartz thinks, shows that he did not depart from the hotel with the intention of avoiding payment, but for a more urgent cause. The police believe Mrs. Judell had been thrown from the window before the man went out.

When Mrs. Judell was taken to the City hospital it was found she wore a bluish gray tailor-made suit, a corset cover and shoes and stockings.

GARMENTS FOUND IN ROOM

A search of the hotel room was made by the police. They found Mrs. Judell's hat and other garments and a pair of men's black silk socks with garters attached to them.

W. E. Lockman, manager of the hotel, was acting as clerk when the couple went there at 12.30 o'clock. The man was tall and slender, smooth-shaven and sandy complexioned. He wore a gray suit and a black felt hat and appeared to be about 25 years old. Lockman has never seen the man has never seen the man before nor the woman. He assigned them to room No. 32 on the third floor.

"There was no sound of a disturbance in the room," he said yesterday.

Physicians at the hospital found other injuries besides the skull fracture. On both of Mrs. Judell's arms, above the elbows, were livid bruises which seemed to have been made by hands tightly grasping the arms. Similar marks were on the wrists, and there were bruises of the size and shape of a man's thumb on the calves of her legs.

LETTER FROM HUSBAND

At Mrs. Judell's home, which cost $18,000, and which her husband built and deeded to her recently, was found a letter from Judell, reading:

"Your suspicions are absolutely groundless. If you did not keep up such an awful knocking and permit a few more thoughts to enter your head things will move along more smoothly and peace will enter where now it is a continual rough house, unbearable and disgraceful. If you were continually on the jump, as I am, you would have little chance for the company of the opposite sex, even if you desired it, but I do not.

"As ever, lovingly, MAX."

A clipping from the society column of a St. Louis newspaper telling of her marriage was found among the wife's effects in the Judell home. Judell is a travelling salesman. He is wealthy.—Buffalo News.

CENTRAL SMITH MAIL BOXES WILL BE READY AUGUST 12

Farmers in This Vicinity Requested to Have Preparations Made for Installing Rural Mail Boxes

The Hon. J. R. Stratton informs the Examiner to-day that the Central Smith rural mail delivery route will be established on and after August 12th.

The farmers along the route should put up their posts and place their equipments upon them. Stencils are being cut for the box holders and everything is bein geompleted and will be in readiness for the route to be established as soon as the tenders are accepted.

The boxes will be sent out as soon as the contracts are accepted, which will be about the 12th of August.

Those concerned should be ready for the route to be established immediately after that date.

The farmers along the route requiring further information with regard to the matter should call upon the Postmaster.

MUSICALE GIVEN IN HONOUR OF BISHOP O'CONNOR

Was Largely Attended---Programme Was Made Up of Many Difficult Selections, all of Which Were Beautifully Rendered by the Performers.

At a concert given in the St. Peter's school last evening in honour of the Golden Jubilee of Bishop O'Connor, the children, not to be overshadowed in their endeavours to show their esteem for His Lordship, figured prominently in the programme.

Their chorus singing denoted a careful training. Miss Florence Leahy's recitations were well delivered, and the accompanying tableaux were very picturesque.

The beautiful four part setting of the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," sung by Messrs. Henshawe, Lee, J. New and A. New was indeed a grand item. These voices, rich and well balanced, blended in such a manner as to form a quartette of exceptional rarity.

Miss Lavina Hallihan needs no introduction to the public, her vocal talent being well known in the city. Suffice it to say she sang with her usual charm. Her tone colour and articulation were excellent.

The Convent orchestra is a good combination, and their contributions, which were well received, were very acceptable additions to the programme. The members are as follows: The Misses D. Giroux, M. Gorman, L. Hatrick, O'Toole, Eileen McCabe, McCarthy, Doris and Theobald, Messrs. McCabe and Hatrick.

Another item worthy of special mention was a trio entitled "The Gypsies Laughing Chorus," sung by Messrs. Lee, Cairns and New. This is an item of musical hilarity, strenuous to the performers but pleasing to the listeners. Sung with the necessary attention to details, it was received with loud applause.

Undermentioned is the programme rendered:

"In Festal Array"—Convent Orchestra.

"The Golden Bells are Ringing"—St. Cecilie's choir.

Reading, "The Vocation" — Miss Florence Leahy.

Vocal Quartette, "Nearer My God to Thee"—Messrs. Henshawe, Lee, J. New, A. New.

Instrumental—The Orchestra.

Song—"Sing, Smile and Slumber" Miss Lavina Hallihan

Irish Airs—The Orchestra.

Vocal Trio— Messrs. Lee, Cairns, New.

Reading—The Golden Jubilee. Miss Florence Leahy

Greeting and Addresses by the Children.

Hymn to St. Alphonsus—The Choir.

The address on behalf of the children of St. Peter's school to the Bishop was read in a clear voice by Master Willie Begley, who has promising powers of elocution. Miss Marion Hayes was equally good in her reading of an address on behalf of the girls of St. Mary's Convent, while the lad selected to read that of the Sacred Heart school was Master John Finn. Each address was accompanied by a beautiful bouquet of flowers.

The Bishop in a short but well worded address, voiced the sentiments of appreciation and thanked the children as well as the general assembly for their loyalty and esteem.

The concert ended by the singing of the national anthem about 10 o'clock.

There were many well known priests and laity present and the general assembly was a large one. The room was well decorated for the occasion, and the myriads of coloured lights on the stage were an added charm to the event. The concert was indeed a great success.

MOVEMENT ON FOOT TO APPOINT FIRE MARSHALLS

The Canadian Fire Chiefs, as a body for some time past, have had under consideration the advisability of asking the Dominion government to appoint fire marshalls for the respective provinces of the Dominion, with a chief fire marshall, with headquarters at Ottawa.

The United States government had this matter under way ten years ago. It was temporarily handed over to the State Legislators, a number of which appointed fire marshalls for their respective states, and the experiment has been successful to a marked degree. The object of appointing fire marshalls is to ultimately reduce the tremendous losses and waste throughout the country.

The Canadian Fire Chiefs, like their American brothers, believe that the appointment of fire mashalls, clothed with the proper power, can very materially reduce the fire losses, especially in cases of incendiary fires.

Fire Chief Howard of this city received a letter this morning from the Royal Commissoin of Conservation, requesting him to make a report to that body, and also for an expression of opinion relative to the merits of the scheme. The letter also requests a copy of the annual reports of the fire department for the past five years, showing number of fires, causes of fires, losses incurred, the insurances carried, and the estimated number of fires of incendiary origin, and a statement as to the most practicable means the government may adopt to lessen the fire losses and any other information that, in the opinion of Chief Howard, would be useful to the Royal Commission.

The Examiner, in an interview with Chief Howard, was advised that he is preparing data in connection with the above request, and will forward same to Ottawa at once.

LOVE WAVES AND WHAT THEY ARE

WASHINGTON, AUGUST 5th.—"Every little love wave has a meaning all its own." This is the latest version of a popular song, as advocated by Judge William DeLacy, of the local Juvenile Court, who also has charge of trying to make recalcitrant husbands go back home to their wives and help support them as they should.

There have been many theories advocated for the cure of the divorce evil, but it remained for Judge DeLacy to urge the "love wave" method. These waves, be it understood, have no connection with any other kind of wave known to science—they are extra material and highly sensitized. By them, according to his honor, a man can win back the lost love of his wife, and a wife can force her spouse to care for her and love her, even in the face of numerous and even more attractive affinities.

"Use a little mental suggestion on your wife if you want to win her back after she has ceased to love you," is the theory of the Judge, recently expounded during the course of a non-support case, in which the husband claimed that his wife had stopped loving him. "Be kind to her, and keep constantly before her mind your desire for her to love you. Every time you talk to her think of this, and tell her several times each day that she loves you. Love her so much yourself that she feels the waves of love coming back through the air. These methods will bring you back the love which was once yours, and you will be happy."

It is on record that the "love waves" worked in this particular case, so, in the future, they will probably be an established part of the prescription department of Judge De Lacy's court.

Read it which ever way you like. This is the amazing, the almost unthinkable alliance.

This secret working arrangement is not announced on any platform. It is not published in any newspaper. It is not acknowledged in the columns of the Peterborough Review. It does not figure in speeches to mixed audiences. It is not whispered, except in carefully chosen ears. But it does its underground, gum-shoe, dark lantern business just the same. Whenever Mr. Burnham addresses his new Tory organization, the Protestant League, and preaches hatred of Laurier, just so surely is Henri Bourassa at his elbow, patting him on the back and saying, "Good boy! Soak him again!"

It's a quaint idea, this of Henri Bourassa acting as missionary to certain of the Orangemen of West Peterborough. Bourassa, who sneered at the Orangeists, and called the Grand Sovereign, Dr. Sproule, the "Yellow Pope," walking past all the signs and grips and passwords and taking his place as Mr. Burnham's side partner in the innermost sanctum sanctorum right up on to the dias under the picture of King William crossing the Boyne on a white horse.

A Troublesome Bedfellow

So surprising is it that even Mr. Burnham, eager as he is to make a telling combination, can't get quite used to it. He doesn't mention it except in picked company. He is rather ashamed of his French-Canadian running mate, wants him to blush unseen, as it were, but wants to benefit by his fine work all the same. Whenever Burnham looks at his Bourassa he reflects what strange bedfellows politics make. Bourassa is indeed a strange bedfellow, and a troublesome one, too, as Mr. Burnham will find out. He has long toenails, wants all the quilt, talks in his sleep, and lies crossways. When Burnham is through with Bourassa, or Bourassa is through with him, Mr. Burnham will find himself on the floor, and full of carpet tacks.

To get a notion how strange this reciprocity pact between Burnham and Bourassa really is you must first get a line on the two men.

Burnham's Picture

Mr. Burnham we can dismiss briefly. West Peterborough knows him well enough. He has studied at law at Osgoode Hall, and, therefore, must be a lawyer. He had a University education and got some book learning, which has been more or less useful. The university did not teach him to think clearly, for we find one paragraph in his Address to the Electors of West Peterborough contradicting the next, and all the paragraphs fighting with each other. His conceptions of reciprocity and several other practical subjects which he feels himself constrained to treat as one having authority, are muddled, but this may be because political economy is not a final science, except to original philosophers. He has a fine collection of long words and rotund phrases, which mean as little to himself as to anybody else. For some years he has had an itching for politics, without quite knowing what politics are about. He comes pretty near being a chronic candidate who runs and runs and runs, but never sits. If you looked into Mr. Burnham's mind this minute for any definite political idea you would find it as confused and fragmentary as a plate of hash. His party gospel sums up about this way: He doesn't know whether he hates J. R. Stratton less or Wilfrid Laurier more.

Goes Back to the Dark Ages

The one positive doctrine Mr. Burnham's mind shelters, is that Sir Wilfrid Laurier should not be Prime Minister of Canada, because he is a Frenchman and a Roman Catholic. Imagine any intelligent, responsible, broad-minded, Twentieth Century Canadian having Dark-Ages' opinions like that!

One of Burnham's party friends, ex-Warden Scott, has written a letter to the newspapers in which he called him a priest-killer, or rather priest exterminator. Mr. Burnham is a good name for a priest-killer. Kill 'em, and burn 'em. Did you get that? We made the joke broad, and a bad enough joke at that—broad on purpose. The world has long got past the stage where people hated and killed each other because they differed on religion and politics. What must be the backward bitter frame of Mr. Burnham's mind when he can harbour such sentiments in an age of tolerance, when church union is in the very air, and the brotherhood of man is supposed to be more than a mere form of words, and there is a universal peace tribunal at the Hague. Give Mr. Burnham a free hand with the notions he has, and he would be putting all his political opponents in jail, which was a pleasant way they had of stifling argument in Queen Anne's time. All of which leads up to this sensible proposition that we can be Protestants without being persecutors. And what's more, be Protestant and hold to and uphold our views like true men without signing our names or playing to a society pledged to strive by all manner of means to oust Laurier, because he is a Roman Catholic.

So much for Mr. Burnham. Bear this in mind. He is a candidate because he hates Laurier. This is the common ground on which he and Henri Bourassa shake hands.

The Rise and Fall of Bourassa

Henri Bourassa has turned forty. Which means that he is old enough to know better. He is the grandson on his mother's side, of Papineau, one of the Quebec leaders of the rebellion of 1837. Poor Papineau cherished the dream of a Canadian republic, with the French on top. His mind, unlike Lafontaine's and Laurier's, was not big enough to welcome the grand idea of a unified Canada, fused and solid, with two races living happily together, while they worked for the common good. Bourassa inherited from his grandfather his vanity, his restlessness, his rhetoric, his hatred of the British, and his foolish dreams, to which he has added some of his own. Bourassa is the seigneur of Monebello. He has a private fortune, and a large library of books—both rather dangerous instruments for a young man who wants to be Cæsar without going up the ladder rung by rung. He also has a newspaper, Le Devoir, which makes it worse. Bourassa came into Parliament as the member for Labelle. At first Sir Wilfrid Laurier was induced to make a pet of him. He appointed him official Canadian Secretary to the Joint High Commission, but this was not enough for the aspiring young seigneur of Montebello, who thought his right to be Cabinet Minister the day after to-morrow. That was always Bourassa's fault. He wanted to be everything all at once. Having been born with a silver spoon in his mouth, he thought Cabinet portfolios ought to come that way, too. He wasn't wiling to wait until he got a reputation. He had had a university education, just like Mr. Burnham, and it had spoiled him to some extent for sustained and laborious effort. Having cried for the moon, and failed to get it, Henri Bourassa got sore. He turned against his patron, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and made a lot of trouble for him in the Boer war. The stand he took in Parliament was that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had no right to send Canadian soldiers to fight for Mother England in South Africa. After that he made many bitter speeches, always aiming to be a thorn in the Government's side. He showed himself more Catholic than the Catholics. He was an indiscreet and intemperate advocate of reactionary ideas. Scratch Bourassa and you find a race and creed bigot. He took special delight in baiting Orangeists. After a while he came to see that his usefulness in Parliament was gone. It was the fault of his mind. It was not broad enough to comprehend Canada. It never saw further than Quebec.

A Hell of His Own.

Bourassa thought he could cut a figure in the Quebec legislature, but he was no greater success there. He never was more than a pebble in Premier Gouin's shoe. He was followed to the Quebec legislature by Armand Lavergne, his faithful, hot-headed young squire, whose Bowdlerized version of the Bourassa propaganda, when he addressed Toronto University, was no more like the real thing than milk is like ink. Armand Lavergne sticks closer to Bourassa than a high collar on a hot day. They both hate England and Laurier, and when they found they couldn't make as much mischief as they would like in the Quebec legislature they withdrew and made a small hell of their own. They called it the Nationalist party. Its three chief planks are: That Canada should have no navy to help England, if needed: that there should be no British tariff preference, and that Laurier should be ousted because he has helped these things along. Bourassa founded the Nationalist party because he hated Laurier. Hell hath no fury like an office-seeker scorned.

Bear this in mind. Bourassa hates Laurier and wants to put him out. This is where Bourassa and Burnham get together. This is where the Tories and the arch-ultramontane of Quebec rub shoulders.

The Man They Hate.

Who is this man, Laurier, that they hate? Later on in this campaign we shall go into it more fully. We shall try to tell what he stands for; what he has done, and what his noble ambitions are. Just now we are clearing away a few preliminary misunderstandings, not pertinent to the political issues at all, brought in secretly and darkly by malicious persons, but which must be met frankly at the outset. We shall not dwell now on the strong, gentle patience with which he has worked for a broader Canadian nationhood, nor on the devotion and vigilance with which he has guarded the fail liberty it took us one hundred and fifty years to win. At the last Imperial Conference it was Laurier that was found heading off every resolution that nibbled at Canadian self-government; Laurier who was always at the strategic spot to

MORE BOMB THROWING

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, AUG. 5.—The fronts of three stores of a five storey building on the corner of Avenue X and Twelfth street, were blown in by the explosion of a boom to-day. The bomb thrower escaped.

THROWN FROM WINDOW AND KILLED

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 4th.—Mrs. Max Judell of 305 Union boulevard, an exclusive residence section, whose husband is out of town, died at the City hospital yesterday, following injuries received when she fell or was thrown from a third storey window of the Vendome hotel. She was found unconscious in the alley back of the hotel at 4 a.m.

Search is being made for a man who went to the hotel with her at 12.30 a.m. and registered "R. Pappas, with his wife." He left the hotel at 3.30 a.m., telling the clerk he would return in a few minutes.

Mrs. Tillie Mitchell, who lives across the street from the hotel, was awakened by Mrs. Judell's body striking the shutters of the hotel window. She said she saw the woman's body falling and heard her groans as she lay unconscious from the fall, but was afraid to sound the alarm.

WOMAN'S BODY STRUCK HOTEL SHUTTER

Immediately after this Mrs. Mitchell said she saw a man, whom she described exactly as attaches of the hotel described, the woman's escort, walk from the entrance to the hotel to the alley and stand several seconds watching the dying woman and listening to her moans. Then he walked away.

An instant later a second man emerged from the hotel and hastened in the opposite direction.

A rope fire escape hung out of the window of the room and dangled within a few feet of where Mrs. Judell was found. Bruises on her arms and legs and the fact that more than $70 was found in one of her stockings, led Police Captain Schwartz to believe that no attempt was made to rob her.

The hotel records show the man who accompanied Mrs. Judell paid for the room. This, Captain Schwartz thinks, shows that he did not depart from the hotel with the intention of avoiding payment, but for a more urgent cause. The police believe Mrs. Judell had been thrown from the window before the man went out.

When Mrs. Judell was taken to the City hospital it was found she wore a bluish gray tailor-made suit, a corset cover and shoes and stockings.

GARMENTS FOUND IN ROOM

A search of the hotel room was made by the police. They found Mrs. Judell's hat and other garments and a pair of men's black silk socks with garters attached to them.

W. E. Lockman, manager of the hotel, was acting as clerk when the couple went there at 12.30 o'clock. The man was tall and slender, smooth-shaven and sandy complexioned. He wore a gray suit and a black felt hat and appeared to be about 25 years old. Lockman has never seen the man has never seen the man before nor the woman. He assigned them to room No. 32 on the third floor.

"There was no sound of a disturbance in the room," he said yesterday.

Physicians at the hospital found other injuries besides the skull fracture. On both of Mrs. Judell's arms, above the elbows, were livid bruises which seemed to have been made by hands tightly grasping the arms. Similar marks were on the wrists, and there were bruises of the size and shape of a man's thumb on the calves of her legs.

LETTER FROM HUSBAND

At Mrs. Judell's home, which cost $18,000, and which her husband built and deeded to her recently, was found a letter from Judell, reading:

"Your suspicions are absolutely groundless. If you did not keep up such an awful knocking and permit a few more thoughts to enter your head things will move along more smoothly and peace will enter where now it is a continual rough house, unbearable and disgraceful. If you were continually on the jump, as I am, you would have little chance for the company of the opposite sex, even if you desired it, but I do not.

"As ever, lovingly, MAX."

A clipping from the society column of a St. Louis newspaper telling of her marriage was found among the wife's effects in the Judell home. Judell is a travelling salesman. He is wealthy.—Buffalo News.

CENTRAL SMITH MAIL BOXES WILL BE READY AUGUST 12

Farmers in This Vicinity Requested to Have Preparations Made for Installing Rural Mail Boxes

The Hon. J. R. Stratton informs the Examiner to-day that the Central Smith rural mail delivery route will be established on and after August 12th.

The farmers along the route should put up their posts and place their equipments upon them. Stencils are being cut for the box holders and everything is bein geompleted and will be in readiness for the route to be established as soon as the tenders are accepted.

The boxes will be sent out as soon as the contracts are accepted, which will be about the 12th of August.

Those concerned should be ready for the route to be established immediately after that date.

The farmers along the route requiring further information with regard to the matter should call upon the Postmaster.

MUSICALE GIVEN IN HONOUR OF BISHOP O'CONNOR

Was Largely Attended—Programme Was Made Up of Many Difficult Selections, all of Which Were Beautifully Rendered by the Performers.

At a concert given in the St. Peter's school last evening in honour of the Golden Jubilee of Bishop O'Connor, the children, not to be overshadowed in their endeavours to show their esteem for His Lordship, figured prominently in the programme.

Their chorus singing denoted a careful training. Miss Florence Leahy's recitations were well delivered, and the accompanying tableaux were very picturesque.

The beautiful four part setting of the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," sung by Messrs. Henshawe, Lee, J. New and A. New was indeed a grand item. These voices, rich and well balanced, blended in such a manner as to form a quartette of exceptional rarity.

Miss Lavina Hallihan needs no introduction to the public, her vocal talent being well known in the city. Suffice it to say she sang with her usual charm. Her tone colour and articulation were excellent.

The Convent orchestra is a good combination, and their contributions, which were well received, were very acceptable additions to the programme. The members are as follows: The Misses D. Giroux, M. Gorman, L. Hatrick, O'Toole, Eileen McCabe, McCarthy, Doris and Theobald, Messrs. McCabe and Hatrick.

Another item worthy of special mention was a trio entitled "The Gypsies Laughing Chorus," sung by Messrs. Lee, Cairns and New. This is an item of musical hilarity, strenuous to the performers but pleasing to the listeners. Sung with the necessary attention to details, it was received with loud applause.

Undermentioned is the programme rendered:

"In Festal Array"—Convent Orchestra.

"The Golden Bells are Ringing"—St. Cecilia's choir.

Reading, "The Vocation" — Miss Florence Leahy.

Vocal Quartette, "Nearer My God to Thee"—Messrs. Henshawe, Lee, J. New, A. New.

Instrumental—The Orchestra.

Song—"Sing, Smile and Slumber" Miss Lavina Hallihan

Irish Airs—The Orchestra.

Vocal Trio— Messrs. Lee, Cairns, New.

Reading—The Golden Jubilee, Miss Florence Leahy

Greeting and Addresses by the Children.

Hymn to St. Alphonsus—The Choir.

The address on behalf of the children of St. Peter's school to the Bishop was read in a clear voice by Master Willie Begley, who has promising powers of elocution. Miss Marion Hayes was equally good in her reading of an address on behalf of the girls of St. Mary's Convent, while the lad selected to read that of the Sacred Heart school was Master John Finn. Each address was accompanied by a beautiful bouquet of flowers.

The Bishop in a short but well worded address, voiced the sentiments of appreciation and thanked the children as well as the general assembly for their loyalty and esteem.

The concert ended by the singing of the national anthem about 10 o'clock.

There were many well known priests and laity present and the general assembly was a large one. The room was well decorated for the occasion, and the myriads of coloured lights on the stage were an added charm to the event. The concert was indeed a great success.

MOVEMENT ON FOOT TO APPOINT FIRE MARSHALLS

The Canadian Fire Chiefs, as a body for some time past, have had under consideration the advisability of asking the Dominion government to appoint fire marshalls for the respective provinces of the Dominion, with a chief fire marshall, with headquarters at Ottawa.

The United States government had this matter under way ten years ago. It was temporarily handed over to the State Legislators, a number of which appointed fire marshalls for their respective states, and the experiment has been successful to a marked degree. The object of appointing fire marshalls is to ultimately reduce the tremendous losses and waste throughout the country.

The Canadian Fire Chiefs, like their American brothers, believe that the appointment of fire mashalls, clothed with the proper power, can very materially reduce the fire losses, especially in cases of incendiary fires.

Fire Chief Howard of this city received a letter this morning from the Royal Commissoin of Conservation, requesting him to make a report to that body, and also for an expression of opinion relative to the merits of the scheme. The letter also requests a copy of the annual reports of the fire department for the past five years, showing number of fires, causes of fires, losses incurred, the insurance carried, and the estimated number of fires of incendiary origin, and a statement as to the most practicable means the government may adopt to lessen the fire losses and any other information that, in the opinion of Chief Howard, would be useful to the Royal Commission.

The Examiner, in an interview with Chief Howard, was advised that he is preparing data in connection with the above request, and will forward same to Ottawa at once.

LOVE WAVES AND WHAT THEY ARE

WASHINGTON, AUGUST 5th.—"Every little love wave has a meaning all its own." This is the latest version of a popular song, as advocated by Judge William DeLacy, of the local Juvenile Court, who also has charge of trying to make recalcitrant husbands go back home to their wives and help support them as they should.

There have been many theories advocated for the cure of the divorce evil, but it remained for Judge DeLacy to urge the "love wave" method. These waves, be it understood, have no connection with any other kind of wave known to science—they are extra material and highly sensitised. By them, according to his honor, a man can win back the lost love of his wife, and a wife can force her spouse to care for her and love her, even in the face of numerous and even more attractive affinities.

"Use a little mental suggestion on your wife if you want to win her back after she has ceased to love you," is the theory of the Judge, recently expounded during the course of a non-support case, in which the husband claimed that his wife had stopped loving him. "Be kind to her, and keep constantly before her mind your desire for her to love you. Every time you talk to her think of this, and tell her several times each day that she loves you. Love her so much yourself that she feels the waves of love coming back through the air. These methods will bring you back the love which was once yours, and you will be happy."

It is on record that the "love waves" worked in this particular case, so, in the future, they will probably be an established part of the prescription department of Judge De Lacy's court.

LIBERAL ATTITUDE TOWARDS MANUFACTURERS

It it difficult to understand the hostility of the manufacturing interests to reciprocity, for the agreement only affects the tariff on manufactured articles very slightly—a reduction of 2½ to 5 per cent. on agricultural implements. The aim of the negotiators was to avoid consideration of any proposal for reciprocity in manufactured articlces.

Before the discussion of the agreement began, President Taft wanted to include in it manufactured products. But Mr. Fielding flatlly refused. He told the United States that he would consider reciprocity in natural products, in which Canada could successfully compete; but on behalf of Canada and its manufacturing interests, he would not consider for one moment reciprocity in manufactured articles. He felt that Canada could not successfully compete with the more highly specialized manufacturning systems of the United States. Therefore, with the exception of the few articles mentioned there was no dealing with manufactured articles in the reciprocity agreement. To further show the Government's friendly attitude to manufacturers, Sir Wilfrid declared in the House: "We have not hurt the manufacturer and will not hurt him." In confirming the position taken by him in the negotiations—to refuse to consider reciprocity in manufactured articles—Mr. Fielding, speaking at Montreal, said:

"We want manufacturers in Canada. You were told in 1888 that if you trusted the Liberal party dreadful things would happen. But today the manufacturers are prosperous and to-day they should trust us again. And the men who have given tair play to the manufacturers while dealing fairly and justly with the farmers and the masses of the people, and have brought about the prosperous conditions which I have shown you, are the men who in the future as in the past will deal liberal justice and fair play to the farming interests without sacrificing the manufacturing interests of Canada."

It is thus apparent that in negotiating the reciprocity agreement Mr. Fielding protected the interests of the manufacturing industries, and that his policy is to continue giving them the fair consideration that he has given them in the past. So much had Mr. Fielding committed himself in his position in negotiating reciprocity that it was recognized by the leading Conservative journal in the West, the Winnipeg Telegram. It said:

"Minister of Finance Fielding deserves the thanks of the farmers for his frankness in admitting that in his negotiations with the Taft administration the Canadian Commissioners made it plain at the outset that there was to be no reciprocity in manufactures. . . . The Laurier Government has evidenced a deal of consideration for the manufacturers. In view of this fact it is not surprising that the manufacturers should accept with complacence an agreement which so far as they are concerned does not amount to a slap on the wrist."

Having shown that the Government is friendly to manufacturers, and that it refused to consider reciprocity in manufactured products, it may be interesting to, in turn, show the attitude of Conservatives towards the manufacturers. In the session of 1909, Dr. Shaffner, Conservative M.P., moved the following amendment on the motion to go into Committee of Supply:

"That the committee reconsider item 446 re agricultural implement duties, and that it be amended by striking out the figures 17½ per cent. in the general tariff and inserting in lieu thereof the figures 10 per cent."

The above resolution, it will be noticed, declares for reducing the duty on agricultural implements 7½ per cent. below that of the Fielding tariff, and the Conservatives actually fought all day over the motion, filling over 60 columns of Hansard with speeches, and finally divided the committee, the amendment being negatived by a vote of 29 to 56! And it fell to Mr. R. L. Borden, in debate, to try to excuse the effort to make the duty 10 instead of 17½ per cent. by saying that the manufacurers hdd combines.

Who was it, in that debate, stood up for fair play to the agricultural implement industry? It was Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister. He protested against Mr. Borden's statement that there was a combine, which he had no reason to think existed. He thought the 17½ per cent. duty reasonable, and in confirmation of his remarks he said.

"My belief is that if this motion were passed—and I am glad to know that it is not going to be supported even by all the hon. gentlemen on the other side—we would strike a severe blow at one of the great industries of the country. I believe the International Harvester Company would find it to its interest to close up its business in Hamilton, at least as much of it as is devoted to mowers and binders, and have them made at the American branch and bring them from the United States. . . . While we are not advocating a Chinese wall tariff—while we are not seeking to shut everything out, we are willing that a moderate degree of protection, if you care to use the word, arising out of a tariff designed for revenue, but incidentally giving some protection—we are willing that where there is a great industry in Canada it shall receive a fair measure of consideration, which we have given by this tariff on agricultural implements and so I must ask the House to reject the amendment."

It was Mr. Fielding, and not Mr. Borden, who came to the defence of the manufacturers on this occasion: an evidence of the wisdom of leaving the interests of the manufacturers in the hands of a Government that has protected them in the past ,and has pledged itself to take no action that would be prejudicial to them; a Government that has at the same time sought by the reciprocity agreement to promote the interests of the farming community. Fair play all round should influence both manufacturer and farmer; neither can live and flourish without the other, and it is a wise course that aims to promote the interests of both without seriously prejudicing the interests of the other.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Mr. Borden is original. He is the only Conservative leader, since Confederation, opposed to reciprocity.

The First Ducks.

H. J. Marquis purchased from Thomas Calvert one day last week sixteen spring ducks, for which he paid $2. Their ages ranged from six to ten weeks, and they weighed from three to four pounds each. They were the first placed upon the Toronto market this season. The Toronto dealers state that the demand for these delicacies comes not as might be supposed from the wealthy city residents, but from day laborers, chiefly, who live from hand to mouth. While work is plentiful and wages high, they live on the best that money can buy, and then when they find themselves unable to secure work they are in difficulties, and in numerous cases become the objects of charity.—Pickering News.

Report Was True.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's electoral experiences have been many and varied. One which occurred during the last general election particularly tickled him. An ardent Liberal follower, who knew Sir Wilfrid only politically, wired to him, "There is a report in circulation that your children have not been baptized. Telegraph denial." Alas! Sir Wilfrid could not deny the soft impeachment. The reply ran as follows: "Sorry, report is correct. I have no children."

Found University Charter.

The original charter of Queen's University, which has been missing for many years, was found a few days ago. Col. McGill, managing director of the Frontenac Loan Co., found the document in one of the company's vaults, where it was well preserved. It has on it the signature of Queen Victoria. It is believed it was placed in the vault for safekeeping by the late J. B. McIver.

CONSERVATIVE CONTRIBUTION TO WRECKING FARMERS' BANK

The men who wrecked the Farmers' Bank were its first President, Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, the Conservative Boss of Toronto, a member of the Legislature, and afterwards, on Sir James Whitney's appointment, Registrar of West Toronto ,and its General Manager, Mr. Travers, who claims that Nesbitt tempted him into the speculations that destroyed he bank. Nesbitt and Travers were neither political nor personal friends of Mr. Fielding, and it was with reluctance that the Minister gave the Farmers' Bank the right to do business after Nesbitt became its President. He caused special inquiries to be made as to the bona fides of the promoters. Among the directors were Col. R. R. Maclennan of Cornwall, Col. Munro of Embro, John Gilchrist of Toronto, Mr. Neely, M.P.P., and other substantial and entirely reputable men.

The one doubtful man was the President, who is now a fugitive from justice. Mr. Osler, M.P., says he told Mr. Fielding that the persons in contral of the bank were not "worthy." In the light of later events this was no doubt meant to be a warning against Nesbitt and Travers, but neither Mr. Osler nor any other person has stated that he warned Mr. Fielding against these two men. As a matter of fact, no Toronto Conservative member in 1908 would have cared to arouse the hostility of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, M.P.P. As recently as 1908, two years after the charter was granted, when Travers and he were preparing to loot the bank, The Mail and Empire gave Nesbitt the following certificate of character on the occasion of his candidature for the Mayoralty of Toronto:

"Vote for Nesbitt. He is the man that Toronto needs at the head of its affairs in 1908. . . . The livest, most vigorous character that has appeared in Toronto's municipal politics for years is Dr. Beattie Nesbitt. . . . We need a man of Dr. Nesbitt's forceful personality, not only to push to relaization the great undertakings that have been so long dreamt about, but also to protect the city from deals that are being promoted by interests of which The Globe is the journalistic spokesman."

Still later, at a time when Nesbitt and Travers needed money to go into the Keeley Mine speculation, which wrecked the bank beyond recovery, Colonel Matheson, the Provincial Treasurer in the Conservative Government, acting on the pressure of party friends, increased the deposit of the Province in the bank from $10,000 to $35,000. Contemporaneously, The Toronto World got a loan of $10,000 and Beattie Nesbitt a loan of $25,000. It is understood that Travers wrote to Colonel Matheson, telling him of these loans. This would seem to indicate some connection between the pressure applied to the Provincial Treasurer by an official of The World to increase the Farmers' Bank deposit and the loan made by the Farmers' Bank to the World.

The political associates of Beattie Nesbitt are now trying to hold Mr. Fielding responsible for the failure of the Farmers' Bank because he permitted it to open its doors in 1908, at a time when it had an excellent chance to do business. The ground of the complaint against Mr. Fielding is that he was told the men in control of the bank were not worthy. Yet, almost two years afterwards, The Mail and Empire, the chief Conservative organ, told the people of Toronto that Dr. Beattie Nesbitt ,at that time President of the bank, was worthy to be Mayor of Toronto, and Colonel the Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, thought the bank was worthy to be trusted with the funds of the people of Ontario.

If The Mail and Empire, intimately acquainted as it was with Beattie Nesbitt's character ,thought him worthy to be Mayor, and Col. Matheson believed the bank a safe depository for the funds of the people of Ontario, what possible warrant could Mr. Fielding have had in 1908 for refusing Nesbitt and associates like Mr. Neely, M.P.P., Colonel Maclennan, Colonel Munro, Dr. Grover, and others the right to do business?

Must not a large share of the blame for the destruction of the Farmers' Bank rest upon the party friends of Beattie Nesbitt, and particularly The Mail and Empire ,which praised the plunderer and recommended that he be elected Mayor? If The Mail and Empire did this innocently in 1908, why does it seek to attach odium to the act of the Minister of Finance in 1908, when he gave the bank of which Nesbitt was President, and which had apparently complied with the law, the right to do business?

The shareholders of the Farmers' Bank are in deep enough trouble through the misdeeds of the former Tory "Boss" of Toronto, whose escape from the Province has never been satisfactorily explained, without having their misfortune made a political football.

RECIPROCITY OFFERED BY THE UNITED STATES

The Liberals are sometimes censured by Opposition politicians and publicists for abandoning their former attitude toward reciprocity. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has dealt with the line of attack in his published address to the people of Canada.

He reminds them that prior to 1854 there was a state of trade and industry in British America—there was then no Dominion of Canada—that called urgently for relief; that relief came with the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854-66; that after the pleasant experience of those prosperous years the minds of thoughtful, enlightened Canadians always turned to that time with a desire which prompted repeated requests and brought repeated rebuffs; that these requests were made by each political party in Canada and rejected by politicians of all parties in the United States; that Sir John Macdonald was to the very end of his life a convinced free trader in farm products; that the Liberal party in 1893, in convention assembled, put itself on record as desiring reciprocity; and that the offers of reciprocity to the United States ceased only when the conviction became absolute and universal in Canada that further overtures were unwise because useless.

The advantage of free trade in natural products was never at any time or by any party denied or even doubted in Canada. There has never been a time in the forty-four years of the history of the Dominion when an offer from the United States to renew the Reciprocity Treaty that was abrogated the very eve of confederation would not have been joyfully accepted, no matter which political party was in power. There is therefore no inconsistency in the present action of the Liberal party in asking the people of Canada to order the ratification of the present reciprocity agreement. The situation has changed; that is all. The present offer has come from the United States to Canada; it has not gone from Canada to the United States. President Taft offered to negotiate and to start the negotiations he sent two delegates to Ottawa; later, two Ministers went to Washington in response to this offer and request from the President. Now the offer of the agreement itself has come from Congress, as well as from the President. By overwhelming majorities in the House of Representatives and the Senate, the ratifying measure has been put through and become part of the public law of the United States. All that is needed is ratification by the Dominion Parliament to make it operative on both sides, including the provision that it may be repealed on fair notice by either side.

It is no part of the agreement that this offer by the United States will never be renewed, but it is true just the same. If the people of Canada are foolish enough to reject the present offer, there will never be another one made. No future President can reasonably be expected to make the great and successful fight for reciprocity that Mr. Taft made, only to be rebuffed, if Canada flings it back in his face like a petulant child with a gift. True, the United States needs our raw materials and our food products; but Congress can secure them any time by repealing the duties on them. Our lumber and pulp wood, and metallic ores, and live stock, and fish, and grain and fruit will go to the United States, but without any such compensating reciprocity as we can obtain under this agreement.

The effect of adopting it will be to put a stop to the payment of customs duties on imports specified in the agreement, and as the abrogation of the duties is mutual that means lessening the burden on consumers in both countries by from seven to ten million dollars a year. If the two Governments cease to collect this, it must remain in the pockets of the people, and it will be to their advantage. What individuals on either side of the line will gain by the removal of the fiscal burden cannot be traced. The varying course of trade will settle that as it settles prices within each country. What is obvious is that if Governments stop taking the money the prices of goods will be reduced, or prevented from increasing, by just the amount of the duties that have been repealed. It will go to the producers and consumers on one side or on the other side, or on both sides—probably in every case the last, but in varyiming degrees. In the face of these historic facts and prophetic certainties, the people of Canada, and especially the farmers of Canada, will be the greatest fools of the ages if they decline the present offer.

His Act to Blame.

An old couple came in from the country with a big basket of reach to see the circus. The lunch was heavy. The old wife was carrying it. As they crossed a crowded street the husband held out his hand and said, "Gimme that basket, Hannah." The poor old woman surrendered the basket with a grateful look. "That's real kind of ye, Joshua," she quavered. "Kind!" grunted the old man. "I was afeared we'd git lost."—Argonaut.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I WAS decidedly disappointed the other day with a very charming and I had always thought almost ideal young person, who was visiting in my house.

A group of us were standing talking together. One of the group was a young man whom this girl had met perhaps half a dozen times in the course of the conversation he started to repeat to her a very flattering compliment he had heard of her singing.

The girl begged him to desist, and when he laughingly kept on, he advanced towards him and laid her hand across his mouth.

Now perhaps it will seem prudish to you, but I did not like that.

This is an age when friendships between men and women are very more informal, very much less stiffly conventional than they used to be.

The modern man and woman friendship is as different from the man and woman friendship of fifty years ago as the modern sheath of roses that the man of today sends the girl of the twentieth century from the stiffly arranged bouquet the old time lover brought his lassie.

And that I think is good.

But when this informality tends toward familiarity, that I think is bad.

I want the girl of to-day to be more accessible and comradely and less exotic and sheltered in her friendships with men than her grandmother or even her mother. I want her to be able to join them in some of their sports and all of their intellectual interests.

But I don't want to see her let this fine comradeship deteriorate towards a careless familiarity.

I have heard of a girl in high society who slaps her men friends on the back when she meets them.

The American public laughs at her.

I think it should be ashamed to own her.

Even between lovers I dislike to see public demonstrations, and it seems to me that they show the measure of sacredness in which they hold their love by the measure of privacy which they give its manifestations.

For a girl to pick a thread off a man's coat or a man to put back a loose lock of a girl's hair in public when the two are engaged, certainly isn't the least bit wrong but it does seem to me it borders on the "tacky."

There is a couplet of Kipling's, which I'd like to recall to the young people who find it difficult to confine the manifestations of their mutual ardour to the privacy of their home.

"For howsoever love be blind
The world at large hath eyes."

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Kidneys

Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining, Swelling, Etc.

Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids; cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robson, K1810 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

CHEMONG PARK NINE GET SWEET REVENGE

Danny Whelan's hapless aggregation of ball tossers met their initial defeat of the season and the second in two years, when the boys from the park slipped it over them by a one run margin. The score at the conclusion of the nine was 15-14, which does not seem to indicate a very fast game, but the rough grounds on Kelly's farm was responsible in a large degree for the round balls getting away from the fielders, and the subsequent double figure total in the run column. At that it was more or less a free hitting contest, with Chemong Park having the best of it. Eugene Quinn, fifteen year old kid from Fordham College, New York, held the hard hitting aborigines down to eight hits and worked like a veteran in the pinch. Taking everything into consideration he got good support and had much the better of the argument with his opponent, the mighty Charlie Tyler.

The latter was driven from the mound in the fifth innings, his place being taken by Davy Prosser, who was even a worse lambasting. The visitors came with about one hundred supporters and business was paralyzed for the day in the Indian village. A special steamer had been engaged for the occasion and it was a disappointed band that embarked on the home trip about seven o'clock. The third game of the series will be played on Friday next at Chemong Village. The personnel of the team was as follows:

Chemong Park—Hill c.; Long r.f.; M. O'Brien 1b.; W. O'Brien 3b.; Benziger c.f.; Hulpine s.s.; Quinn p.; Dickson l.f.; M. E. Carter 2.b.

Indian Village.—J. Jacobs, G. Coppaway, J. Knott, D. Prosser, Walter Jacobs, J. W. Taylor, C. Taylor, J. D. Tobico.

SPORTING NOTES

The Toronto World, at hand to-day, has a fine cut of the Peterborough Midland League team in uniform. The picture was taken by a Bowmanville snap shotter when the locals were in that town.

Dutch Gonter, the famous centre half of the St. Michael's Football Club is playing a nice game behind the wind-pad for the Potes. He has about the best throwing arm in the burg and with some more experience ought to make a real good one.

The Athletics have practically tied the Tigers for first place in the American. With Connie Mack's bunch in condition, they seem to have a better chance than ever before this season.

By the way, see those Boston Americans climb. Yesterday's win moved them up to third place. They were in the fifth notch three days ago. Three straight victories over the league leaders is not so very bad.

Boston owed yesterday's game to Harry Hooper. A home run, a phenomenal catch and a long fly that scored the winning run in the twelfth, made him the big noise of the game.

The little trolley dodgers from Brooklyn stopped their mad rush for the bottom of the ladder long enough to hand Mr. Chance's Cubs a walloping. It was a thorough job.

Three bat-swingers from the Home of the Rubber Plant hit Chance's pitchers for full circuits. E. Zimmerman, Erwin and Wheat were those who fattended their batting averages.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING

(Lindsay Post)

Mrs. Joseph Howe of Gelert, aged 53 years, was instantly killed by lightning on Wednesday evening.

It seems that a stove had been removed and the pipe left in place from the upstairs floor, extending through the roof, down which the electric bolt passed, killing her as she stood at the table, shortly after the evening meal had been served. Two children were stunned, but soon revived.

WASHOUT

(Lindsay Warder)

A wash-out on the G. T. R., near Kinmount, was the result of a heavy rain yesterday morning. The storm, it is stated, was very heavy, and about sixty feet of track was washed out near the junction, delaying the train from that place yesterday considerable. A train was sent out from here with the necessary material and the damage was repaired.

STORIETTES

Miss Henrietta was not a sylph by any means, but she prided herself upon the neatness of her well rounded figure, and when she appeared on the hotel verandah one summer day with a cluster of white oxeye daisies pinned against the crisp freshness of her green linen frock, gallant old Colonel Floyd was moved to make her a pretty speech.

"What charming posies!" he remarked with a Chesterfieldian bow. "They suit you exactly. You look like a Virginia hillside!"

He was mystified at the frigidity with which Miss Henrietta received his bit of homage.—"Youth's Companion."

"I had a wealthy client who died a while ago," said Senator John Sharp Williams. "He left his whole fortune to his only son, with me as executor of the estate.

"Now he had kept this young man, who was just turned 21, in pretty close leash during his youth, and it was with eyes bulging with expectancy of a good, far-flung fling that the son called on me a few days after the funeral to learn when he was coming into his kingdom.

"'I haven't qualified as executor yet, Bob,' I told him, 'but come around in a week or so and you can get what you want.'

"Promptly on the dot Bob turned up.

"'The period for advertising for claims against the estate will not expire for a fortnight yet,' I told him this time, 'so I cannot legally pay you anything until then. Drop in in a couple of weeks and I'll fix you out.'

"Bob swallowed his disappointment and took his departure. At the end of a fortnight he promptly appeared again.

"'Sorry to disappoint you a third time, Bob,' I said, 'but there have been some purely formal claims filed against the estate that cannot be disposed of until next month's term of court. If you'll call after that you can get all the cash you want, but I really don't see my way clear to pay out anything until these matters are disposed of. Come back in a month and it will be all right then.'

"Bob moved slowly to the door. With his hand on the knob, he turned to me.

"'Mr. Williams,' he said sadly, 'do you know sometimes I'm right sorry the old man died!'"—New York "Sun"

Mrs. Brown, telephoning to a friend one morning, happened to say:

"I have such a bad sore throat I'm afraid I cannot go to that dinner party to-morrow night."

Just then something went wrong with the connection, and she heard a strange voice break in:

"Gargle your throat with cooking soda, and I think you will be able to go to your dinner."

"Who is speaking?" asked Mrs. Brown, startled.

"Oh, that you will never know," answered the voice.

Mrs. Brown was greatly amused and decided to try the remedy. Her throat improved, and she went to the party. During dinner she chanced to overhear the gentleman opposite say to his neighbour:

"I had an amusing experience the other morning. I was telephoning, and the wires became crossed. I suddenly heard a lady's voice say, 'I have such a bad throat, I shan't be able to go to that dinner party.' Just for fun I broke in and said, 'Gargle your throat with cooking soda, and you'll be all right.' The lady's voice in reply sounded rather surprised. I wonder if she took my advice."

Mrs. Brown was greatly tempted to reveal her identity as the heroine of the episode, but she decided she could get more fun another way. She made careful inquiry of her hostess as to the gentleman's full name and address, and next morning called him up. When he answered, she said:

"I just wanted you to know that I took your advice, gargled my throat with cooking soda, and was able to go to the dinner."

"Who—who is this speaking?" came an astonished voice from the other end of the wire.

"Oh, that you will never know," answered Mrs. Brown laughing, and rang off.—"Lippincott's."

Ex-Senator Depew, at the University Club's recent dinner in Washington, said of a certain reform:

"As I take my farewell of politics, I would tell my reforming friends that they are going about this business in the wrong way. I would refer them to Grant's remark about the stream.

"When Grant was President, a Southerner came to see him about an appropriation to have a certain stream dredged.

"'Let's see,' said Grant, 'didn't I cross that stream?'

"'You certainly did, Mr. President,' said the Southerner.

"Grant mused a moment, chewing his cigar. Then he said:

"'Look here; why don't you macadamize it?'"—Cincinnati "Enquirer."

"Tell me about Spain, romantic Spain." "Well," said the motorist, "there are a few bad places as you come down the mountains, but in the main the roads are pretty good."—Washington "Herald."

Rheumatism for Several Years—Now as well as Ever

647 Main St., St. John, N. B., Nov. 27. 1908.

Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Ltd.

I am writing to tell you I have been a victim to Rheumatism for several years, and have been treated by seven doctors without finding any permanent relief until I got Father Morriscy's medicine. It has cured me so I am able to do my work and find I am as well as ever in my life.

Yours truly,
JOAB CRAWFORD.

Rheumatism cannot exist when the kidneys are in perfect working order for then they take out of the blood all the Uric Acid, which now causes the Rheumatism.

Father Morriscy's "No. 7" Tablets

act directly on the kidneys, toning them up and helping them to clear the blood of the Uric Acid. If the Rheumatism is of long standing it may take some time to clear out all the poison, but almost from the first "No. 7" Tablets relieve the pain, and if used faithfully they rarely fail to cure.

Even if other remedies have done you no good, do not give up till you have tried Father Morriscy's "No. 7" Tablets.

STREET CAR CONDUCTORS IN GERMANY

The street car system of Germany is distinguished from that of any other country by the practice on the part of a large proportion of the passengers of giving the conductor a tip.

The average fare on the German street car is 10 pfennigs, the equivalent of 2 cents, but one-third of the passengers give another cent as gratuity to the conductor when he hands them over their ticket. This is usually done by women, probably with the vague idea of securing the championship of the conductor in case of unpleasantness of any sort.

That tips amount to a considerable sum in the course of a year was shown by a trial at Hamburg arising out of a dispute between the street car company and one of its conductors in which the court estimated the tips at about $80 in the course of 12 months.

The existence of the custom of tipping on the part of the public was assumed by the court from the comparatively low wages paid to the conductors as compared with the drivers.—New York Sun.

MANY VISITORS TO THE SCOUTS' CAMPING GROUND

Last Thursday being visiting day at "Base Rock," the boy scout camp ground, a number of ladies and gentlemen from town went out in the afternoon by the Chemong auto, and from there were taken to the camp ground by Mr. Andrew Brown, who very kindly placed his launch at their disposal. As they neared the landing they were greeted with cheers from the boys, accompanied by bugle calls. Scout Master W. J. Miller made an excellent host assisted by Mr. Mg. Loren, who is also camping with the boys. They informed the visitors that all the boys are good swimmers but one, and he is to be taught before returning. The great surprise to the visiting mothers was the very quick response to obey the Scout Master's whistle. The cooks, Scout Mills and Scout Fries, made the ladies a most excellent cup of tea, which the boys said had ben donated by Mr. Johns, and it might be added here that any other donations sent would be most welcome, as boys never seem to get filled. The landing is very nicely decorated with three large Union Jacks and a number of small flags. The tents are well put up by the boys, who also made their own beds with rope woven and stretched on stakes, about a foot from the ground.

The boys will, no doubt, if the weather permits, have a good two weeks' outing and Saturday, the 12th, will be the next visiting day, when some special drills will be put on for the occasion.

LOST HIS TEETH WHILE PAYING HIS TAXES

BUFFALO, N.Y., AUG. 5.—During the rush and confusion of the last few days of tax collecting at the city hall the loss of numerous small articles has been reported at Supt. "Bill" Fisher's office. Things misplaced ranged from temper to pocketbooks, but the prize loss of all was brought to the attention of the superintendent yesterday.

A tall, angular person with considerable facial hirsute adornment approached Supt. Fisher diffidently.

"Were any teeth found around here this morning?" he asked, mouthing his words with great care and much precision.

"What?" gasped the superintendent, whose rules of 'how to live' usually save him from feeling sudden shocks.

"Did you find any teeth this morning?—I lost mine while I was paying my taxes," reiterated the stranger.

Questioning brought out that the man had dropped his set of false teeth while paying his tax bill and so rapt was he in admiration at the small size of the bill this year that he never noticed the loss of his shining molars, cuspids and grinders. The teeth were not found.

SATURDAY'S MARKET

There was a fairly brisk market this morning, and the inside market was crowded with all kinds of produce. Butter and eggs were in abundance, also fruits and vegetables of all kinds. The following were the prices of some of the produce:

Chickens—80c.
Ducks—60c. each.
Turkeys—$1.50.
Butter—27c.
Eggs—18c. and 19c.
Raspberries—15c.
Loose hay—$12 to $13.
Baled hay—80c. per cwt.
Potatoes—40c. per pk.
Apples—25c. per pk.
Little pigs—$3.00 each.
Farmers' hides—$7.50.
Butchers' hides—$8.50.
Live hogs—$7.50.

The following vegetables were also in abundance and selling at the usual prices: Cucumbers, tomatoes, cobcorn, green tomatoes, all kinds of berries and other varieties of late berries, cabbage, carrots, peas, beans, new potatoes, parsnips, radish, celery and other vegetables, etc.

A WONDERFUL EXPERIENCE

WITH NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

While there are no thrills in the narration of Mrs. P. T. Nichols, 323 Broad St., Beloit, Wis., her story is nevertheless one of amazing interest. "Stricken with neuralgia and erysipelas, I lost all my hair. My doctor recommended Newbro's Herpicide. I used six or eight bottles and now have a fine head of slightly curly light brown hair. Not a gray hair in my head. This is the more remarkable as I am middle-aged."

While the results which follow the use of Newbro's Herpicide are always more or less astonishing, they are always natural. Herpicide destroys the dandruff germ, stimulates the flow of blood to the hair follicles and keeps the scalp perfectly healthy. It makes possible a natural and luxuriant growth of hair, except in cases of chronic baldness.

While remedies said to be "every bit as good" as Newbro's Herpicide, are frequently offered, one should insist upon having the original germ destroyer, Herpicide. That is genuine. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

For sale at all drug stores. One dollar size bottles are guaranteed. Applications may be obtained at good barber shops. Send 10c. in postage for sample to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

RAGING HEADACHE STOPPED AT ONCE

When He Took "Fruit-a-tives"

SHANLY, ONT., Sept. 23rd, 1910.

"You certainly have the Greatest discovered Headache Cure in the world. Before "Fruit-a-tives" came before the public, I suffered tortures from Headaches caused by Stomach Disorders.

"One of your travellers called on me when I had one of my raging headaches and had my head almost raw from external applications.

"I hated to see any person coming into the store (much less a commercial traveller) and I told him very curtly that I had a headache but he insisted on my trying "Fruit-a-tives".

"I did so, with what I would call amazing results. They completely cured me and since then (nearly six years ago) it is only necessary for me to take one occasionally to preserve me in my present good health. I was 65 years old yesterday and have been a general store keeper at the above address for twenty-five years".

WM. PITT

Dealers everywhere have "Fruit-a-tives" at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50 or trial size, 25c. or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

BUNCO GAME SPRUNG ON TORONTO SUFFRAGETTES

MONTREAL, AUG. 5.—Although the Women's Suffrage Movement is not numerically strong in Canada, every city of importance has a few ardent advocates of the "Votes for Women" cause, who make up in enthusiasm what they lack in numbers. Accordingly when a lady arrived amongst the local colony recently and stated that she was an organiser from one of the big English movements, who have come to Canada to assist the workers here, she was cordially welcomed.

It was in Toronto that she first made her appearance where she introduced herself and by her vivacious description of the work going on in England, especially amongst the militant section, she soon made many friends and then left for Montreal. In Toronto she secured the names of some of the Montreal ladies interested in "Votes for Women," and using the names of the Toronto ladies as an introduction, made a small circle of acquaintances here. Learning that there was in Montreal an ex-organiser of the union with which she claimed to be associated Miss Stewart induced a prominent local lady to introduce her. This was done and many mutual acquaintances were discussed, thus confirming the impression that she was a prominent person in the English movement.

Was in Great Distress.

The next morning she called on the local lady in great distress. She had just received a letter calling her home to Scotland, she stated, and had already booked her passage. This had left her without funds with the exception of a check she had received by the same mail from the Toronto Women's Suffrage Association, amounting to about two hundred dollars in payment for some lectures she had given there. Unfortunately she was not known at any of the Montreal banks and would it be too great a favour to ask her friend to go to a bank and identify her?

The bank manager, however, refused to pay the check unless it was endorsed and the local lady wrote her name on the back. They parted after making an appointment for lunch. She failed to keep the appointment and the local lady became anxious. Then she became suspicious and telephoned the hotel. The clerk stated that there was no such person there, but on being supplied with a description recognised a woman who left that morning.

Claim it is a Forgery.

The Toronto organization was telegraphed to about the check and replied that it was a forgery. Detectives were notified and a search instituted which culminated with an inspection of the ship upon which she was supposed to have booked her passage. It was all without avail for she vanished.

A cable to London brought a denial of the woman's membership of the association there, and further inquiries elicited the fact that she had left Toronto owing considerable sums of money. Suffragettes, however, are proverbially kind hearted where the frailties of women are concerned and no further action was taken until the London suffragettes had been communicated with, as it was thought that the woman might have fallen on hard times here and becoming distracted resorted to these extraordinary methods to get back home.

Operated in England.

It was confidentially believed that the various sums of money would soon be refunded, if not by her, by wealthy relatives of whom she had spoken. Now letters have been received from London indicating that the woman has been operating, under suspicious circumstances in England under different names, and asking that all Canada Suffragettes be warned against her. The letter adds that if the police can get in touch with her they should communicate with Scotland Yard, which has plenty of information concerning her.

What She Looks Like.

According to the local ladies who met the woman she is about five feet two, weighs 130, brown hair, grey eyes, very plain features, with large nose and mouth, slight deformity at top of her back, which may be assumed, walks very rapidly with short steps with head well forward, generally drives in hired rigs, stipulating for fast horses, which she drives rapidly, wears a soft plain white hat, and the dresses she has been seen in are linen with elaborate embroidery and buttonhole work including a long white coat and very handsome blue linen costume with long coat.

ENGLAND'S RAT PLAGUE

LONDON, AUG. 5.—From the south of England to the north of Scotland, there is a revival of alarm over the prevalence of disease among rats and bees. Plague infected rats have been discovered at Wapping, a Thames-side district, nearer to London than any yet caught.

This is within a mile of Tower Bridge, and medical scientists are drawing lurid pictures of the panic that would ensue if the rat disease got a footing in London's densely-populated riverside region. Professor Simpson, of King's College, an authority on the plague, says the danger is that fleas will carry the disease from rats to human beings. He adds the authorities are taking action to prevent any infection. Big city firms are spending thousands of dollars to rid their premises of rodents. An official estimate places the number of rats in London higher than the human population.

As to the bees, they are dying by the million of a mysterious complaint that originated in the Isle of Wight. The bees appear all right when seen going from flower to flower, but suddenly they droop, become paralysed, fail to fly—and die. Microscopic examination reveals fungus on them, but the nature of the ailment is a mystery to the experts. Consequently amateurs are filling the dull season with jokes to the effect that the bees die from overwork due to the use of modern hives, and the taking away of the honey as fast as made. The only scientific suggestion is that the entrances to the hives should be made larger and the bees submitted to more "light and air cure." A hot controversy is raging on this and on the theory that no more than two hundred hives should be allowed on every two square miles of country, while a license should be issued by the Government for each hive.

You Should Tremble And Shudder

When an unscrupulous druggist offers you a substitute for DR. FOWLER'S Extract of Wild Strawberry.

If you are suddenly attacked by DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY, COLIC, CRAMPS OR PAINS IN THE STOMACH, CHOLERA MORBUS, SUMMER COMPLAINT, or any LOOSENESS OF THE BOWELS, do not experiment with some new and untried remedy, but get one that has stood the test of time.

For 65 years this wonderful medicine has been used in thousands of homes in Canada, and has given universal satisfaction. When you want a bottle of "Dr. Fowler's," insist on being given what you ask for, as these no-name, no-reputation preparations may be dangerous to your health.

Mr. J. Castle, Totenka, Man., writes: "Just a word in favor of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which I used last summer for Cramps in the Stomach and Diarrhoea. I was very sick for a week and not able to do anything until I purchased a bottle of the above remedy, and after three or four doses I was as well as ever."

The price is 35 cents per bottle. See that the name, The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont., appears on the label, as we are the manufacturers and sole proprietors of this remedy.

"The Store That Shows New Things First"

CRESSMAN'S STORE AS AN IDEAL SHOPPING PLACE

It has always been our policy to make this store the People's Store —the store where the vast majority of people could always depend upon being served to their entire comfort, satisfaction and genuine economy.

No labour or expense has been spared to accomplish the desired end. At present we have four floors including many special departments.

ON THE MAIN FLOOR are to be found Dress Goods and Silks, Wash Goods, Dress Accessories, Linens, Staples and Smallwares also two special departments—Sheet Music and Stationery that have helped wonderfully to make this floor such a busy, hustling section.

THROUGH THE ARCH on the main floor we have the Men's Clothing and Furnishings Department; to the rear we have the alteration room and Men's Shoes. The Shoe Department is one which has been added recently and fills a long felt want as it is now possible for a man to purchase a whole new outfit without having to leave the department.

ON THE SECOND FLOOR is located one of the finest Ready-to-Wear Departments in Ontario; plans are under way at the present time for still further enlargements. On this floor are also found Millinery and Women's Shoe Departments. By this arrangement a complete costume can be purchased without leaving this floor. Here also are situated the altering rooms, the millinery rooms and the dressmaking department.

ON THE THIRD FLOOR are found Carpets and Housefurnishings, Wall Papers, Beds and Bedding. One of the distinct features afforded by this department is the advantage of selecting Rugs Draperies and Wall Papers on the same floor.

THE FOURTH FLOOR is devoted to the Bargain Annex. This is one of the exclusive features of this store, its name being covered by government patent. This department is open Wednesday only from 8.15 a.m. to 5.30 p.m.

Altogether this is an ideal place to do your shopping; every possible consideration is given your comfort and convenience.

We are justly proud of the business you have enabled us to build in these few years—of the success that has crowned our efforts to make this an ideal shopping centre.

LEACH'S TRIP OVER FALLS

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Aug. 3.—"Get out of the road, Bobby wants to go out!" was the command of a man in the Lafayette bar, as two men half picked up a man whose bandaged left leg showed out from the folds of the red bathrobe in which he was dressed, and it was obvious the owner took mighty good care that he did not step on it very hard nor strike it against anything. "Bobby" was "Bobby Leach," the man who successfully made the plunge over the Horse Shoe Falls in a barrel last Tuesday afternoon.

The Lafayette Hotel is close by the Canadian end of the upper steel arch of Niagara and right in full view of the Falls. Leach is being visited there by thousands who admire his courage and take occasion to extend congratulations to him on his feat.

While receiving visitors this afternoon Leach sat in one chair with both feet up in another, while right in front of him lay the iron cask in which he made his wonderful trip, easily outdoing the feat of Anne Edson Taylor, who went over the Falls in an oaken barrel.

Mrs. Taylor dropped from the higher to the lower level of the river outside the flow of waters, but the weight of Leach's barrel caused him to pierce the spill and drop right through the sheet to the water in the gorge.

HAD BEST VIEW EVER

As he made the drop Leach pulled out the air plug in his cask and so was enabled to get the most remarkable view man has ever had of the falls of Niagara. His fears, sensations and sufferings were for the first time related for print to The World correspondent to-day.

"I am glad I got through all right," said Leach. "You see, I had my barrel made in Niagara Falls, N. Y., and when I brought it to my Canadian home the Customs assessed me about $30. Then the Canadian police told me I would not be permitted to start from Canadian soil, and so that actuated me to send my barrel back to the New York side.

"Where I had it taken to I won't tell, but friends cared for it, and I went across the river to a friend's house. Then I telephoned to my wife that when I came home it would be by the water route over the Horseshoe and in my barrel boat.

"I was determined. I knew I could do it. I never expected anything but a successful outcome. Four times I had been through the whirlpool rapids, and once I leaped from the upper arch bridge into the bosom of the stream.

"The Niagara river has always been good to me, let me tell you. It is not a cruel river, as some think. Its purpose is not to rob people of life, unless they want to die. I wanted to live. I went over the Falls, and here I am.

"I knew I had got to elude the officers and so when we started out from shore I told the men in charge of the boat that if we were followed they must cast me adrift. If we were likely to be overtaken, as I knew, I would quickly drift where no boat dare follow me, and I was willing to take a chance. The gorge and home by way of the Falls was my destination.

BUMPED HARD, BUT HAD NO FEAR

"When finally they let me go it was quiet sailing for some little time. I was not nervous. I had no fear. I was glad that the trip I had talked about for years was before me. I had thought of it long enough.

"My barrel appeared to be on the bottom many times, but my confidence in its stability was unshaken. It bumped hard as it drifted along, and I want to tell you right here that the upper rapids of Niagara are forty times worse than the whirlpool rapids for boat riding.

"The trip was commonplace until I reached a point I now judge to have been outside of the Electrical Development Company's station. I seemed to tarry there, and my barrel swung back and forth for quite a few minutes with the regularity of the pendulum of a clock.

"Suddenly this motion stopped and the next instant I struck something that made that great big dent in the side. Do you see it? Go feel it, and you will realize that that blow was terrific. But the barrel remained water-tight.

"Soon I knew I was in smooth water. When I was struck that blow the barrel appeared to fly about fifty feet. Those who were watching say I fairly dashed out toward midstream.

PULLED PLUG—SAW MIGHTY BRINK

"The comparative quiet of the voyage at this time impelled me to pull the air plug, and as I looked out I saw I was dipping over the crink. The next instant I shot through the sheet. I drove the plug back, but not until I saw the rear of the Horseshoe. It wasn't much I saw, you can bet, but it told me the spill of water was in front of me.

"The plunge was over in less than it takes me to tell it.

"Yes, of course, I knew I was dropping, but the impact at the bottom was not as severe as you might expect. Still, I wouldn't swear it was very soft.

"I retained consciousness all the time and after the drop rejoiced in having reached the lower river all right, and knew it must be but a short time before I would be caught.

"I wish I could tell you just what the sensation of the remarkable voyage was, but somehow or other on a first trip like this it is impossible. You fail to make all the notes you might in going over it again.

"You see, my trip was studied. I was not alarmed. My nerve was with me, or I wouldn't have undertaken the trip. You can bet you know when you are being tossed among the reefs in the upper rapids, but you cannot tell in advance when you will get a blow such as made that dent. No, it wasn't made in the drop over the Falls. I got it before, as I said, and it was the worst strike I made.

HIS SENSATIONS INDESCRIBABLE

"I recall my sensations when I jumped from the upper bridge—that feeling of something dropping out from under you, and then the giant splash. But the drop over the Falls of Niagara is something different, something really different. It is actually indescribable. I know of nothing to which I can liken it. Go and make the trip. Experience the tumult of the chaotic waters of those upper rapids, and the glide with the sheet that drops full down 168 feet will impress you as something that is to be enjoyed only at Niagara.

"Of course, they rescued me within a short time after I made the drop. I heard the cheers before they caught me. Those voices sounded refreshing, I tell you. I was glad to hear them, for they gave me new sensations and hope. I knew I had not disappointed anybody. Bobby Leach had kept his word. Bobby had made good.

"I want you to see my body," he said, and he threw open his robe, and drew up his shirt.

Curled all round his arms and body were streaks of bruised flesh that looked like rare beef, and told better than words of the awful, frightful strain Leach underwent when slung in his hammock inside the barrel and endeavoring to hold fast to the ropes. Every cord that touched him had made its mark and left his body a network of bruised flesh. Under these circumstances it is little wonder Bobby is stiff and sore, but despite this he is of pleasant manner and has a merry greeting for all.

BARREL TURNED LIKE BUZZ-SAW

"When I was at the foot of the fall," he went on, "I remember my barrel twisted around like a buzz-saw. It acted like a cork in those waters, and the wild currents drove me every way. I was badly battered there, and I suppose my barrel must have been out of sight for a time. It was a pretty busy time with me then, and you can bet I felt I was going to some place every minute, even though I didn't know where or which way.

"You see, there is a terrible amount of water dropping over that ledge every second, and all this must crowd its way out from under. The waters at the base of the fall are not so buoyant as in the deep green depths farther down stream, because they are so surcharged with air. This made my barrel settle down pretty well, and nobody could see me until I got into more water and came to the top.

"As to my future, I am going to sell out my Niagara business and travel in this country and abroad. I have done considerable high diving in Europe and am not unknown.

"NEVER AGAIN FOR ME!"

"No, I shall never think of going over the Falls again. Once is novelty and excitement enough for any life. I have always kept my word and done just what I said I would."

Leach was selling postal cards showing his barrel and the Falls at ten cents each to-day, and the rapidity with which they were grabbed up indicated the appreciation and admiration the public has for his sensational trip. His supply was exhausted within a few minutes. People crowded around him, glad to greet a man of such daring, the women visitors all shaking his hand and extending congratulations.

Following this first full recital of his story to The World, Leach drove across the upper arch bridge to this city, where the Bellman crowd hailed him as a hero on Falls street.

A TRANSPARENT GAME.

Was there ever a Conservative election campaign in Canada without an appeal to racial and religious bigotry, without an attempt to stir up racial and religious prejudices and passions? We have had experience with every sort of sectarian cry. We have had the "equal rights," we have had the "Protestant Protective Association," and orators of the Margaret Shepherd type saving the country and Protestantism—always in Conservative party interests. The agitation has been entirely partisan, and the anxiety was not for Protestantism—which is invulnerable above the defiance of those who trample it under foot, by making it a stepping stone for party profit—but in the interests of only one party.

Protestantism was in no danger when the Conservatives of Ontario, including the Protestant "protectors" to a man, stood by Sir John Macdonald, literally worshipped him, when he had a solid Quebec behind him. Quebec was all right when the Protestant "protectors" could work with the "slaves of the hierarchy" to keep the Conservative party in power.

The Protestant "protectors" of Ontario followed with faithful steps Sir John Thompson, a Roman Catholic, premier and leader of the Conservative party, a position to which he was entitled because he had the majority of the representatives in parliament behind him, and was placed in the position by the help of the Protestant "protective" element of Ontario — by the way, the same element of the Conservative party which to-day is hounding Laurier because he is of French ancestry, and declared to be anti-British, anti-Imperial, and all that is bad—especially because he's Liberal and in power.

Now, Sir Wilfrid has a Quebec element which wishes to destroy him because he is too British—the "Nationalists" of Quebec, because he betrayed them, because he "sacrificed the Catholics of Manitoba to the Orangiste fanatics."

Now, Laurier is to be assaulted on both flanks. As is shown in an article in yesterday's issue Mr. Borden and his Conservative friends, including the Protestant "protectors" of Ontario are joining hand in hand with the "Nationalists" of Quebec, headed by Mr. Bourassa, to defeat Laurier, whose head is demanded on one hand because he is too British, and on the other, because he is un-British.

Could hypocrisy and humbug go further? What a farce it is for the champions of Protestantism in Ontario to join hands with the French renegade clergy, which is down on everything British, to destroy a man who is declared to be a menace to Protestantism. Protestantism is not in question at all; it is only used as the tool to bring about a party triumph.

But the game is too transparent, and it will fail, as have failed the other racial and religious games that have marked every election for the past quarter of a century. He is a weak-kneed and weak-headed Liberal who will be deceived by such a claptrap conglomeration of inconsistency.

DON'T PULL OUT THE GRAY HAIRS

"Pull out one gray hair and a dozen will take its place" is an old saying, which is, to a great extent, true, if no steps are taken to stop the cause. When gray hairs appear it is a sign that Nature needs assistance. It is Nature's call for help. Gray hair, dull, lifeless hair, or hair that is falling out, is not necessarily a sign of advancing age, for there are thousands of elderly people with perfect heads of hair without a single streak of gray.

When gray hairs come, or when the hair seems to be lifeless or dead, some good, reliable hair-restoring treatment should be resorted to at once. Specialists say that one of the best preparations to use in the old-fashioned "sage tea" which our grandparents used. The best preparation of this kind is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a preparation of domestic sage and sulphur, scientifically compounded with later discovered hair tonics and stimulants, the whole mixture being carefully balanced and tested by experts.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is clean and wholesome and perfectly harmless. It refreshes dry, parched hair, removes dandruff and gradually restores faded or gray hair to its natural color.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

resist attack on our freedom. It will be enough to say here that Laurier is the Canadian who gave England a tariff preference, who gave Canada two new provinces and two transcontinental railways, and a reciprocity treaty that will provide the farmer with two markets and reduce the cost of living. What has religion to do with this man's unselfish politics? Did J. H. Burnham hate Sir John Thompson because he was a Roman Catholic? What has this man's race to do with his statesmanship? There have been French-Canadian premiers before. What about Merrin and Lafontaine?

Two Kinds of Hating.

Of course Burnham and Bourassa hate Laurier in different ways. Each of the partners uses his own mistaken line of thought—

Burnham hates Laurier because

"He is not imperialist enough.
"He is a good Catholic.
"Because he is not British born.

J. H. Burnham can never beat J. R. Stratton as long as Laurier provides the strong, aggressive, progressive government he does.

Bourassa hates Laurier because—

"He is too much of an imperialist.
"He is not a good enough Catholic.
"He is too British.
"He did not give Henri Bourassa a Cabinet job."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier must be pretty nearly all right when he fails to satisfy both these good haters.

A Freak Campaign.

West Peterborough has witnessed many queer campaigns in which religious and moral questions have been raised for political purposes. Among others we have had Protestant horse campaigns; a Margaret L. Sheppard campaign, an autonomy bill campaign. All these religious cries were raised by the same party, for the same purpose. The religious cry is now being raised against Laurier because it cannot be raised against J. R. Stratton. This underground alliance between Burnham and Bourassa is the queerest campaign of all.

HOW SKIN-TROUBLES HAVE BEEN CURED

A Remarkable Record of Itching, Burning, Disfiguring Eruptions Successfully Treated.

That those who have suffered long and hopelessly from eczema and other tormenting, disfiguring eruptions of the skin and scalp and who have lost faith in all manner of treatment, may learn that there is one way to find immediate relief, the following remarkable series of condensed testimonials is published:

W. H. White, 212 E. Cabot St., Philadelphia: Knew to awake a mass of eruption. Suffering simply indescribable for six long years. Had to scratch till blood ran and health was undermined from lack of sleep. Cuticura Remedies cured it without a mark.

Mrs. M. C. Maitland, Jasper, Ont.: Itchy rash on her baby's head when but three months old. It spread over entire body. Put mittens on him to prevent tearing skin. Reduced to a skeleton. One bath with Cuticura Soap and application of Cuticura Ointment soothed him to sleep. A single set cured him. Thinks child would have died but for Cuticura Remedies.

Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 268 Fairmount Ave., Newark, N. J.: Whole body a mass of raw, torturing eczema. Agony was beyond words. Hair all fell out and ears seemed ready to drop off. Clothing would stick to bleeding flesh. Hoped death would soon end fearful suffering. Cuticura Remedies cooled the itching, bleeding flesh at once and soon cured her.

Mme. J. B. Renaud, 277, Mentana St., Montreal: Treated by doctors 25 years for bad eczema on leg. It peeled from knee down; foot like raw flesh. Doctor advised cutting leg off. Decided to try Cuticura Remedies first. In two months' use of Cuticura Remedies she was cured.

Mrs. Nora Emmott, 28, Lane Gardens, Brook Green, London: Two little girls had dreadful scalp trouble that doctors called ringworm. Cried with intense itching. Hospital treatment gave frightful pain but did no good. Suffered three years, cured by three sets of Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

H. A. Krutskoff, 3714 Wabash Ave., Chicago: Itching eruption spread from hands to body. Literally tore his skin off in shreds. Doctors and remedies did no good. Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills stopped itching quickly and cured disease in three weeks.

Frank Gridley, 325 E. 43rd St., New York: In twenty-four hours he became raw from head to foot with a dreadful burning itch. Suffered agonies and could not lie down or sit up. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment cured him in a single day.

Mrs. Kate Brougham, 280 Dewey St., Bennington, Vt.: Rash came on her baby and soon turned to watery, crusted eczema over face, head and body. He was a fearful sight and all attempts at cure were fruitless. Vastly improved in a week by use of Cuticura Remedies and soon skin was clear and healthy.

O. J. Darvo, 37, New Road, Brentford England: Tortured for five years with bad skin diseases. Attended hospital five months without success. Covered with eruption. No sleep nor rest. Felt like tearing himself to pieces with terrible itching. With first application of Cuticura Ointment was relieved and got good night's sleep. In a fortnight Cuticura Ointment cured him as if by magic.

Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Pills are sold by druggists everywhere. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, Mass., for free 32-page Cuticura Book on skin diseases.

A STUDY IN MOTHS AND CATERPILLARS

At this season of the year the caterpillars of our most magnificent moths are about and it will be interesting to give some means of identification that will make these caterpillars mean something to those who find them.

A few days ago a note appeared in the Examiner, referring to a giant caterpillar. This was referred to as popularly known as a tomato worm. But it is not that. It was the caterpillar of the magnificent emperor moth—Samia Cecropia. This is one of our grandest moths having a wing spread of four or five inches and beautifully marked. The late Mr. Saunders thus describes it and its history:

"This beautiful moth of June lays its eggs singly on the apple tree. These, during the next five or six weeks, hatch into caterpillars, which finally grow to be three or four inches long, and about as thick as a man's finger, or a little thicker. They are green in colour, and are covered with warts; those on the top of the anterior segments are large and of a coral red colour, the remainder are yellow, excepting those on the second and hinder segments, which, in common with the smaller ones, along the sides, are blue. Early in the autumn the larva spins its strong silken cocoon, perhaps three inches in length, inside of which it changes to a chrysalis, and remains, during the winter, developing into the moth the following season, about the beginning of June.

Another fruit tree pest, attacking the plum, is the plum sphinx—Sphinx drupiferarum. It may be described as follows:

"The plum sphinx caterpillar is a large, green worm, with white stripes on the sides, and a prominent horn at the tail. It attains the length, at maturity, of perhaps three or three and a half inches, and is correspondingly thick. This produces a very handsome sphinx moth, which is a night-flying insect, and has a flight somewhat similar to that of the humming bird. It deposits its eggs about the month of June, and the larva attains its maturity about the end of autumn, when it descends from the tree, enters the ground and changes to a chrysalis, in which form it remains until the following season."

The moth is, however, insignificant in appearance, compared with the splendid cecropia, or another member of the family, the Polyphemus moth—Telea polyphemus — hus described by Mr. Saunders:

"The larva or caterpillar, is about asthick as a man's thumb, of a greenish yellow colour, and with the segments of the body very deeply cut into. These segments are covered with tubercles, which have clusters of small spines proceeding from them. Its history is very similar to that of the sphinx, which I have just mentioned. Instead, however, of forming a chrysalis under ground, it spins a cocoon inside of two or three leaves of the tree on which it is feeding, which it draws together, and within this enclosure changes to the pupa state. This cocoon, being attached to the foliage, falls to the ground with the leaves in the autumn, remaining there until the following summer, when, in the early days of June, the large, handsome moth is produced."

These descriptions will enable the reader to identify and intelligently study these ferocious-looking, green worms, which are often encountered this time of the year.

Fined For Assault

LINDSAY, AUG. 4.—Thursday evening at 7.30 o'clock Magistrate Jackson gave judgment in the charge of assault preferred against Joseph Lywood and against Chas. Crowley for assault and doing bodily harm. His Honour reviewed the evidence and dismissed the charge against Lywood, as the evidence presented was of a conflicting and contradictory nature. The evidence in the Crowley case was of such a character as to prove the charge. In fact the Magistrate pointed out that Crowley's own evidence was sufficient to convict him. He showed himself to be very officious in his relations with the foreman, whose authority on the work should have been recognized. There was an apparent soreness because of the fact that the defendant was a foreigner. Crowley had shown no desire to avoid the altercation, and had ample opportunity to withdraw from the scene. Crowley, in his evidence stated that he had struck the foreman as hard as he could and the Magistrate stated that the condition of the plaintiff when he came to lay information, immediately after the assault, bore out his statement. The plaintiff was a respectable citizen and was very much attached to his family.

The Magistrate also referred to the evidence of the three Italians, and stated he believed they were telling the truth. The charge against Crowley was a serious one and a penitentiary term of three years could be imposed. However, he would be lenient in the matter and would impose a fine of $15 and costs, amounting in all to $24.21 or two months in gaol.

Magistrate Jackson paid a tribute to the lawyer for the defence, Mr. L. V. O'Connor, stating that in all his career as a Police Magistrate he had never heard anyone so well defended as the accused.

THE BOOM IS COMING

THE Porcupine Goldfields has, in our own opinion, had its slump, and according to conservative mining men the big boom is coming—September 15th is the date set by them. We predict, that when this date is reached, the present market prices on:

HOLLINGER—REA MINES—DOME EXTENSION—SWASTIKA—VIPOND—PRESTON—EAST DOME—FOLEY-O'BRIEN—PEARL LAKE

will be increased at least 25 per cent. When gold stocks begin to go up they increase in value more rapidly than any other kind of securities. Our advice is, "Buy any of the above mentioned stocks immediately at market."

Our special Canadian Weekly Market Letter will keep you posted on the Porcupine and Cobalt districts.

Sent free upon request.

We will be glad to execute orders for the purchase or sale of active, listed mining stocks, either for cash or on margin of 33 1-3 per cent., and will accept certificates when properly endorsed, as collateral margin against purchases.

MR. BURNHAM'S ADDRESS IS DELICATELY DISSECTED

A Beautiful Collection of Economical Odds and Ends —The Stuff That Dreamers Are Made Of.

Mr. J. H. Burnham's "Address to The Electors of West Peterborough" is a remarkable document. It is remarkable for two quite contradictory things—its thrift of ideas and its glut of the same.

How Hash Saves Labour.

Its thrift of ideas is shown in its close resemblance to one of Mr. Burnham's speeches in South Monaghan. The fact seems to be that the candidate saves himself time, work, and brain-fag, by making the one performance do for all occasions. He has, it is to be presumed, a vague and bulky political system, in his head, but he never condescends to explain single points. He offers many little sips, but never a full sup. As the man on the street would say—he never gets down to cases. He may have a good story in his mind, but he puts people off with the chapter headings. We will suppose that Mr. Burnham has a whole library of political doctrines in his noddle, a mass of conclusions and prejudices, clotted up in spots and nebulous, like the Milky Way, but when anybody asks him to tell them something definite, he tears out the table of contents, and says, "There, take that." From what we can see of Mr. Burnham's book of politics, it is all preface and no information.

In warming over the South Monaghan speech, delivered in 1908 by Mr. Burnham, is like the careful housewife who serves the joint hot, then cold, then hashed, and finally uses the bone in the stock pot. The only thing wrong with this simile is that the consumer gets more nourishment out of the beef, no matter how many times it is done over, than he does out of Mr. Burnham's speeches and printed addresses. One of the outstanding differences between Shakespeare's literary products and Mr. Burnham's is that Shakespeare never repeats, and Mr. Burnham does.

An Embarrassment of Riches.

The second feature of Mr. Burnham's address to the electors is the glut of ideas. This does not signify any particular richness in Mr. Burnham's thought. It simply means that he has wandered all over the lot, catching butterflies and picking pretty little flowers, whose names he doesn't know. All he wants is for them to look well stuck on pins, or pressed between the leaves of a book.

Once upon a time philosophers looked for a stone that would change all base metals into gold. The foolish things they said and did when they were on that crazy quest are no more foolish than the things Mr. Burnham says and prints in his desperate search for one solid argument that he can hook up to and fight for. The working arrangement between Burnham and Bourassa cannot be acknowledged in public, so Mr. Burnham has to skirmish round to get something he can use in the daylight. "I will speak daggers," says Hamlet. Bourassa is a dagger Mr. Burnham can stick into Laurier's back in the private conclaves, but it will not do for public performances.

Shake Well Before Using.

Mr. Burnham's address to the electors is not unlike the old lady who believed that self-medication was the first law of nature. She had read medical books, until she began to think, like Jerome K. Jerome, that she had everything but housemaid's knee. She found that she had one or two of the test symptoms from every disease mentioned in the books, and as she was very fond of medicine any way, she decided that if one remedy wouldn't reach her ailment a mixture of a great many might. So she mixed herself up a little castor oil and epsom salts, with a little burnt brandy and port wine and extract of wild strawberry and sal hepatica and sarsaparilla and blood bitters, and kidney pills, and celery compound, and syrup of hypophosphites, and psychine, and hair restorer, and dandruff destroyer, and listerine, and household ammonia, and carbolic acid, and peroxide of hydrogen, and shoe polish, and wonder shine and corn salve, and old Dutch cleanser—in fact a little of everything healing, cleansing, and disinfecting, that she had in the house; took a teaspoonful of it in water, three times a day, after meals, and waited for results. History does not say what happened to the old lady who tried to combine all the valuable remedies advertised in our newspapers. Probably nothing happened. She probably "got no loserder," or got worse. That is generally what happens to people who seek panaceas in odds and ends, believing that any mess will do, so long as it's well shaken before taken. Look at Mr. Burnham's address to the electors again, and see if it doesn't remind you of the old lady's cure-all. Or since it's medical metaphors we are on, isn't it like one of those grown-up cases of measels, where the patient is never quite safe until the rash comes out all over. It was not for an address to the electors, ever and anon, Mr. Burnham's itch for politics might strike in and kill him. It doesn't hurt so much, when he can get it out of his system every four or five years.

Burnham's Prescription.

Mr. Burnham is just a little wiser than the old lady with the 'cure all.' He has a leading ingredient in his nostrum—anti-reciprocity. Anti-reciprocity is what the doctors would call the base of his prescription. His subject uses up five hundred and fifty out of the thirteen hundred and twenty words in his address to the electors; that is to say, three-sevenths of the mixture. But "Dr." Burnham uses the dilute solution, which is druggists' language for thinning the stuff down with water. In fact, Mr. Burnham's anti-reciprocity is all water, for there is no argument in it. It consists of three general statements:

(1) That reciprocity will rob Canada of her natural products to the advantage of the United States.

(2) That reciprocity means annexation to the United States.

(3) That the Laurier Government did not consult the people of Canada on the matter.

Here have the big Reform newspapers been digging up reciprocity statistics and compiling reciprocity tables and here have the big Conservative newspapers been digging up statistics and tables to contradict them for the last six months, and all Mr. Burnham chooses from this wealth of platform material is three rash, general statements, with nothing behind them—three straw men that anybody can knock over.

Not to go into figures or to prove our point by bringing from Buffalo to sell below cost in the Toronto market and then footing the loss out of the campaign "barrel". It will be enough to say that Mr. Burnham is wrong three times out of three. He may aim at the truth, but when it comes to missing it he makes a "possible."

Wrong, All Wrong.

Reciprocity with the United States will not rob Canada of its natural products. If it will then Sir John Macdonald was so anxious to rob Canada robbed that he put a standing offer of reciprocity with the United States in his National Policy. Surely Mr. Burnham will take Sir John Macdonald's word on reciprocity just as much as he did Sir Chas. Tupper's on the Remedial Bill, which Mr. Burnham stated at Selwyn he would be willing to force on Manitoba at the point of the bayonet.

Reciprocity in natural products will not mean annexation to the United States. President Taft never said so. Mr. Burnham has taken him up wrong. What Taft said was that a measure of reciprocity would put Canada outside certain English tariff reform schemes to which the majority of people in Canada are objecting on their own account. Edward Blake never said so. What he fought against was unrestricted reciprocity—commercial union. Sir Oliver Mowat never said any single thing. He asked an ambiguous question and supplemented it with an ambiguous statement—a very canny, cautious, Christian-statesman statement, that Mr. Burnham must find cold comfort. Most of Sir Oliver's statements on this subject are like the Oracles and Delphi. They can be read many ways. In fact none of the authority Mr. Burnham quotes are dead sure, except Mr. R. L. Borden, who is dead sure, because he is "agin the Government." That is a better reason than Mr. Burnham's, who is against reciprocity because he says the other people said things which they did not say. Mr. Burnham is in a great flutter over Canada's dangerous adhiance with the United States. He has the interests of the British Empire at heart. Obviously his next duty is to issue an address to the Electors of the United Kingdom, warning them against the Arbitration treaty Mother England has just signed with Uncle Sam. Mr. Burnham will have plenty of time, after this election is over, to attend to this great work.

The Laurier Government has consulted the people. The Laurier Government could have worn down the Gideon's band that was opposing reciprocity in the House. Small in numbers, wind and words would soon have failed them. The Laurier Government could have put the reciprocity clause through as an amendment to the tariff act. They used their big majority to do neither. Instead, they cheerfully forfeited the advantage they would have had in the West from a redistribution of seats and took the question right to the people.

WAS BADLY INJURED BY A BURSTING HOSE

City Billed for $80 Damage as a Result—Meeting of Fire, Water and Light Committee Last Night—Hose Tester May Be Purchased.

The Fire, Water and Light Committee met last night at the Central Fire Station. Those present were: Chairman Ald. Morgan, Ald. Kernaghan, Ald. Metheral, Ald. Graham and Fire Chief Howard.

Chief Howard was given permission to engage a couple of men to act in the places of those who are about to take their holidays.

The question of purchasing a hose tester was also brought up.

Mr. J. H. Briggs was knocked down and badly injured by a bursting hose during an engine test which took place several weeks ago.

A letter was read from Mr. Briggs' lawyer demanding $50 damages and $20 of a doctor's bill from the city for injuries received.

Chief Howard thought that the procuring of a hose tester would eliminate all danger from future accidents. The matter was left over until after the Fire Chiefs' convention. The chairman will then have the opportunity of seeing our hose tester demonstrated.

Don't Wear Old Appearing Glasses

Why have Glasses that are awkward to wear and that give an unnecessary "old" appearance? Why dock and pose over your flashing Glasses to see objects at a distance? Why wear two pair of glasses, one for distance, the other for reading? Why wear conspicuous pointed uniform cemented to your distance lenses, when it is not necessary?

Wear Our Toric Kryptoks

Toric Kryptoks have the appearance of single lenses but give perfect distant and close work service. There is no marked "old appearing" dividing line to distract the vision and collect dirt, there is no pinches to blur or fall off—instead you have unlike lenses which you can wear at all times for all purposes as naturally as you would use your eyes without glasses.

"WORKING" THE NEW-COMERS.

The special "interests," the monopolistic interests, are making an attempt to "work," that is, trying to delude and befool, the Sons of England and to destroy the usefulness of a splendid beneficiary society. If a deliberate attempt to wreck the Sons of England's organization were made it could not be put in more promising shape than to make the Sons of England the football of politicians, to be kicked from pillar to post during an election, and then to be tossed aside in a wrecked condition, torn by internal dissension and un-brotherly bickering over sewer politics. All Englishmen cannot be fooled, and there are very many who will refuse to be made fools of—to be made catspaws to pull partisan chestnuts out of the fire. Regarding this attempt to "work" the Sons of England and other "British-born" to fight for the interests, a "Son of England," writing to the Toronto Star, says his countrymen will "march to the polls in hundreds of thousands to vote for the removal of trade shackles on natural products, supplying a market of 90,000,000 English-speaking kinsmen." And he declares that "Man for man, the advocates of a vaster market for this country have contributed just as largely to the phenomenal progress and prosperity which Canada enjoys, and braved and dared on many a hard-fought field just as 'fearful odds' to prove their unfaltering allegiance to King and country, as all the howling loyalty dervishes and professional 'old flag' wavers in the Tory camp." The insolence of the Tory schemers in claiming a monopoly of loyalty is extremely impudent—and that over the party led by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which granted the British trade preference. The reciprocity agreement in no way affects the British preference. British manufactures will come in at a third less duty than the manufactures of the United States under reciprocity, the same as at present. Indeed, the pact being confined almost exclusively to farm products, lumber and fish, articles we do not import from the Old Country. British interests are in no way affected. Let the elector think, study the situation, and act from reason, not passion and prejudice, and the attempts of the harmony-wreckers will fail, as they will deserve to fail. It is a poor way to secure a United Empire, and a harmonious Canadian people, by throwing fire brand to scatter and sunder them, to antagonize those who but, for the strife-breeders, would live in peace and pursue in peace the way of prosperity and happiness, the wider opportunities in wider sphere the new land of Canada presents.

DON'T BE CAUGHT BY CHAFF.

A meeting of the "Protestant Protective Association' is to be held to-night in the interests of the Conservative candidate, Mr. Burnham. This association represents an issue that should have no place in Canadian politics. It seems the object of the association is to draw a red herring across the trail of real issues, to stiffen the Conservative candidate's slim chances. The association named, it is understood, requires its members and adherents, to sign a pledge not to vote for a Catholic. How does that apply in West Peterborough? Mr. Stratton is not a Catholic and the object of the association here is to defeat Mr. Stratton. It is to be hoped that no Liberal will be caught in the meshes of the net thus spread. Bourassa in Quebec, an ultramontane Catholic, is trying to defeat Laurier because he is not a good Catholic and because he is too British. Mr. Burnham wants Laurier's head on a charger because he is too good a Catholic and because he is "un-British." Thus we find two naturally opposing elements working together, to each help the attainment of the other's end. Reciprocity, and not religion, is the issue in this campaign. In his election address, containing twelve paragraphs, only one refers, and in a veiled, undecided and misty way, to what Mr. Burnham is making the head and front of his campaign.

Let no thinking Liberal be caught in the trap. If he is solicitous for the interests and good name of the Protestant religion, let him show it in his life and not be a party in prostituting religion to the game of party politicians, working in the interests of the Conservative party under cover, in darkness, and by stealth. Any issue that cannot be advocated openly ane in the light of day, is an issue that does not legitimately enter into this or any other election campaign.

For the past quarter of a century, we have had in every election campaign the presence and activity of some organization claiming to be the champion of religious interests. After the cries raised in its name had served their purpose, after the election was over it dropped into oblivion. At the next election, another organization and another set of cries came into being, only to pass away and be succeeded, the next time by others.

Let Liberals remember, in the interests of what party these cries were raised and these campaigns were conducted — not the Liberal party anyway—and let them remember that Liberals, who were led astray and became parties to pulling the party chestnuts of their natural opponents into the fire, woke to find themselves de-classed and ostracised by the very parties that deluded them into helping play the party game.

THE FARMERS ARE THINKING.

That the reciprocity agreement is being looked upno with much favour by the Conservative farmers throughout the country, is becoming more evident each day. In fact, scarcely a day passes that one does not hear of some good old "Tory" farmer, who has grown tired of the meaningless flag-waving campaign of Mr. Borden and his lieutenants, and who is forced to admit that the free entry of natural products into the United States will be a decided advantage to the farmers of Canada. As an instance of this fact one has only to refer to an editorial in the Marmora Herald of last week. The Marmora Herald is one of the real bright weeklies of Ontario. It is independent in politics and the article to which we refer does not indicate whether the Herald itself is for or against reciprocity. The editor merely reviews the situation as he himself finds it. Amongst the observations made by the editor of the Marmora Herald in connection with the present political contest, is the following:

"Indications point to one of the hottest election campaigns in the history of Canada. In most sections the question of Reciprocity will be the issue, and in many places party lines will, to quite an extent, be lost sight of. On one side we find manufacturers and allied interests with their dependents opposing the pact, while agricultural, lumbering, mining, and fishing interests will support it. While in a town in one of the leading agricultural districts of Western Ontario, during the early part of the week, we were in conversation with a number of men, one of whom we have known for years as a strong Conservative partisan. This gentleman, who is well educated and a prosperous farmer, made the statement that he voted in Canada when he was 21 years of age, and he was now sixty-six, and had never cast anything but a Conservative vote, but he intended to support reciprocity and kenw a lot more like him."

"Of course, on the other hand, we met Liberals who are opposing the pact, but it was on the ground of not wanting to have any dealings with the United States. In fact, this sentiment seems to be the only real opposition to the pact, and how far it will out-weigh the business interests of the country would be hard to say. In Quebec and other parts other issues, such as the Navy Bill will also play an important part, so that it would be difficult to forecast the result with any certainty."

DESERTING THEIR LEADERS.

Mr. Borden and his lieutenants have abandoned the policy which their predecessors have worked for ever since Confederation. Their policy was reciprocity with the United States—a standing offer was inserted in the National Policy Act. But Mr. Borden knows better than Sir John Macdonald or Sir John Thompson. The present day opponents will tell the people that these statesmen were not in favour of reciprocity, that it is only Grit lies to say so. Let us see:

In the Federal election of 1891 Sir John Thompson, afterwards Premier of Canada and at that time Minister of Justice in Sir John Macdonald's Government, was a candidate in the county of Antigonish, his opponent being the present Judge McGillivray. In that election Sir John issued a card to the electors of the county, and in order that there may be no question as to the positive stand which this great leader of the Conservative party took in advocating reciprocity with the United States, we give herewith his election card in full:

To the Electors of the County of Antigonish:

Gentlemen,—At the election which will take place on the 5th day of March, I will be a candidate for re-election as a member of the House of Commons for the county of Antigonish.

The Government of which I am a member is appealing to the country with a policy which, we believe, will be heartily endorsed by a great majority of the electors. We have made to the Government of the United States, through the Government of Great Britain, proposals for reciprocity in trade, which we have good reason to believe will result in an arrangement by which the markets of the United States will be reopened to the products which our people desire most to send there.

"A fair measure of reciprocity" is what we desire, and we have no doubt that that can be obtained without undue sacrifices.

I respectfully ask your support and votes, and I pledge myself to serve the best interests of the country, if I should be honoured by a renewal of the confidence which was reposed in me at the two last elections and for which I shall be forever grateful. I remain, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,
John S. D. Thompson,
Antigonish, Feb. 24th, 1891.

In his speech on nomination day, Sir John made the further statement that after the fourth of March of that year a delegation from the Government would be sent to Washington to negotiate, if possible, a reciprocity treaty.

It wasn't treason to trade then, it wasn't to wreck the Empire, to sell goods to the United States without duties. Neither is there any treason to-day in the proposal to increase the prosperity of the farmers and the country at large by giving him free access for his farm products to a market of many millions—in addition to the home market and the British market. We still have the home market, but everybody knows that the home market cannot consume the products of Canadian farmers any more than a farmer's family can consume all that grows on a 200-acre farm. The next best thing to good crops and what makes a good crop gold in the purse, is a good market.

A COMMON SENSE TALK ON THE TRADE AGREEMENT

Reciprocity From the Farmers' and Manufacturers' Point of View as Discussed in a Railway Train

We were in the smoking compartment of a train between Montreal and Toronto. The day was particularly hot and the trip so far had been uninteresting. After lunch, two well-groomed men strolled back to the compartment and, lighting their cigars and comfortably seating themselves, continued a conversation which had evidently occupied their time during the meal.

"It's a bad business, John," said the older of the two, "no matter how you look at it."

"Yes, Mr. Brown," dolefully responded the man addressed as John. "It is striking a deathblow at the industries of this country."

"The worst feature,' 'responded the other, "is the attitude of the farmers. They are all prosperous, never more so, and that prosperity is due to the markets we manufacturers have made. Why, the farmers of this country are simply rolling in money at the present price of farm products. Wallace Nesbitt the other day coined a good phrase when in an interview abroad he said that 'the country is drunk with prosperity.' I think in this movement for lower duties the farmers have been supremely selfish. I suppose it is a dangerous thing to talk politics in public places, but I see that none of you are farmers."

"I don't know about that," laughingly answered a well dressed, clean cut young man sitting at the end of the long seat by the window. "For one, I must answer to the soft impeachment, but pray don't mind me; I am interested in your point of view."

"I did not mean to give offence, I assure you," politely replied Mr. Brown, "when I referred to the farmers as selfish."

"Oh, that's all right. I guess we are selfish enough, but don't you think that self-preservation has a lot to do with nature in the factory as well as on the farm?"

"Perhaps it has," answered Mr. Brown, good-naturedly, "but you must realize that we manufacturers have so much at stake in this question of reciprocity that we are naturally alarmed. You see, we not only devote our time to the industries in which we are interested, but out capital is also at stake."

"Well, I guess we are in the same boat again," responded the other, slowly. "I am not farming in a big way, but my hundred and fifty acres in South Ontario, with buildings and improvements, are easily worth $12,000, and you couldn't have my stock for another $8,000, so that you see I have quite a bit of capital invested in the farm and I am by no means a prominent farmer or breeder in my county."

"I suppose you can look at it that way, but you are apparently prosperous with so much capital, and, if you excuse me for saying so, a few years ago it would be a rare thing to see a farmer looking as prosperous as you."

"I am doing all right,' 'replied the other, "I am not complaining a bit, but, when the capitalists of Toronto recently signed a manifesto as to their unexampled prosperity, it was looked upon by us as rather necessary. We knew that they were prosperous before. They didn't need to put it in writing. You say we are selfish. If a desire to share in the prosperity so evident in our towns is selfishness, then we farmers must own up."

"But you do share in the prosperity," insisted the younger of the two manufacturers. "Look at the price you get now as compared with a few years ago. Take your own statement of your capital; it shows your prosperity."

"But I have only made a small part of it," replied the farmer, modestly. "The rest of it was left to me by my father, and it took him a lifetime to acquire it. I defy any man in the province to make more money than I do from mixed farming out of 150 acres, and at that my average is scarcely more than a thousand dollars to $1,200 a year net, and what is that? About five per cent. on my investment. You must understand that in this calculation I make no charge for my own services, nor do I allow [illegible] for my family. I and my family [illegible] well, that is true; but we pay [illegible]

It is all right for you gentlemen to talk of the prosperity of the farmer, but come out with us and see how we earn our money. Up at five in the morning; sometimes at three or four when we have to drive into town; and with chores and field work hard at it until sundown, and shortly afterwards to bed to rise and repeat the performance day after day. Would you be content to run your factory on those hours and with that profit?"

"My work is never finished," said the other. "You have little idea of the worry of a manufacturing enterprise."

"Maybe that's true," answered the farmer, "but if you were as dependent upon weather conditions, the effect of drouth, rain and frost on crops as we are, you would say that our lives are not without worry. But that has little to do with reciprocity, I am very sorry that it injures you gentlemen. May I ask what business you are engaged in?"

"I am a shoe manufacturer," replied Mr. Brown, "and my friend is in the woollen goods business."

"Is your protection much reduced?" sympathetically enquired the farmer.

"No," answered the other.

"How much?" persisted the farmer.

"Well," said Mr. Brown, hesitatingly, "you see we are not hit at all as yet, but it is the thin edge of the wedge we are afraid of. You must realize that the country cannot stop at reciprocity in farm products. The reciprocity pact must inevitably lead to a general lowering of the duties.' '

"And you mean to tell me," questioned the other ,sharply, "that, having accused the farmer of selfishness, although uninjured as a manufacturer, you are opposed to reciprocity because maybe, perhaps, possibly, something may happen in the distant future to lower your own protection as a result of this pact going into force?" The young man turned to both the manufacturers, speaking quickly, and showing by his voice for the first time the heat of the debate. There was a silence for a short time, and then the older of the two men spoke.

"A controversy about reciprocity involves too many details for a train discussion, but since we have started I will try to briefly state our position. The National Policy of protection is the basic of the prosperity of our country, both industrial and agricultural. You on the farm and we in the city are dependent upon one another. Protection has built up our towns, and our towns have made your markets profitable. It is much better for you to sell to us than to the far-away markets ;or, in other words, in the home market the farmer gets the price of his products without having to add the cost of a long haul abroad. If we kill protection, the whole industrial machine tumbles down, involving both farmer and manufacturer alike in the ruin; and, believe me, free trade for the farmer and protection for the manufacturer cannot live side by side in the same country. Do I make myself plain?"

"To a certain extent, yes," repied the other, "but I canot agree with either your premises or your conclusions. In the first place we will admit readily the value of a near market and acknowledge that a large part of the cost of a long haul comes out of the farmer; but you must not forget, and as a manufacturer I am sure you will readily acknowledge, that in many cases the home market is not the near market. In the province of Alberta the soil is well suited to the growing of oats, and 100 to 130 bushels per acre and even more are common. Peterborough may be called the home market, and Helena, the centre of the mining industries of Montana, a foreign market. But you would hardly argue that, with equal demand in both places, the home market in this case is the best market. Strange as it may seem, Quebec hay has been shipped as far west as Alberta, and according to your own statements, a farmer must pay at least a portion of the long haul. You would hardly argue that in this case the home market of Alberta is better than the foreign market of the Maine lumber woods across the border line. You would—"

"But," interrupted the younger manufacturer. "I am afraid you are taking extreme cases. Be fair. Confine yourself to typical examples."

"It may seem that the two examples I have given are extreme cases, but you must remember that Canada is a country of extreme instances. It lies for several thousands of miles besides the United States, and I can readily give you, from the Maritime Provinces, with water access to the great coast cities of the United States, along Quebec and Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, out to the Pacific Coast, many instances in which the natural course of trade lies from north to south, and where the profitable and home market can be reached by the Canadian producer only at great sacrifice. Can you blame us for preferring the near market to the home market? Now as to our being dependent upon each other—You have stated that the manufacturer has made the farmer's market, but you have neglected to point out that the farmer has made the best market for the Canadian manufacturer. It seems to me that inasmuch as your prosperity depends upon ours, you would favour rather than oppose anything for the benefit of your good customers—the farmers of this country."

"I am afraid you are talking more fairly by the manufacturers than usual," said the younger manufacturer. "From what I know of the farmers the majority of them are out and out free traders. Take for instance Drury, who opposed Tommy Russell in debate at Beaverton. Don't his free trade views more nearly represent the farmers than the moderate protection views you have expressed? Take Rod Mackenzie, Secretary of the Grain Growers' Association, and Dr. Clark, the member for Red Deer. How do you reconcile their position with your own? Surely they are champions of the farmers' cause, and we are entitled to take their statements as representing the views of their constituents."

"There are a number of free trade farmers just as there are free trade lawyers, doctors, university professors, and even manufacturers. I, for one, am not a free trader. I believe in a tariff for revenue and a tariff for same protection of those industries which need and deserve protection. I will admit that there are industries which, having resorted to combinations in restraint of trade for the purpose of artificially raising prices, have forfeited, in my opinion, all rights to any benefit from the tariff. But in the main we farmers are proud of our manufacturers."

"Except the implement manufacturers," rather sarcastically interrupted the younger manufacturer.

"No," answered the other, good naturedly, and overlooking the tone of sarcasm. "You are in the wrong furrow if you think the Canadian farmer and the Canadian implement manufacturer are natural enemies. We buy heavily from them, it is true and naturally pay some of the duty which protects them. In some cases, if I am not wrongly informed, you manufacturers are allowed to bring in machinery that you use for manufacturing purposes at low duties or entirely free of duty. We might put in the same claim for our implements But how little have you heard of free implements since the reciprocity pact was brought down at Ottawa? The Canadian implement manufacturer has kept abreast of the times, in some cases ahead of them. We have paid him good prices, but we have got good honest-made implements.'

"I thought you complained that farm implements made in Canada were sold cheaper abroad than here,' suggested Mr. Brown.

"Yes, we did, but the manufacturer countered us off with much the same argument I gave you a few minutes ago about the home market. He showed us that the home market was not in all cases the cheapest market to reach, and from this you may conclude that there is nothing in that mystic term, 'the home market,' that over-rides distance with either manufacturer or the farmer. And, of course, you must not overlook the fact that we get a very substantial reduction in farm implements under the proposed tariff arrangements.

"Gentlemen, I must apologize for speaking at such length. When I get warmed up to this subject it is hard to stop. As a penalty I am going to buy the cigars. Will you join me?"

"I was on the point of making the same suggestion," said Mr. Brown. "I am sure that we will accept your hospitality with pleasure, although for one I must confess I cannot accept your reasoning with the same enthusiasm."

The cigars were ordered.

By JACK LONDON

"Look at it," Sheldon said to Joan. We've been sleeping over a volcano. They ought to be whipped—"

"No whip me," Gogoomy cried out from below. "Father belong me big fella chief. Me whip, too much trouble along you, close up, my word."

"What name you fella Gogoomy?" Sheldon shouted. "I knock seven bells out of you. Here, you Kwaque, put 'm irons along that fella Gogoomy."

Kwaque, a strapping gang-boss, plucked Gogoomy from out of his following, and, helped by the other gang-bosses, twisted his arms behind him and snapped on the heavy handcuffs.

"Me finish along you, close up, you die altogether," Gogoomy, with wrath-distorted face, threatened the boss-boy.

"Please, no whipping," Joan said in a low voice. "If whipping is necessary, send them to Tulagi and let the government devil. Give them their choice between a fine or an official whipping."

Sheldon nodded and stood up, facing his blacks.

"Maunonmie," he called.

Maunonmie, tall and erect, stepped forward and waited.

"You fella boy bad fella too much," Sheldon charged. "You steal 'm plenty. You steal 'm one fella towel, one fella case-knife, two-ten fella cartridge. My word, plenty bad fella steal 'm you. Me cross along you too much. Suppose you like 'm, me take 'm one fella pound along you in big book. Suppose you no like 'm, me take 'm one fella pound, then me send you fella along Tulagi catch 'm one strong fella government whipping. Plenty New Georgia boys, plenty Vanbel boys stop along jail along Tulagi. Them fella no like Malaita boys little bit. My word, they give 'm you strong fella whipping. What you say?"

"You take 'm one fella pound along me," was the answer.

Boy after boy, he called the offenders out and gave them their choice, and boy by boy each one elected to pay the fine imposed. Some fines were as low as several shillings, while in the more serious cases, such as thefts of guns and ammunition, the fines were correspondingly heavy.

Gogoomy and his five tribesmen were fined three pounds each, and, at Gogoomy's guttural command, they refused to pay.

"S'pose you go along Tulagi," Sheldon warned him; "you catch 'm strong fella whipping and you stop along jail three fella year. Mr. Burnett, he look 'm along cartridge, look 'm along revolver, look 'm along black powder, look 'm along dynamite—my word, he cross too much, he give you three fella year along jail. S'pose you no like 'm pay three fella pound you stop along jail. Savvee?"

Gogoomy wavered.

"It's true — that's what Burnett would give them," Sheldon said in an aside to Joan.

"You take 'm three fella pound along me," Gogoomy muttured, at the same time scowling his hatred at Sheldon and strengthening half the scowl to Joan and Kwaque. "Me finish along you, you catch 'm big fella trouble, my word. Father belong me big fella chief along Fort Adams."

"That will do," Sheldon warned him. "You shut mouth belong you."

"Me no fright," the son of a chief retorted, by his insolence increasing his stature in the eyes of his fellows.

"Lock him up for to-night," Sheldon said to Kwaque. "Him he come up put 'm that fella and five fella belong him along grass-cutting. Savvee?"

"Me savvee," he said. "Cut 'm grass, ngari-ngari" stop 'm along grass. My word!"

"There will be trouble with Gogoomy yet," Sheldon said to Joan, as the boss-boys marshalled their gangs and led them away to their work. "Keep an eye on him. Be careful when you are riding alone on the plantation. The loss of those Winchesters and all that ammunition has hit him harder than your cutting did. He is dead-ripe for mischief."

CHAPTER XXII

GOGOOMY FINISHES ALONG KWAQUE ALTOGETHER

"I wonder what has become of Tudor. It's two months since he disappeared into the bush, and not a word of him after he left Binu."

Joan Lankland was sitting astride her horse by the bank of the Balesuna where the sweet corn had been planted, and Sheldon, who had come across from the house on foot, was leaning against her horse's shoulder.

"Yes, it is a long time for no news to have trickled down," he answered, watching her keenly from under his hat-brim and wondering as to the measure of her anxiety for the adventurous gold-hunter. "But Tudor will come out all right. He did a thing at the start that I wouldn't have given him or any other man credit for—persuaded Bin Charley to go along with him. I'll wager no other Binu nigger has ever gone so far into the bush unless to be kai-kai'd. As for Tudor—"

"Look! Look!" Joan cried in a low voice, pointing across the narrow stream to a slack eddy, where a huge crocodile drifted like a log awash. "My! I wish I had my rifle."

The crocodile, leaving scarcely a ripple behind, sank down and disappeared.

"A Binu man was in early this morning—for medicine," Sheldon remarked. "It may have been that very brute that was responsible. A dozen of the Binu women were out, and the foremost one stepped right on a big crocodile. It was by the edge of the water, and he tumbled her over and got her by the leg. All the other women got hold of her and pulled. And in the tug of war she lost her leg. Below the knee, he said. I gave him a stock of antiseptics. She'll pull through, I fancy."

"Ugh — the filthy beasts." Joan gulped shudderingly. "I hate them! I hate them!"

"And yet you go diving among sharks," Sheldon chided.

"They're only fish sharks. And as long as there are plenty of fish there is no danger. It is only when they're famished that they're liable to take a bite."

Sheldon shuddered inwardly at the swift vision that arose of the dainty flesh of her in a shark's many-toothed maw.

"I wish you wouldn't, just the same," he said slowly. "You acknowledge there is a risk."

"But that's half the fun of it," she cried.

A trite platitude about his not caring to lose her was on his lips, but he refrained from uttering it. Another conclusion he had arrived at was that she was not to be nagged. Continual, or even occasional, reminders of his feeling for her would constitute a tactical error of no mean dimensions.

"Some for the book of verse, some for the simple life, and some for the shark's belly," he laughed grimly; then added: "Just the same, I wish I could swim as well as you. Maybe it would beget confidence such as you have."

"Do you know, I think it would be nice to be married to a man such as you seem to be becoming," she remarked, with one of her abrupt changes that always astounded him. "I should think you could be trained into a very good husband—you know, not one of the domineering kind, but one who considered his wife was just as much an individual as himself and just as much a free agent. Really, you know, I think you are improving."

She laughed and rode away, leaving him greatly cast down. If he had thought there had been one bit of coyness in her words, one feminine flutter, one womanly attempt at deliberate lure and encouragement, he would have been elated. But he knew absolutely that it was the boy, and not the woman, who had so daringly spoken.

Joan rode on among the avenues of young cocoanut palms, saw a hornbill, followed it in its erratic flights to the high forest on the edge of the plantation, heard the cooing of wild pigeons and located them in the deeper woods, followed the fresh trail of a wild pig for a distance, circled back, and took the narrow path for the bungalow that ran through twenty acres of uncleared cane. The grass was waist high and higher, and as she rode along she remembered that Gogoomy was one of a gang of boys that had been detailed to the grass-cutting. She came to where they had been at work, but saw no signs of them. Her unshod horse made no sound on the soft, sandy footing, and a little farther on she heard voices proceeding from out of the grass. She reined in and listened. It was Gogoomy talking, and as she listened she gripped her bridle-rein tightly and a wave of anger passed over her.

"Dog he stop 'm along house, night-time he walk about," Gogoomy was saying, perforce in berke-de-mer English, because he was talking to others beside his own tribesmen. "You fella boy catch 'm one fella pig, put 'm kai-kai belong him along big fella fish-hook. S'pose dog he walk about catch 'm kai-kai, you fella boy catch 'm dog alloe same one shark. Dog he finish close up. Big fella master sleep along big fella house. White Mary sleep along pickaninny house. One fella Adams he stop along outside pickaninny house. You fella boy finish 'm dog, finish 'm Adams, finish 'm big fella master, finish 'm white Mary, finish 'm altogether. Plenty musket he stop; plenty powder, plenty tomahawk, plenty knife-fee, plenty porpoise teeth, plenty tobacco, plenty calico—my word, too much plenty everything we take 'm along whale-boat, washee like hell. Sun he come up we long way too much."

"Me catch 'm pig gun he go down," spake up one whose thin falsetto voice Joan recognized as belonging to Come, one of Gogoomy's tribesmen.

"Me catch 'm dog," said another.

"And me catch 'm white fella Mary," Gogoomy cried triumphantly. "Me catch 'm Kwaque he die along him damn quick."

This much Joan heard of the plan to murder, and then her rising wrath proved too much for her discretion. She spurred her horse into the grass, crying:

"What name you fella boy, eh? What name?"

They arose, scrambling and scattering, and to her surprise she saw there were a dozen of them. As she looked in their glowering faces and noted the heavy, two-foot, hacking cane-knives in their hands, she became suddenly aware of the rashness of her act. If only she had had her revolver or a rifle, all would have been well. But she had carelessly ventured out unarmed, and she followed the glance of Gogoomy to her waist and saw the pleased flash in his eyes as he perceived the absence of the dreadful man-killing revolver.

The first article in the Solomon Islands code for white men was never to show fear before a native, and Joan tried to carry off the situation in cavalier fashion.

"Too much talk along you fella boy," she said severely. "Too much talk, too little work. Savvee?"

Gogoomy made no reply, but, apparently shifting weight, he slid one foot forward. The other boys, spread fanwise about her, were also sliding forward, the cruel cane-knives in their hands advertising their intention.

"You cut 'm grass!" she commanded imperatively.

But Gogoomy slid his other foot forward. She measured the distance with her eye. It would be impossible to whirl her horse around and get away. She would be chopped down from behind.

No Desire for Food

The Stomach Seems Played Out and the Appetite Fickle.

The Digestive System is Overloaded With Poisons—Relief Comes With the Use of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Weak stomach, loss of appetite, indigestion and all the accompanying symptoms of energy, tend to make the springtime anything but joyous for many people.

The system is full of poisons, the blood is impure, the liver and kidneys have been overworked in an effort to remove the waste matter and have failed. This accounts for the biliousness, the constipation, the backaches and headaches.

How is this condition to be overcome? There is no quicker or more certain way than by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This treatment gets the liver and kidneys in action at once and ensures regular movement of the bowels.

The poisonous waste matter which has been clogging the digestive system is removed and the organs of digestion are enabled to properly perform their duties.

Appetite is sharpened, you eat your food with a relish, the stomach is strengthened, the vital organs get the nourishment they require, and vigour and energy are restored.

Knows of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to have impure blood or to suffer the annoyance of tired, spring feelings. One pill a dose, 25c. a Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Destroys Liquor Craving

Drunkenness is a progressive disease; the moderate drinker is not satisfied with two or three drinks a day, the craving for more and more becomes irresistible as the disease advances; the result is Chronic Alcoholism.

The treatment used successfully by thousands right in their own homes is Orrine. It is sold with the understanding that if it does not benefit after a trial, we will refund your money.

Orrine No. 1. is the secret remedy; Orrine No. 2. is for those willing to take the treatment. Either form costs $1. Write for free booklet on Alcoholism. The Orrine Company, Orrine Building, Washington, D.C. Sold by leading druggists, and in this city by Wm. Madill.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HAVE you heard—"you" meaning especially housewives this time—of the new science of motion study?

This science is a study of the motions made by the ordinary workman and an endeavour to systematize and reduce these to the fewest, most efficient and least fatiguing motions possible, and to teach the workman to do his work in this way.

Frank B. Gilbreth, who is one of the pioneers in this movement, has applied the new science to bricklaying. Now bricklaying is an industry as old as Moses and one would think its methods would be close to perfection.

And yet it is possible for a bricklayer to do his work in one-third the time it used to take him, if he will use the methods and motions prescribed by Mr Gilbreth after years of study.

An editor who had heard of Mr. Gilbreth's method resolved to apply some of the principles in his office. A study was made of the way in which the many thousands of letters which were often sent out in a circulation campaign were handled by the girls who folded and sealed them. The result of the study was a rearrangement of the materials and the sequence of motions so that each girl was actually able to accomplish four times as much as before.

People in many vocations are becoming tremendously interested in this new study and applying it to their own especial bit of the world's work.

Now, why not you — "you" still meaning especially housewives, and even more especially housewives who do their own housework.

If this method can do so much for systematized trades like bricklaying, what might it not do for a haphazard trade like housework?

If it can enable an office worker to do four times as much work in the same time, why can't it help you to do your work in one-half the time—to be conservative—that you require now?

Not only does motion study seek to reduce the time required by tasks, but also the fatigue the task causes. It attempts to eliminate unnecessary reaching and stooping, and to determine what are the most efficient and helpful tools and surroundings.

It seems to me, that there is no field in which the science of motion study could accomplish more than in housework.

I have often heard it said that housework is hard on the woman of brains, because it does not give her enough to occupy her mind.

Now here is that woman's chance.

Let her get from the public library some of the literature on motion study and apply its principles to her work and she will surely find therein an opportunity to put brains as well as brawn into her tasks.

ELABORATE PREPARATIONS FOR STONEY LAKE REGATTA

The regatta next Monday promises to outclass anything attempted at Stoney Lake in former years. Most elaborate preparations have been made for a monster water carnival.

The committee in charge consists of Mr. J. S. Knapman, chairman; Mr. J. Clark, Acton, Sec.-Treasurer, and Messrs. E. V. Moore, Rosa Cameron, A. Piper and L. H. Grahame are sparing no efforts to make this the crowning event of the season.

At 12.30 the sailing races will be called, and at 5.30, sharp, the following programme will commence:

Boys' single canoe, under 15.
Ladies' single canoe.
Men's tandem skiff.
Ladies' single skiff, with coxswain.
Men's single canoe cruiser canoe).
Boys' tandem skiff, under 15.
Ladies tandem skiff.
Men's single skiff.
Crab race.
Men's single canoe, open.
Men's swimming, 100 yards.
Mixed tandem canoe.
Ladies' swimming, 50 yards.
Men's tandem canoe.
Tilting.
Mixed tandem, skiff.
Boys' tandem canoe, under 15.
Upset race.
Tub race.
Motor boat race, open.
Motor boat, handicap.
Men's fours.

A splendid array of prizes await the winners of the various events. The presentation of prizes will take place at 7.30 p.m.

Dancing will commence at 9 p.m., admission being by badge only. These are placed at a nominal sum and will be within the reach of all.

It is to be hoped there will be a liberal response from the public in the purchase of these badges, as this is the only way the committee has of recouping themselves for the many expenditures incurred. A special orchestra of six pieces will provide music for the dancing.—Simon the Sailor.

The Boy Scouts Are Enjoying Their Camping Vacation--Doings At Camp

Special to The Examiner

The following is a report of a visit to the Boy Scouts' camp, Sunday, August 6th:

I visited their camp at Bass Rock Chemong, curious to see how this day was spent. When a little distance away from camp I heard a number of voices singing "All Hail the Power of Jesus' name," accompanied by a cornet, played by their efficient Scout Master, W. J. Miller. On coming closer I found them in the midst of morning service. I stepped into a bush close by to hear the same, which was splendidly conducted by Mr. W. McLaren. The sermon should prove very profitable to the boys; hymns were then sung and another solo by the Scout Master closed service about 12.15 p.m. Dinner was now prepared by the cooks and the method of serving the victuals showed excellent discipline. When one thinks of the fare they get and what they pay there is a little genius displayed in the financial part. The camp is pitched for two weeks and each boy pays $2 or $1 per week.

The fare for dinner consisted of fish, potatoes, corn, cucumber, bread butter, pie, with peanuts for dessert, and this was no special dinner either.

After dinner all lined up and each boy marched off in order to wash his own pots, etc.

In the afternoon all assembled again for Sunday School, "International Lesson," taken by Mr. McLaren; hymns, accompanied on the cornet by Scout Master.

The visitor left camp at 7 p.m., and came to the conclusion that the day had been very profitably spent. The spiritual, moral and physical effects must be of lasting good to the whole company. All this taking place under the canopy of heaven, with Nature and Nature's God, I left all in camp in best of health and spirits.

Those who wish to see the benefits of this camp for themselves, and the good accomplished by the Scout movement, should visit camp Saturday, Aug. 12th, this being visiting day.—"Visitor to Camp."

McCracken's Landing

The proprietor of the Victoria hotel reports big business. Some record catches of fish have been made during the past week and that the resort is well patronized by guests is evidenced by the large registration during the past fortnight.

RICHARD HALL & SON

NO. 3 TROOP BOY SCOUTS

It may interest the parents of the boys and others to know the doings of camp on Friday.

The boys were called out at 7 a. m., to air beddings, swim, and clean lamps, while four others got breakfast; from 9 till 9.30, drill; from 9.30 till 11.30 the boys drew a map of a five-mile radius of the camp, all starting on different directions, after which the maps were all put in one; from 12 till 1, dinner; 1 to 2.30, rest; then from 2.30 till 5, a despatch carrying contest was gone through, the defence keeping a clean record, no despatches getting through. The boys then had swimming lessons under the supervision of Mr. McLaren and the Scout Master. Tea was served at 6 p.m., the camp fire was lighted at 8, when a happy time was spent by the boys, after which signalling by lamps was gone through. The "lights out" was played at 10, when two sentinels were placed on guard, being relieved every two hours.

The Saturday schedule is as follows —Up at 7 a.m., breakfast at 8.30; from 9 to 10, recreation; during time from 10 to 12, drill; 12 to 1, dinner.

So far the boys have survived the cooking operations, but Thursday being visiting day, the boys indulged a little too freely in the trying delicacies, brought to them by their parents, with the result that one boy had a sore tooth, and had to go back to bed after breakfast. There are always lots of visitors at the camp, from the surrounding districts. The neighbours, in particular, have been very friendly to the boys. The boys hope to stay the two weeks. From 1 to 2.30, Saturday, they had First Aid and Swimming, and they are working hard for a display to be put on on Saturday, Aug. 12th, it being the next visiting day.

A Sunday service was conducted at the camp by Mr. McLaren of St. John's Church, who is officiating as Troop Chaplain. There were quite a few boys out to stay over Sunday belonging to the troop, who could not come to camp.

A WEALTH OF BEAUTIFUL HAIR

Nothing equals an aureole of beautiful hair as a frame for a pretty face. Without a background of nice hair a really pretty face frequently becomes plain and, with it, unattractive features assume life and beauty.

Every woman can increase her natural charm by using Newbro's Herpicide. Herpicide makes hair beautiful. The dandruff germ saps the vitality of the hair. Herpicide kills this germ and prevents the hair from falling out, giving it a snap and luster, a soft, silky fluffiness which can be acquired in no other way.

NOW COMPLETED

The electric lighting system which has been in the course of installation during the past month or six weeks at the Peterborough Hydraulic Lift Lock is now completed, and the formal opening of the lock in the matter of lockages after night will take place on Thursday evening of this week. It is the intention that the inauguration of traffic over the Lift Lock by electric light will be fittingly celebrated. The public is invited to be present on Thursday to witness the first illumination of the lock. The band of the 57th Regiment has been engaged for the occasion, and a programme of music is being arranged. The illumination of the lock promises to add very much to the attractiveness of the structure, and the ceremony of the formal opening on Thursday night will no doubt be witnessed by thousands of citizens.

ADDRESS OF MR. STRATTON TO THE ELECTORATE

Electors of the West Riding of Peterborough

GENTLEMEN,—

At a largely attended mass meeting of the electors, on Saturday, I was selected as candidate to contest the representation of the Riding in the House of Commons. I accepted the responsibility of the position and hereby respectfully solicit the favour of your votes and support.

I am well known to you all, for during a representative service of West Peterborough, practically extending over a period of twenty-five years, I have many times come into contact, directly and indirectly, with every elector of the Riding.

In the past I have been honoured with your confidence, and I have earnestly striven to deserve it. In the discharge of my parliamentary and, especially of my representative duties, I have tried to consistently recognize and live up to the fact that I was the representative of the whole people, and in duty bound to serve the interests of all collectively and individually, whether their support had assisted, or their opposition had resisted, my election.

I need not refer to my record to specify what I have been privileged to do in the promotion of the material, moral and social welfare of West Peterborough. My work in this regard, be it little or great, is known to you all. You all know whether or not I have been a faithful servant of the people, whether the Riding is better, and in what respects, from my having been your representative.

I need not be at much pains to define my position in this contest. Everybody knows where I stand—where I am to be found. Such as I have been in the endeavour to advance your interests, I still am, and shall continue to be, if you honour me with re-election.

Apart from the consideration of local—city and county—interests, the national question chiefly involved in this contest is "Reciprocity," or free mutual exchange of natural, mainly farm, products, with the United States. I believe that reciprocity of this kind will be of benefit to the farmers of the country, and through their prosperity to all other interests—manufacturing, financial and commercial, as well as to those of the mechanic and workingman.

The round of benefit is natural. Good crops and good markets mean money for the farmer, which spent with the merchants of all kinds, means increased orders for the manufacturer and increased employment to their workmen. Thus Reciprocity, by affording wider and better markets, promises to be a benefit to the whole country and an injury to no class or interest; and is worth trying, especially as the agreement, not being a treaty, can, if unsatisfactory, be cancelled on reasonable notice.

If I thought for a moment that it would hurt any important interest, especially the manufacturing interest, I would oppose it. I am neither an extreme free trader, nor an extreme protectionist. I believe in a reasonable amount of both. High tariff in the United States has lost to Canada ninety million dollars in barley alone. The British Preference as it affects our manufacturers goes as far as desirable in the direction of free trade and I am opposed to, and will oppose, any increase of it. I myself am a manufacturer or interested in manufactures, to a modest way, but, at the same time, to an extent, important to myself and my associates, and I feel that our industries and working men could not stand a keen manufacturing competition of either Britain or the United States.

In this regard, I am in accord with the assurance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking for the Government, when he gave this pledge, "WE HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURERS AND WILL NOT HURT THEM," and I applaud the stand of Mr. Fielding in negotiating the Reciprocity Agreement, in refusing to even discuss reciprocity in manufactured articles with the United States.

If you approve, gentlemen, of what I consider the reasonable stand I take in relation to national interests; if you believe, judging from my past record of service to the Riding, that I have the business capacity, the business and parliamentary experience to continue to give you good service, and justify the confidence I now ask you to again place in me, I presume to claim your support.

This is probably the last appeal I shall make to you; for I think I have done my share of service to this Riding and have thereby earned the opportunity to give the necessary attention to my private affairs. I should have persisted in my desire to be relieved had I not felt in duty bound to defer to the earnest solicitation of the friends who have stood by me in the past, and also of a great many of my former opponents, and consented to be a candidate.

Another reason that influenced my acceptance, was, that being of a business turn, I naturally desired to complete work I have initiated, and for which I am in some degree, if the opportunity is given me, responsible. I should like to see the completion of the large new docks for the City of Peterborough; of the retaining wall on our river front in Peterborough; also a new concrete dam at Nassau erected, and a Rifle Range provided for this important military centre.

Trusting that I may be favoured with your effective support, I have the honour to remain, gentlemen, as I have been for the past twenty-five years,

Your Obedient Servant,

J. R. Stratton

Peterborough, August 8th, 1911.

BELL TELEPHONE EXTENDS ITS LINE

The Board of Works met last night and transacted minor business. Ald. Metheral was in the chair, and the following were present: Ald. Buller, Ald. Graham, Ald. Anderson and the City Engineer.

The principal business to be dealt with was a request from the Bell Telephone Co., to put five poles on McDonald street, between Cross St. and the Boundary Line. The request was granted.

It was moved and seconded that a bill for gravel be paid.

Ald. Buller drew to the attention of the Board the fact that Princess St. was not yet opened.

It was decided that the Chairman, Engineer and Street Commissioners will look into the matter. Aylmer street will also be extended.

The paving of Smith Street bridge was suggested. An estimation of the cost of the work will be given.

A temporary sidewalk will be built on Knox street.

A number of other improvements will be made to the streets also.

Ald. Anderson enquired as to when the sidewalk work would commence in East City. He pointed out the bad condition of the walks and urged that some definite action be taken. It is expected that the work will be commenced on the construction of new walks in about three weeks.

AT THE CAMPAIGN CENTRE MR. STRATTON'S COMMITTEE ROOMS

Organization Rapidly Progressing—Committee Rooms for East City—Splendid Prospects of Success

Mr. Stratton's committee rooms were opened on Saturday and Monday evenings by a large attendance of his supporters. The work of the campaign is now well under way and preparations for registration are being made.

In addressing the meeting, Mr. Stratton said that he could see by the movements of his opponents that they were already disheartened since he had accepted the nomination and they were at the same old game of talking of their majority, but they will be be surprised at the majority we shall have at the close of this campaign. They had hoped against hope that Mr. Stratton would be defeated, for they were already preparing for him a seat in the Senate, but he assured them that he was not looking for a seat in the senate nor a senatorship. He had no ambition whatever in that direction. He (Mr. Stratton) was going to have a seat in the House of Commons in the next session, and that would satisfy his ambitions sufficiently. They must not, however, think that the election could be won by himself, and he was very much pleased to see the activity of his supporters. In no campaign that he had yet been engaged in were there as many volunteer workers and where the evidences of success were so great. The new Protestant-Tory Association were having a meeting this evening in their new quarters on Simcoe street, but the Liberals should not be entrapped into any such organization, which is only got up for political purposes and will, like all the other similar organizations, die out at the conclusion of the campaign when its peculiar work has failed to be accomplished, which, in this case, is the attempted defeat of himself. He (Mr. Stratton) was prepared for anything that might arise and was prepared to fight anything that came along. There was no question of doubt that the agreement would be beneficial to every business in Peterborough. It would help every man in the community and the working men were interested in everything that caused their prosperity and advancement. He was glad to be able to say to his supporters that he never met as many in one day of those who had voted against him in previous elections, who had volunteered their support in the present campaign. Over twenty-five electors that had voted against him in the previous campaign, volunteered their vote and support in the present election. He urged his friends not to do anything that would in any way affect the result of the election. There was no question of doubt that he (Mr. Stratton) would be elected and there was no doubt that the same tactics after the election would be adopted again, and he hoped that none of his supporters would do anything that would reflect upon them at the conclusion of the campaign. The taker of a bribe was as guilty as the giver. He (Mr. Stratton) would be in the committee rooms every evening this week, and he hoped to meet as many of his friends and supporters as could make it convenient to be present.

Committee rooms were being opened in Ashburnham, in No. 5 ward this (Monday) evening, and he expected to have the town completely organized tion during the week.

The meeting then adjourned.

LIFE OF DANIEL O'CONNELL STATESMAN AND ORATOR

Anniversary of Famous Irishman's Birth Fittingly Celebrated at the Lyceum

A very interesting and edifying lecture was given last evening in the St. Alphonsus Lyceum by Mr. Daniel O'Connell, entitled "Daniel O'Connell, the Great Irish Liberator."

The chair was occupied by the Rev. Fr. McColl, and the following priests were also present: Fathers McCauley, Fergus O'Brien, John O'Brien, and McCarthy.

Mr. O'Connell was assisted by the boys of the C. M. B. A. who sang choruses, Miss Agnes Bartley, who stirred the audience with her spirited Irish songs, and Miss Daisy Bartley, whose pleasant contralto voice was very effective. Mr. J. Cairns was also responsible for a very acceptable vocal item.

A brief synopsis of the lecture follows:

"One hundred and thirty-six years ago, in County Kerry, Ireland, on August 6th, was born a man who was destined to become famous in history; a man who devoted his life and knowledge for the benefit of his country and his people.

St. Patrick brought the Christian Catholic faith to Ireland in the 15th century. Ireland was, at that time, a great and glorious country.

It is said that Ireland has the descendants of too many kings to be a satisfied country. There were many kings in Ireland in the early days, and not only did the foremost King have difficulty in subjecting the minor kings, but the minor kings fought amongst themselves.

From the time of Henry II., down to the time of Henry VIII., we have those constant struggles going on, not only with the English invaders, but with the Irish themselves.

In the English people there is a sense of loyalty. They can comprehend what is meant by that great principle of constitutional government. The Irish people have a sense of loyalty, but in this case, it was a sense of loyalty to a person rather than to any abstract community. O'Connell knew the character of the Irish people. He could work wonders among an Irish audience.

From laughter he could bring tears to the eyes of his audience, by the stories of great heroes, whose blood had been spilt in the interest of their country, and their religion. It was in 1813 that the great Veto question came before Ireland. O'Connell opposed this and in this struggle he was assisted by his people.

In 1815 and 1816 there was a great famine in the country. In 1824 the real struggle for Catholic emancipation commenced. It was at this time that O'Connell said he could "drive a coach and six through any Act of Parliament," a statement which, in modern times, would be an embarrassing one. The same year saw the "Catholic rent," a rent raised in every parish in Ireland, for the assistance of the Irish cause. This was also the work of O'Connell.

In 1828, O'Connell carried the Emancipation Society to such a success that it became manifest that if these people were not humoured things would go wrong in this country.

The following year saw O'Connell take his seat in the Commons. 1843 was the great Repeal year, and in 1846 another famine overspread Ireland, with the same story of misery and death.

It was at this time that O'Connell's health broke down. No more would he provoke the Irish audiences to laughter; no more would his clear voice bring tears to their eyes. He went to Genoa to recuperate, but in vain, and in 1847 one of the noblest of the race passed away.

He willed his body to Ireland, and his heart to Rome. At the end of the lecture a vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. O'Connor, seconded by Fr. Fergus O'Brien, and the singing of the National Anthem closed the evening.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holl[illegible], Shubenacadie, N.S., writes: "Dr. [illegible]'s Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine [illegible] cured my children and myself of [illegible] colds. We are never without it [illegible]. There is nothing like it [illegible] ointment to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

BELATED VOYAGERS AND BAD CARBURETTER

What it is to be Stalled Out in the Lake With a Broken Down Gasoline Yacht---Patience Was Exhausted When the Engine Baulked---The Return in the "Wee Sma' Hours" of the Morn.

A few gay young Lotharios from Chemong Park took their respective lady friends out for a gasoline ride last night, and the going trip was fine. Melodious music and the happy chatter of the youngsters drifted over the placid lake, for the engine wasn't missing and things were right. But like a certain heavyweight mitt artist, "it couldn't come back." Now, it's all right to drift under certain conditions, but when one's parents are expecting one home "not later than nine o'clock mind you," the situation is fierce. The masculines cranked till the rubberoid in their necks began to sizzle and still that (I know a good adjective but I won't spring it) engine refused to fuss. Whosoever said that the patron saint of gasoline engines was Beelzebub, didn't make a bad guess at that, for if ever the inhabitants of the infernal regions worked overtime, it was last night about ten thirty. To make it worse one descent yell for help at such a preposterous hour, last the cottagers fear he is drowning. The situation was finally relieved by the appearance, and subsequent assistance of a kindly disposed camper, who towed the unlucky party home. The owner of the boat was so flustered that he wouldn't take his girl home, but the gentleman who did received two glasses of lemonade and three large pieces of cake. Nice, wasn't it?

A WORD OF GRATITUDE

"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Elms, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

Man Who Helped To Build The Lift Lock Is Killed

The local police authorities received a telegram this morning to the effect that a man named Wm. Blanchard was killed in Montreal yesterday in the bridge works. The telegram requested information regarding his family, who were supposed to be here. Blanchard came here originally from the bridge works at Montreal, and only remained here while the Lift Lock was being built, returning to Montreal, where his relatives lived. While here he stayed at the Albion Hotel, but was not known in the city. No information regarding the circumstance of his death is to hand.

RESCUED AT SEA

A Thrilling Wreck Occurs in Mid-Atlantic

TRIED TO FIRE VESSEL

New York, Aug. 8.—Ten men rescued from the mid-ocean shipwreck of the French schooner Charles Henry were brought safely into port yesterday by the Wilson Line steamer Francisco. They were taken off the schooner by the Francisco on July 30 while the steamer was on her way from Hull, England, in latitude 48.10, longitude 24.50.

The Charles Henry, a three-masted topsail schooner, was bound from St. Pierre, Miquelon, for Havre, with a cargo of fish when she ran into a storm on July 28, and sprang a leak. For four days and nights the seven members of the crew and three fishermen aboard as passengers, worked the pumps, but the water gained as their strength lessened, and they were about exhausted when the Francisco sighted them on the evening of the 10th. A heavy northwest gale was blowing, but learning the schooner's plight Captain Clarke lowered the starboard life-boat, in charge of Second Officer Law, and after two perilous trips all those aboard the waterlogged schooner were transferred.

Before the last man left the Charles Henry attempts were made to set her on fire so that if she floated she might not be a menace to navigation, but owing to the high seas these efforts were unsuccessful. Captain Pen and his men saved nothing but their clothing.

Five Thousand Paraded.

London, Aug. 8.—Under ideal weather conditions, the biggest feature of the great London Old Boys' celebration, the parade, took place yesterday. Toronto, Hamilton, Detroit, Chicago, Winnipeg, had banner turnouts. The Toronto men, headed by the Foresters' band, made a fine appearance. Detroit also made an especially good showing, that section being headed by a huge Stars and Stripes and Union Jack carried side by side.

The "flag incident" of a few days ago, due to the removal of the American emblem from the street decorations did not cause any unpleasantness. The Stars and Stripes were in evidence on all sides, and at many points on the parade, British cheers came in for the loudest applause, but the American flag was given a hearty reception.

Boy Scouts, Highland pipers and fraternal societies in uniform were some of the features of the parade. It is estimated that there are 20,000 visitors in the city, 5,000 of whom took part in the parade.

Fireman in Rescue.

Toronto, Aug. 8.—Fire broke out in the factory of the Ajax Bed Co., Wellington and Niagara street, at 12.30 this morning, completely destroyed stock and building, and two firemen were injured in the fight to put out the flames.

Owing to the disorganization by the alarm of the fire alarm system, the firemen found the flames far advanced in their destruction of the two-storey frame building.

Firemen Agnew Cluff and another entered the burning structure from the alley with a line of hose and Agnew, who was in front, had got but 15 feet inside when the roof above collapsed, falling through the floor above and pinning Agnew and Cluff, who was close at his heels, tightly to the ground under the still burning timbers. By heroic efforts he was rescued.

Big Total of Exemptions.

New York, Aug. 8.—Property in New York to the value of $1,506,208,879 is exempt from taxation and yields no revenue to the city treasury, according to a report made public yesterday. The exempt property is that owned by the city itself, the U.S. Government, churches, hospitals, charitable institutions and cemeteries.

Approximately one-third of the sum is represented, the report states, by the property of religious societies and institutions.

Justifiable Homicide.

Montreal, Aug. 8.—A verdict of "excusable homicide" was returned yesterday morning by the coroner's jury in the case of Mrs. Freda Adelman, the wife of a second-hand dealer of 141 West Craig street, who met death Saturday afternoon by a bullet from a revolver in the hands of her husband. The revolver was the property of Jos. Charles, a customer. Both Charles and Joseph Adelman, the dead woman's husband, were placed under arrest immediately after the shooting, but were released yesterday as the jury's verdict freed them from any blame.

DISTURBERS UNSUCCESSFUL

Unionists Make a Last Assault on the Veto Bill

A VOTE OF CENSURE

London, Aug. 8.—The last phase of the fight over the veto bill designed to restrict the powers of the House of Lords over legislation originating in the lower chamber, was entered upon in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, when A. J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, moved a vote of censure on the Government.

The bill was rejected by the House of Commons last night by a majority of 119. The motion was introduced by Arthur J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, and its defeat is considered to have failed to improve the Unionist cause.

The gravamen of the Opposition's charges against the Government was that Premier Asquith had taken advantage of the King's inexperience to bring about an abuse of the royal prerogative by securing the guarantees before the last general election. Mr. Asquith easily disposed of this charge by showing that the Ministers had pursued an entirely proper constitutional course. The result was that after the Premier's speech the debate on the Unionist side virtually collapsed.

Frederick E. Smith and others of the "diehards" made brave attempts to fan the flames against the Government, but were compelled to fall back on the well-worn argument that the members of the Government were being driven by their taskmaster, John Redmond, and that their whole object was to secure the easy passage of Irish home rule.

Walter Hume Long, ex-chief Secretary for Ireland, challenged Mr. Asquith to reveal his conversations with King George, but Winston Spencer Churchill, the Home Secretary, who wound up the debate, declined to consider for a moment such an unusual request.

The chamber was filled to its capacity. Peers and distinguished strangers were present in large numbers.

The diplomatic and ladies' galleries were filled, the occupants showing by their presence a continued interest in the proceedings which promise to be historic.

Mr. Balfour's motion, of which he gave notice on Aug. 2, was as follows:

"That the advice given His Majesty by His Majesty's Ministers, whereby they obtained from His Majesty a pledge that a sufficient number of peers would be created to pass the Parliament bill in the shape in which it left this House, is a gross violation of constitutional liberty by which encroachments the prerogatives the people will be precluded from again pronouncing upon the policy of home rule or upon any other matter."

The rival leaders were loudly cheered as they entered the room and Mr. Balfour received an ovation as he rose to "present his motion." Speaking for the Government, Premier Asquith declared that he was conscious of the gravity of the situation and the seriousness of the step which he asked the House to take. He thought that it would be admitted that never in all its history had there been a more serious case or one which more urgently deserved or indeed required the consideration of Parliament and the emphatic condemnation of the Ministers.

"The Ministers," said Mr. Balfour, "have grossly abused their rights of advising the crown, and by abusing those rights put themselves above the constitution. They have acted wholly without precedent."

Not as Mr. Balfour conceived, in order to meet any great question of state, but "in order to further a party arrangement between different sections who support them, and in order to prevent the people of the country from pronouncing their opinion on home rule."

The Unionist leader asserted that the Ministry had placed the sovereign, who had just come to the throne, in a cruel position. The King was a fount of honor, but the Government, by their advice had poisoned and corrupted the stream at its source. He dubbed the proposed new peers, "supers in this sordid drama."

Tied Up in the Fog.

Boston, Aug. 8.—About 3,000 men, women and children were landed from [illegible] yesterday, and anxious friends and relatives who thronged steamboat piers and yachting club boats, were delighted.

When the fog closed in about the Massachusetts shore late on Sunday pleasure boats, from excursion steamers to power boats, had to anchor.

Get Increase in Pay.

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, has granted the 760 employes of the printing bureau here an increase of wages averaging $2 per week, and two weeks' holidays with pay per year.

STRIKE IS SERIOUS.

London's Whole Transport Trade Threatened.

London, Aug. 8.—The arbitrator chosen last week to effect a settlement between the employers and the striking dock laborers has given an award in favor of the men, but the dockers have decided not to resume work until the grievances of the coal-porters and lightermen are satisfied. These differences are expected to be compromised within a few days.

Unless a settlement of the strike is speedily effected a serious situation will result. A strike was called Saturday of 30,000 carmen, coal porters and others, and thus the entire stop page of London's transport trade is threatened. This would indirectly affect thousands of other workers and lead to a general cutting off of food supplies.

Big Tie-Up.

New York, Aug. 8.—Fifty British tramp steamers which are now in port here may be tied up indefinitely by reason of a strike ordered by the Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain. While the sailors on the vessels of the transatlantic companies sign for the round trip, the sailors on most of the tramp vessels sign separately for the journey each way. The union has issued a new wage scale embodying an advance all around and the seamen are instructed to refuse to sign except under the new scale.

Members of the American union are not allowed by their officials to take the places of the strikers.

SHOULD RAISE SALARIES.

President tells Firemen's Association Favors Higher Pay.

Brampton, Aug. 8.—The Provincial Volunteer Firemen's Association opened their 19th annual convention in the Town Hall here yesterday afternoon. There was an unusually large number of delegates present from all over the province.

The convention was opened by prayer by Rev. T. Ward, pastor of the Brampton Baptist Church.

He was followed by Mayor Thatburn, who welcomed the guests on behalf of the corporation of Brampton. In his address he referred to the many outstanding features of the town, placing special emphasis upon the sanitary system and Hydro-Electric system, owned and operated by the town. Rev. Mr. Ward also welcomed the delegates on behalf of the local churches.

Chief Harnsworth of the local fire company followed, and in a few well-chosen remarks, welcomed the visiting firemen on behalf of the Excelsior Hose Company, and also the Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company of Brampton, under whose auspices the convention is being held.

President Skinner of Niagara Falls presented his report for the year 1910-11. The report recommended that an effort should be made by the association to have an act passed at the next session of the Legislature confirming their incorporation as an association. The president made a strong appeal to the association to raise the salaries of the paid officers, if at all possible, showing that the salaries now paid were quite insufficient, and that some officers but now on the pay-roll should be included in the list of those now receiving remuneration for their services. The address also drew attention to the annual fee paid by life members and suggested that the fee should be lessened by one-half.

Fatal Train Wreck.

Petersburg, Va., Aug. 8.—Two men were scalded to death and two were seriously injured when a passenger train on the Seaboard Air Line plunged through an open switch and struck a freight train on a siding near here yesterday. The dead men were the fireman and engineer of the freight train. None of the passengers were seriously injured, though all were badly shaken up.

Killed by Street Car.

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—Frank Helman, 13-year-old son of E. Helman, 186 Lebreton street, this city, received fatal injuries by being struck on the head by a passing street car. The lad was riding on a car and put his head out just as another car whizzed by. The skull was badly fractured and he died shortly afterwards.

SIR ALAN RETIRES

Minister of Justice Needs Rest and Treatment

GUTHRIE TO SUCCEED HIM

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—Whatever other Cabinet changes Sir Wilfrid Laurier may decide upon before the election in addition to the replacing of Hon. L. P. Brodeur by Dr. Beland, the appointment of a Nova Scotia successor or Sir Frederick Borden is not among the immediate probabilities. Both Sir Frederick and E. M. Macdonald, who is to be the new Minister of Militia, are to be candidates, the former in King's and the latter in Pictou, N.S.

Sir Alan Aylesworth is not to run in North York. He has offered his resignation, which has not yet been accepted, but is to be.

The official explanation is that Sir Alan, in addition to his aural trouble, is suffering from neuralgia and wants a rest and treatment. He will probably leave the Government at once, T. C. Robinette to go after the North York seat. Who will succeed the Minister of Justice is not yet clear.

Hugh Guthrie of South Wellington has been training hard for succession, but A. H. Clarke of Windsor is also looming up as a possibility. Mr. Clarke has been threatening to retire and has been restrained so far with difficulty.

It is understood that Lord Strathcona has reserved the submission of his formal resignation as High Commissioner until he comes to Canada, which may be in two or three weeks. As all events it is his intention to be here to participate in the welcome to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught as Governor-General.

After Montreal, should Sir Wilfrid Laurier be returned to power, his intention is, as has been known for some time, to appoint Sir Frederick Borden to succeed Lord Strathcona in London. The Duke of Connaught will arrive early in October and is expected to open the next Parliament.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier returned Saturday evening from Montreal, when he spent a busy day conferring with prominent Liberals in regard to the conduct of the Quebec campaign.

C. J. Doherty Nominated.

Montreal, Aug. 8.—C. J. Doherty was unanimously chosen as Conservative candidate for St. Ann's division at the party convention held in Freeman's Hall last night. Mr. Doherty in accepting the nomination made a fighting speech criticizing the Laurier administration and prophesying a Conservative victory.

T. Chase Casgrain was present at the meeting and confirmed the rumor that he would again enter Federal politics, although he did not say in what division he would try to accept the Conservative nomination.

Lanctot Turned Down.

Sorel, Que., Aug. 8.—Following the hostile reception given A. Lanctot at the Liberal convention on Saturday, local Liberals reassembled yesterday morning, and after further discussion a vote was taken which resulted in Mr. Caudin, his rival for the Liberal nomination, scoring 41 votes to Mr. Lanctot's 34.

Extended Itinerary.

Portland, Me., Aug. 8.—A dozen of the officials of the Grand Trunk Railway, including Albert W. Smithess of London, chairman of the board of directors, and President Charles M. Hays, yesterday began a tour of inspection of the entire system and of the Grand Trunk Pacific line, which will carry them over ten thousand miles of track and occupy six weeks.

This tour is to be an annual event hereafter, as Chairman Smithers is to come to this country each year for the purpose.

Drowned in Sight of Wife.

Quebec, Aug. 8.—A regrettable drowning accident occurred on the Jacques Cartier River Sunday at Val Cartier, by which a young man named Richard Aikens, 27 years old, lost his life. In company with his wife he went out for a row on the river, and later deciding to take a swim, left his wife in the boat.

He was not long in the water when he sank. The accident was noticed by his wife, who screamed for help, but when it arrived the unfortunate man was lost to view. The body has not been recovered.

Contemplate!

Do not weigh anything in a second, but take a second thought when a druggist or dealer asks you to accept a substitute for DR. FOWLER'S Extract of Wild Strawberry.

This preparation has been on the market for over 55 years, and so far as we know has never yet failed to either relieve or cure the worst case of DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY, COLIC, CRAMPS OR PAINS IN THE STOMACH, CHOLERA MORBUS, CHOLERA INFANTUM, SUMMER COMPLAINT, OR ANY LOOSENESS OF THE BOWELS.

Mrs. A. J. McLellan, London, Ont., writes:—"It is with much pleasure I write to say that I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry with great success. Last summer my little boy, 18 months old, was attacked two or three times with Diarrhoea, but each time, after one day's dosse, he was all right again. My husband was also taken bad one night. The next day three doses cured him. I always insist on Dr. Fowler's being given me."

If you want to be on the safe side, ask for Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and insist on getting what you ask for.

The original is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. See that our name is on the wrapper. Price 35 cents.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

GRAND OPENING OF PETERBORO'S FIRST BOWLING TOURNAMENT

"A huge success," are the words that emphasize to a small degree, the results of Peterborough's first bowling tournament.

A large number of visiting rinks invaded the city yesterday and the competition for the trophy presented by Mr. Stratton was the first number on the card.

The contests were clean and well contested. The Peterborough club, which is practically only in its infancy, has made rapid strides during the past year or so for the advancement of the sport. They have recently re-organized under the name of the Central Ontario Bowling Association, and 'ere another year has passed away, it is expected that the club will have assumed a portion of the prominence in the bowling world.

The following officers were elected: Hon. President—Hon. J. R. Stratton.

President—T. Brightman.

Vice-Presidents—Mr. Lyle, Bowmanville; Mr. Allen, Cobourg; Mr. D. H. Hall, Oshawa.

Secretary-Treasurer—Mr. J. H. Renwick.

Executive Committee— Mr. R. B. Rice, Toronto, J. M. McMurty, Bowmanville; S. Paxton, Whitby; H. B. Rosevear, Port Hope and T. Burke, Lindsay.

Mr. Stratton at the request of the Peterborough Bowling Club cordially welcomed the visitors to Peterborough, and in the absence of the Mayor, who was ill at Stoney Lake, he took the liberty upon himself of offering the freedom of the city, but while doing so he jocularly remarked that he would advise the householders to keep their windows and doors locked.

This was the first bowling tournament held by the Peterborough club, and he was pleased to see that so many bowlers had favoured the club with their presence. They would see that the grounds were somewhat of a primitive character, but everything had to have a beginning. It was the intention of the club to obtain grounds worthy of the city and worthy of the sport. They would find the Peterborough bowlers good fellows, and he hoped their visit to Peterborough would be a pleasant one. The sport was becoming more popular in Canada every year. He himself had endeavoured to do what he could from time to time to encourage manly sport and was always pleased when people enjoyed themselves. He again welcomed them to Peterborough and expressed the hope that they would have a jolly good time.

Frankfort Ball Team In The City To-morrow

The excursion from Frankfort to-morrow, will carry with it the ball team from that town and a local team of no mean quality will give them a pretty game on the Riverside Grounds at 3 o'clock. An admission fee of ten cents will be charged, and with this small tax and the prospects of a good game, a good crowd should be on hand. The fllowing will be the local line-up:

Pitchers—Cresswell and Johnston.
Catcher—McFadden.
1st base—Phelan.
2nd base—Hayes.
Short-stop—R. Sheehy.
Left field—Morrow.
Centre field—Corkery.

A RECORD CROWD

The Detroit Tigers drew well in Philadelphia during the last series thre a week ago. The aggregate attendance for three days was 75,000. a high-water mark for an ordinary series.

SPORTS OF ALL KINDS

Tom Flanagan says that Bob Day is better than Curran or Wells. A few of us have seen Day go and we hail from Missouri Thomas.

Walter Knox, the Orillia athelete, who went to Scotland six weeks ago, is making good with a vengeance. The papers over there are full of the work of the "Canadian stranger." He is competing under the name of A. R. Sterne, but they have penetrated his disguise.

From June 28 to July 22 Knox won 14 firsts, 8 seconds and 9 thirds, at the various Scottish meets.

If Longboat gets a trimming from Shrubb next Saturday night he had better quit the game, as only a win will restore him to the affections of a host of former friends.

The C.G.E. Football Club will hold their final workout to-morrow night at seven o'clock before the game with Baracoas on Saturday. All the members are requested to be out.

70,000 Men Now On Strike

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, AUG. 8.—Seventy thousand men are now involved in the strike of dock hands at the ocean ports. The carmen joined the other strikers to-day and full cargoes lie at mooring with no unloaders available.

PECULIAR PHASE IN McNAMARA TRIAL

Examiner Special:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., AUG. 8.—An interesting phase of the McNamara brothers' trial was developed last night, when the defence dug all around and took up for evidence a hole in the ground caused by a bomb explosion at the time of the dynamiting of the Times building.

Excitement At Business College

There was some excitement caused at the Business College this morning when one of the young men suddenly took an epileptic fit. Dr. Walmsley was summoned and after half an hour's hard work, succeeded in bringing the young man back to consciousness, and he was afterwards taken home. Some of the young ladies nearly fainted during the excitement, but they were finally quieted, and the victim has now recovered.

PARIS, AUG. 8.—What is thought to be another cholera case was discovered to-day.

HOT ON EXCURSION BOAT

Special to The Examiner

ROCHESTER, N. Y., AUG. 8.—Incensed when it was learned that all would not be able to return to Toronto last night on the round trip of the steamer Ottcott, seven hundred Canadians participated in a riot, which resulted in scores being injured and property damaged. The Captain ordered the hose turned on the mob, which reiterated by throwing rocks at the boat. Finally the steamer got away on her first trip, returning at 1 o'clock for the rest.

Steamer Afire

Special to The Examiner

TOLEDO, AUG. 8.—A large wooden freight steamer was destroyed by flames off Kelly's Island at 10 o'clock this morning. The crew was saved by aid from the Life Saving Station.

STOLEN HORSE WAS SOLD AT LINDSAY

LINDSAY, AUG. 7.—On Friday a stranger hired a horse from Mr. J. Hill of Bobcaygeon, for the purpose, as he said, of driving to Dunsford. He secured the animal, but drove on to Lindsay, and sold the horse and buggy and harness to Mr. Geo. McGahey, liveryman.

Saturday morning Mr. T. J. Spratt bought the outfit from Mr. McGahey, and this morning Mr. Hill came up from Bobcaygeon and took possession of the outfit.

Chief Chilton was given the facts this afternoon, and he immediately got busy. He has secured a description of the slick individual and will do his utmost to locate him.

FINED $10 FOR AUTO SPEEDING

Another victim of the auto speed law reluctantly proceeded to the Police Court this morning, where he was seperated from ten williams. He was supposed to have exceeded the speed limit on Saturday between the C. P. R. station and the Street Railway wharf. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and three witnesses were called.

F. Bartlett was the first. He gave evidence to the effect that he and two or three other men were working at a manhole down below the C.P.R. station and when the machine went past he was all bespattered with mud, and was standing at least twenty-five feet away. He judged the machine was going at least 20 miles an hour.

Wm. Buck was next called. He just had his head above the ground, but managed to ascertain that the machine was at least going 25 miles an hour. He had driven a locomotive, had rides in an auto lots of times, and he was quite sure that this machine was going fast enough to throw the mud 25 feet away.

Fred Shannon, an accountant in the office of the McDonald mill, thought he saw the machine go past there, but he could not say whether there were any women in it. All he heard was a whizz! and the machine was out of sight. He was unable to give even a good guess as to the speed it was travelling, but from the description he gave of the noise it made, and the suddenness with which it disappeared, it is easily imagined what a sixty-mile clip would be like, with the mud flying 25 feet and plastering the workmen along the street.

The defendant stated that he was not going more than 15 miles an hour, but as 10 miles inside the city limits is the limit, he was still going at an excessive rate, so the Magistrate fined him $10.

A lumberman named Wm. Batten was fined $3 for being drunk in the city.

PLEASED TO SEE HIM

Many of the residents of Peterborough are pleased to see in their midst Mr. J. F. O'Brien of Mount Pleasant, Michigan.

Mr. O'Brien was born and raised in Peterborough, but has not visited the city for twenty years.

He is spending a short holiday here.

EAST PETERBORO' POLITICAL NOTES

Mr. F. D. Kerr held a most enthusiastic organization meeting in the Village of Belmont last night. A large number of supporters of the cause were present from the surrounding districts. After the organization work had been effected, an address was delivered by the candidate on the vital question of the day.

The Liberals have secured for committee rooms the Havelock old Baptist church.

Organization meetings will be held at Norwood, Lakefield, and Warsaw this week.

Public meetings, in the interest of the Liberal candidate will be addressed by Mr. Kerr and others, at the following places this coming week —Haultain, Monday, August 14th, in the afternoon, and the Town Hall, Apsley, in the evening of the same day.

Tuesday, August 15th, Clydesdale, in the afternoon, and Lasswade in the evening.

The energetic campaign being conducted by the Liberals of East Peterborough is causing enthusiasm to run high in the ranks of their supporters.

BLACK RUST NOT AFFECTING THE WHEAT

BRANDON, MAN., AUG. 9.—In discussing the black rust rumours, Supt. McKillican, of the Experimental Farm, expressed the opinion that the great bulk of the wheat in this territory was too far advanced to be very seriously injured by any rust that may appear now. He said that he thought it would be safe to take a middle course between opinions of those who are attempting to create a black rust scare, and those who claim there is nothing whatever the matter with the crop. The experimental farm is situated low, and is particularly well suited for producing rust in such a year as this. Considerable wheat was cut there yesterday, and McKillican says there was no appearance of rust on it. There is rust on some of the later varieties, but nothing that is calculated to do much harm.

Body Found On Roadside

The lifeless body of a man named William Kelly was found on the roadside, near Brechin, on Monday, by a party of autoists on their way from Orillia. A physician was summoned and pronounced the cause of death as heart failure, the unfortunate man apparently having been stricken while driving home, and fell out of the buggy. He was 75 years of age, and was a higly respected resident of the district. His home is about two miles from Brechin. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS IN STORE FOR JUNIPER ISLAND

Extensive Changes Planned by the Cottagers' Association for Next Year---A New Wharf Will Replace the Old One

The Cottagers' Association of Stoney Lake are planning extensive improvements at Juniper Island for next season.

The old launch wharf, which has done duty for many years, and which certainly shows the signs of hard usage, is to be replaced with a splendid new structure two hundred feet long by ten wide. This will be greatly appreciated by the many users of power craft.

The users of canoes and skiffs will also be amply provided for. A new wharf of much greater dimensions than the old one, is to occupy about the same position as at present, and, in addition, space will be provided in front of the store by constructing a cement wall parallel with the steamer wharf.

The depression between this and the store is to be filled in to provide an unbroken promenade from the wharf up. Besides adding greatly to the attractiveness of this favourite spot, it will relieve the congestion near the pavilion, which is now so apparent, and at times, inconvenient, on Saturday nights and Regatta days.

The members of the Cottagers' Association, particularly those who hold the major portion of the stock, are to be commended for their enterprise and the expression of public spirit which prompts them to enter so heartily into the expenditure of funds for the benefit of all with little or no prospect of any return on the investment.

WOMAN SENTENCED TO ONE YEAR IN THE MERCER REFORMATORY

A house of ill-fame was raided by the police this morning about 12.40. One woman, who gave her name as Mrs. Emma Crig, and also a frequenter were caught and brought to the Police Station. The woman was sentenced to one year in the Mercer Reformatory, and her three children, the eldest of which is 15 years, become wards of the Children's Aid Society.

The house where she was located last night on Hunter street.

Detective Newhall gave evidence as follows:

"I have been watching Mrs. Crig, alias Mrs. Crayton, off and on for the last twelve months. She came here from Port Hope and lived at 625 Cedar street. She came under the police observation the first week she was there. She had three women besides herself and a man named Graham in the house. We watched them there for two months and made arrangements to raid them one night, and suddenly she moved to 29 Ware street, at 12 o'clock at night, where she continued to run a house of ill-fame with four young girls and herself. We were about to raid them there and again she mysteriously moved the very night we were to raid them. She moved to a house on Hunter street, near the corner of Sheridan and Hunter, in the basement, and later moved to the present address, where she has continued to run this kind of a house quietly, but all the time into the late hours of the night. A woman went out on the nine o'clock train last night, and later a Mrs. Prichard of Orillia and Mrs. Crayton, alias Mrs. Crig, and two men walked down Queen street, and when a policeman hove in sight, both men ran. One of them returned to her house a little later, and stood outside until she called him up."

At this stage, Constable Meharry, Detective Newhall and Sergt. Adams went to the house and made the raid. Other convicting evidence was given, which led to the above sentence.

Mrs. Crig states that her home was in Bancroft, and that her husband, Chas. Crayton, had been dead six years. She begged to be let off and to keep the children, but both requests were refused.

The frequenter was allowed to go.

NEW RIFLE RANGE FOR PETERBOROUGH SOLDIERS

It will be good news to the members of the local garrison and to rifle men, generally, to learn that arrangements are now about completed for the establishment of a modern rifle range near the City. This matter has been under consideration and negotiation for some time. Through the efforts of the officers, assisted by the very active cooperation of the Member for Peterborough, Hon. J. R. Stratton, the Government has been prepared to proceed with the furnishing of a rifle range and the money has been voted, but the difficulty has been in the securing of a suitable site. A range site has now been selected in Otonabee, within only a short distance of the city. This site has been approved of by the officers and the Militia Department. The only thing that now remains to be done is to obtain the approval of the Township of Otonabee to a slight diversion of one of the concession lines. The proposed new rifle range will cover an area of about 700 acres. The Regiment and Mr. Stratton are to be congratulated upon the success of their long and persistent work.

STONEY LAKE REGATTA TO BE THE BEST EVER

Judging from the extent of the programme and the exceptionally fine prizes offered, the annual regatta of the Stoney Lake Cottagers' Association, to be held on Monday, should draw better than ever before. Among the prizes offered is a cup for the open sailing race, donated by the Hon. J. R. Stratton, a second for the 14-ft. dinghy race, presented by Hon. Geo. A. Cox, and a third, for the men's single canoe, given by Mr. Henry W. Stock.

The judges will be the committee, ex-officio, Messrs. G. Henderson, H. Sutherland, Jas. Acton, Wm. Irwin, Hon. J. R. Stratton, and Senator Geo. A. Cox. The sailing races will begin at 12.30, and all the events are open to amateurs. The Opera House Orchestra has been secured for the evening. The programme of events follows:

COMMITTEE MEETING

A meeting of the committee appointed at the June session to look into the matter of establishing a county road system in the County of Peterborough, was called by the warden and held Saturday afternoon. There were present Messrs. Russell, Howden, Garbutt, Ceben and Shaw.

Upon motion Mr. Garbutt took the chair. After considerable discussion, the following resolution was adopted:

"That the following gentlemen act as a committee in conjunction with the county solicitor in ascertaining to what extent if possible, the Provincial government will increase the grant to such roads, and to procure information from other counties that have adopted the system, with regard to carrying into effect the system., Messrs. Garbutt and Howden.

Upon motion the committee rose, to meet at the call of the chairman.

93 PERSONS WERE DROWNED

Examiner Special:

GIBRALTAR, AUG. 9.—Ninety-three persons, all French, were drowned early this morning, when the French steamer, Emir, bound for Morrocco, collided with the British steamer Silverton in a dense fog, five miles off the coast. The Emir sank almost immediately. Twenty seven were saved. The British vessel was badly stove in but reached port safely.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., AUG. 9.—Samuel Haddon of Toronto was elected Secretary of the Laws Committee of the International Typographical Union yesterday.

Twenty-One Horses Burned To Death

Hamilton, Aug. 8.—A fire, which for a while threatened to assume alarming proportions, destroyed Dan Sullivan's livery stables on Charles street, early yesterday morning, and as a result the charred remains of twenty-one horses lay buried beneath tons of debris. The blaze was first noticed by the clerk of the American Hotel and he quickly sent in an alarm. The brigade responded immediately, but the flames had a tremendous start, and the place was a blazing furnace before the water was turned on. Volumes of dense black smoke issued from the burning building, while sparks flew for blocks around. With the smoke, sparks and reflection the fire had a most formidable appearance, and persons who had horses stables as far away as Market street took them to places of greater security, while those in the immediate neighbourhood removed everything portable.

Mr. Sullivan estimated the damage at $7,000, while the insurance only amounts to $3,750, there being $2,000 on the building and $75 each on ten horse.s Eighteen of the horses belonged to Sullivan, and three were boarders. Mr. Sullivan bought several horses this spring, and he said this morning that they could not be replaced under $200 each.

EXCURSION WAS A HUGE SUCCESS

One of the most successful and enjoyable excursions of the season was the moonlight, held under the auspices of the L.O.L. No. 1175, last night. The popular and spacious Str. Otonabee, of the P. and L. S. N. Co., was chartered for the occasion and conveyed the merry crowd down the fairy-like, silver-mirrored moonlit river to a point about eight miles down. Tucker's Orchestra supplied music for dancing, a sport that was indulged in by the greater number of the excursionists. There were about 250 on board and all enjoyed themselves to the full. Refreshments were served, and a social time in general was indulged in. The night was an ideal one for such an outing, the beautiful moon smiling down on the scene and adding much to the brightness of the occasion.

The campers along the shore were covered at times by the dazzling searchlight of the good ship, and could be plainly discerned scampering off into the "wilderness," much to the amusement of the sightseers on board.

The courteous treatment of the excursionists by the committee in charge is also an item worth mentioning, and they deserve credit for the success of their efforts. The boat arrived back in time to catch the street cars.

Come with the ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS to Jubilee Point, on Saturday afternoon, August 12th, per steamer Empress. Lowest rate of the season. Adults 40c, children 20c. Boat leaves Wolfe St. Wharf at 1.30, Ashburnham wharf 1.40 and Street Railway wharf at 2 o'clock. 5d31-2-5-9-11

Injured At Port Hope

Mr. Walter Blood, an employee of the Central Foundry, Port Hope, was badly injured at the Works yesterday, when a 500 lb. flask fell on his legs, badly crushing them. He will be confined to his home for some time.

REGATTA

The members of the Chemong Park Yacht Club have decided to hold their annual regatta on Thursday, August 24th. As this is a local half-holiday, the event should draw well. No pains are being spared to make it a gigantic success, and the cottagers will hold their first meeting next Saturday night, at the Park Hotel.

POPULAR KEENE RESIDENT HONOURED BY FRIENDS

Mr. McCamus is Presented With a Handsome Gold Watch and Fob

A number of the friends of Mr. R. J. McCamus gathered at his home a few nights ago, where an address and presentation were made. Mr. McCamus has, until recently, held the position of choirmaster at the Presbyterian church. The address was as follows:

Dear Mr. McCamus,— Your many friends in Keene wish, at this particular time to express our great appreciation of your services to the village.

The citizens of Keene owe you much for the deep interest you have taken in the village. Through your assistance the Village Improvement Society was greatly assisted in its praiseworthy efforts, this assistance being given at considerable sacrifice and hard work on your part, yet always cheerfully.

To the church you have been a tried and trusted friend, both as teacher in the Sabbath school and leader of the choir and your zeal, fidelity and deep interest will always be remembered.

As a slight token of our expression of good will for your many acts of kindness and self-sacrifice we ask you to accept this gold watch and fob, and trust that it may remind you of your many friends in Keene, who hold you in the highest regard as a friend and citizen.

Signed on behalf of his friends,

Mr. McCamus replied in a very suitable manner.

PRINTERS' ANNUAL OUTING TO BE HELD ON HOLIDAY

The local Printers have in past years put on excursions rated as the best leaving the city, and it is stated by those in charge that next Monday's outing to Idyl Wyld will be better than ever. The "Otonabee" has been secured for the occasion and the charges are quite reasonable, adults being fifty cents and children thirty. Every patron has a chance to win the handsome set of dishes given by the Hon. J. R. Stratton, the drawing for which will be done on the trip home. A ball game between the Printers and Mark street church will be played in the afternoon and that blue ribbon event, the pie-eating contest, will no doubt attract all the famous eaters in the city. The boat will leave the Wolfe street wharf sharp at 8 a.m.

Entered Suit For $500

Mr. G. N. Gordon is acting for Mr. Doig.

It is said that Mrs. Doig rented the horse from Wolstenholme's, the latter knowing that the horse had run away before, and yet he did not warn Mrs. Doig. The horse ran away with her, and she sustained serious injury and brought the suit as a result.

Use also Zam-Buk Soap. Best for baby's bath and for tender skin. 25c. tablet.

GRAPPLED WITH BURGLAR

TORONTO, ONT., AUG. 9.—Charles Thom, aged twenty-five, night drug clerk for F. P. Sanderson, was seriously wounded in a tussle with an unknown burglar early this morning, in which seven shots were exchanged. Thom was shot through the hand. He put up a plucky fight, but the burglar escaped, although he didn't get anything.

30,000 MORE MEN JOIN THE STRIKERS

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., AUG. 9.— Thirty thousand carters to-day joined dock strikers, and London is practically without vans. Conflicts with police are frequent and disorder is increasing. Nevertheless, it is thought that an agreement will be reached by the end of the week.

70,000 MEN ARE NOW ON STRIKE

LONDON, AUG. 9.—The carmen joined the other strikers on the London docks to-day and union officials claim that 70,000 men are now affected. Work on the south side of the Thames River is at a standstill. Ships have arrived in large numbers during the last few days, with full cargoes, largely of consignments of food for London houses, but there is no one to unload the vessels.

The cargoes of meat in refrigerating chambers are still unspoiled, but the supplies of coal to operate the freezing plants are rapidly disappearing and the strikers will not permit the replenishing of the fuel supply.

The strikers are peaceful, but ugly threats regarding the fate of non-unionists, who attempt to work are made. Both sides are hopeful that the Board of Trade will compose the differences between employers and employes.

STEAMER BLEW UP GREAT LOSS OF LIFE

Special to The Examiner

ROTTERDAM, AUG. 9.—Two sailors were killed, also the captain and several passengers were seriously injured and three others missing, supposedly blown overboard as the result of an explosion of the boiler on Rhine steamer, Guttenberg to-day. Portions of the boiler were hurled through the walls of the buildings ashore.

Painful Accident To Local Lady

A somewhat painful accident occurred on George street this morning. Miss Mary E. Clementi, of 359 Stewart street, on approaching the corner of George and Simcoe streets, outside Messrs. Barrie's hat and fur establishment, attempted to cross the road, but apparently short stepped, with the result that she fell off the sidewalk into the road. On rising it was found she was unable to continue her journey. She was therefore straightway carried to Kent's drug store and it was feared she sustained a broken leg.

Messrs. Conistock's ambulance arrived shortly afterwards and Miss Clementi was taken home.

Later.—It is now definitely ascertained that the injury sustained is a broken ankle. Under the treatment of Doctors Greer and Eastwood, she is progressing favourably.

BOAT STRUCK ISLAND

The good ship Otonabee had the extreme misfortune to butt into an island in the lake this morning about four o'clock. The boat, of course was, according to an unofficial report, released soon after without incurring the slightest damage. There were no passengers on the boat at the time, and even had there been, there was not the slightest danger. The more regrettable part of the mishap, was the fact that two excursion parties were disappointed in not getting this popular boat. The Navigation Company, however, arranged so have some of the other boats take her place. The fact that two parties were disappointed is only an evidence of the popularity of this boat and not the slightest blame can be attached to the boat's crew, as "accidents will happen."

Excursionists Here

The 10.30 train brought a large influx of excursionists to the C. P. R. station this morning from Frankfort and Trenton.

Some of the visitors explored various parts of the city, while others took a trip to the lakes. Those in the city were accompanied by a band of considerable merit.

A baseball game was arranged for this afternoon at Riverside Park between Frankfort and the Maple Leafs of Peterborough.

A FRUIT GROWER.

A big fruit grower in the Okanagan district, British Columbia, returning from the Colonial Exhibition, London, Eng., said that Canadian fruit beat all the colonial exhibits. He is interested in fruit and says that reciprocity will mean a larger market and better prices for Canadian fruit, especially fancy stock and apples in the New England States, with a good market farther west for the staple winter varieties. The man that grows the fruit should know.

WHO PAYS?

The story is told in Ottawa that a representative of one of the Hearst papers of New York, coming to Canada to see what was happening to reciprocity, stopped in at the headquarters of the anti-reciprocity league in Toronto to investigate that side of it, and in the course of the conversation asked Mr. Lash who were subscribing the money the league is spending, and how much they subscribed. If he had got these questions answered he might have found the why by dint of further inquiries. But it seems he was told that his was an impertinent question, not to be answered.

Of course, in a way, it was an impertinent question. The reporter's excuse was that over in the States they have passed a law requiring publicity about subscriptions to political funds.

And yet, come to think of it, there is some justification for the question, if it is asked on behalf of the Canadian farmer. The farmer's turn, which was promised him by Sir John Macdonald in 1884, which Sir Charles Tupper tried to get for him in 1888, and which Sir John Thompson hoped to give him in 1891, has now come, and Mr. Lash and his league want to stop him from getting it. The farmer is entitled to some explanation, if the Hearst newspaper isn't.

The boast has been, from the first, that a lot of money has been subscribed to defeat reciprocity. The pretty trifle of $150,000 is said to have been raised and put in the hands of two men in Montreal. Another large sum was raised in Toronto. When Mr. Bourassa declared for reciprocity he was scolded by La Patrie and the Tory Ghosts because he refused the alliance of Mr. Sifton, who had been party to the raising of so much money.

Now, if this money is to be used in the determination not to let the farmer have his turn, isn't it fair that the farmer should know where it comes from. All the signs point to its having come from those who have had their turn, who pleaded with the farmer to let them have it, and who have grown rich enough to toss a bagatelle of a few thousands into an election fund without missing it.

Somebody, and a good many of him, is anxious to stand between the farmer and his opportunity. The farmer ought to know who he is, and what are their relations to each other. Mr. Lash could probably give some valuable information. So, possibly, could Sir Hugh Graham of the Montreal Star. Who put up the money, gentlemen? The farmer, whose interest is directly at stake, would like to know.—Montreal Herald.

A LITTLE COMPARISON AND BIG CONTRAST.

While, with one breath the Mail and Empire is condemning the Liberal Government for its extravagance in respect of public works and navigation improvements, with the next it accuses the Government of giving "shabby deals" to, say, Port Hope, by its stingy expenditure on the harbour of that good, Conservative town.

Comparison will show that the Government has been much more liberal in improving the harbour of Port Hope than the Conservatives, when they were in power, even though Port Hope was a good, Conservative supporter. In the last ten years of the Conservatives, they expended in harbour improvements in Port Hope, $36,410.33. In the last ten years the Liberal Government has spent more than double for the same purpose, the figures being $77,758.11. So that Port Hope is, in this one respect, some $40,000 better off under a "hostile" government than it was under a Conservative Government, which it helped keep in power by sending a supporter.

We thus see the difference between a "business" government and a political government. At least we see that the Liberal Government has used the large revenue, furnished by the greater prosperity that has resulted from its administration in the people's interests, to provide the means of facilitating trade and commerce.

We see this illustrated more fully in West Peterborough, particularly in respect of the Trent Canal.

During the eighteen years the Conservatives were in power there was spent in this great public work a total, on construction account, of $1,230,000, in round figures.

By contrast, it may be pointed out that there has been expended on Trent Canal construction account during the fourteen years the Liberal Government has been in power a total, in round figures of nearly eight millions, or $7,900,000.

To this is to be added the sum of one and three-quarter millions—$1,750,000—voted for the current fiscal year for expenditure on the Trent Canal on capital account, making a total in fifteen years of nearly ten millions—$9,400,000.

And, when we come to the record of smaller public works and conveniences procured through the activity of representatives, we shall find that the two Liberal representatives of West Peterborough have in two terms, or, strictly speaking, one term and a half, done ten times more for West Peterborough than the three Conservative members, each sitting two terms — G. Ruttard, Jas. Stevenson and James Keadry — did in the eighteen years their representative service covered.

And it is not extravagant to say that Mr. Stratton, in his two and a half years of representation of West Peterborough has procured many times more public conveniences, of all kinds, than all of his three Conservative predecessors in their eighteen years of representation combined.

These contrasts are not made by way of boast, but as simple statements of fact, which tend to show that what a riding wants is a live representative, one who will look after what the riding is entitled to. The present Government, like all governments, have so many demands—from the 3 million square miles of Canada—that an alert and live representation is wanted to press the claims of West Peterborough upon their attention.

THE CAMPAIGN IN EAST PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Kerr Has Entered Fight With Energy and Determination

Mr. F. D. Kerr, the Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, is meeting with splendid ncouragement in his personal canvass, and in his organisation work throughout all parts of the riding. Since receiving the nomination Mr. Kerr has not been idle. He has entered into the fight with energy and determination and there is reason to believ that East Peterborough will be found in the Liberal column when the new Parliament assembles.

Reciprocity sentiment is particularly strong throughout East Peterborough. There is, pehaps, no riding in Ontario, which stands to benefit more by the free entry of natural products into the United States markets. East Peterborough is very largely an agricultural riding and the manner in which Mr. Sexsmith, the present Conservative member sacrificed their interests and joined forces with the "interests" and monopolists who have lined up against the reciprocity agreement has caus d many of his former supporters to break away.

The farmers of East Peterborough are not the only people in that particular riding who stand to benefit by the passing of the proposed reciprocity agreement. The mining interests of Peterborough County will undoubtedly receive a great boom by the free entry of ore into the United States. The chief reasons that many of the splendid mineral prospects in the northern portion of Peterborough County remain undeveloped to-day, is owing to the fact that there has been a high tariff wall that practically prohibited the entry into the United States of Canadian low grade ore, such as is found in Peterborough county. With the tariff wall against them the owners of these iron, lead, talc, and other mines have not been able to develop their properties. Mr Sexsmith has apparently been either as blind or indifferent to the interests of the mining industry in the northern portions of his constituency, as he has been those of the residents of the settled farming portions of his riding.

Not only has Mr. Sexsmith, through his alliance with the monopolists gone back on his constituents, who are interated in agriculture and mining, but he has also gone contrary to the best interests of the lumbermen in the northern portions of his riding. By the taking off of the duty on Canadian lumber entering the United States, the men who have small timber limits in Burleigh, Chandos, and other Townships will be very substantially benefitted. The lumbermen in Peterborough County will find a new and attractive market for their product. It will mean more money in the lumberman's pocket, and incidentally, no doubt, higher wages to their employees.

If Mr. Sexsmith did not realise these facts he should have done so. The farmers, the mining interests and the lumbermen of East Peterborough will undoubtedly hold him to account for his uncompromising hostility to the proposed agreement. Under these circumstances, and apart from Mr. Kerr's popularity and recognized ability, it is little wonder that the Liberal candidate is meeting with the encouragament that he has so far experienced. The flag-waving campaign is not going to have the effect that Mr. Borden, no doubt anticipated. The farmers of East Peterborough are thinking, and, together with the lumbermen and owners of mining prospects they are going to vote for Mr. Kerr, the Liberal candidate, who stands for larger markets.

WHAT THE RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT CALLS FOR

Those who denounce the reciprocity agreement, in many cases know nothing about it; and a few who know something about it, tell untruths to deceive the electors.

It is asserted and told ot electors in the city, to deceive them, that the agreement means free trade in everything—manufactured and natural — that is, soil products. This is a villainous untruth. The agreement only calls for free exchange in ONLY farm, dairy and orchard products; that is, there is no duty on such products entering the United States. There is NO FREE ADMISSION OF UNITED STATES' MANUFACTURED ARTICLES INTO Canada, under the agreement. There is no free admission of Canadian manufactured articles into the United States.

On a few manufactured articles, there is a slight reduction of duty—from 2 1-2 to 5 per cent. on a few manufactured articles, affecting only a few industries. These are chiefly upon manufactured articles used by farmers, agricultural implements, etc.

	Old Duty	New Duty
Farm wagons and parts	25 p.c.	23½
Ploughs	20 p.c.	15
Tooth and disc. harrows	20	15
Harvesters and reapers	17½	15
Drills and planters	20	15
Mowers	17½	15
Horse rakes	20	15
Threshing machines	20	15
Potato diggers	25	20
Feed cutters	25	20
Grain Crushers	25	20
Fanning mills	25	20
Field rollers	25	20
Cutlery	30	27½
Bells and gongs	30	27½
Bath room basins, etc.	30	27½
Brass band instruments	25	22½
Clocks, watches, etc.	30	27½
Printers' type cases	30	27½
Surgical dressings	25	22½
Printing ink	25	22½
Asbestos manufactures	20	17½
Canoes and boats	25	22½
Digesters for wood pulp	30	27½
Musical instrument cases in leather	35	32½
Cement, Portland
Condensed milk

It will be seen that these reductions in duty are not great and do not affect the bulk of our manufacturing industries in Canada.

Fair play and fair presentation of facts are called for, even in an election.

The electors have no compliment paid to them, when they are fed on false statements. Any assertion that the reciprocity agreement means free trade in manufactured articles is a false assertion intended to mislead.

The only articles that are to be exchanged between the two countries, without duty, are farm, dairy, orchard and similar products.

On a few manufactured articles used by farmers, there is a slight reduction of duty, and the reduction leaves a duty of from 15 per cent to 33 1-3, a protection that seems to be pretty fair.

Electors are urged not to be deceived by the false statements that there is to be anything like free trade in manufactures, under the reciprocity agreement. Manufacturing industries still have the benefit of a good protective tariff, and will conitnue to have it. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, on behalf of the government, declared in Parliament: "WE HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURER. AND WILL NOT HURT HIM," and Mr. Fielding, when the United States wanted to discuss free exchange of manufactured products, said "No; I do not think that Canadian manufacturers can successfully compete with the more highly specialised manufacturers of the United States; and I won't consider reciprocity in manufactured articles for a moment." But he provided for free trade in articles produced by the farmer, for the Canadian farmer, with our soil and climate, can compete with any counry ton earth. What he wants is good markets, as close as possible, and that is what the reciprocity agreement gives him.

Don't be deceived. Get the facts and be guided by them.

PIGEON CREEK BRIDGE STILL CLOSED TO TRAFFIC

Will Somebody Take Action to Place it in Repair---A Great Public Inconvenience

The Pigeon Creek Bridge, the shortest route for many farmers in Victoria County to reach the Peterborough market, has been closed from disrepair for nearly a month.

What are the County Council of Peterborough, the City Council of Peterboro ughan dthe Board of Trade thinking of, that they do not take action?

Why do these bodies not bestir themselves? We employ a commissioner at a good salary to bring new industries to Peterborough, and we let a bridge lie useless, and thereby deprive our merchants of a considerable trade.

We needn't wait for Victoria County to take the lead in repairing the bridge, though they will have to bear their share—they would rather, in one sense, let it continue, closed for a time—the Victoria county farmers, who, by help of the Pigeon Creek bridge, make Peterborough their market town, might be induced to make Lindsay their market place.

It is inconceivable that this bridge is allowed to remain unfit for safe use so long. Will somebody responsible take prompt action?

CANNED FRUITS

From Farm and Dairy.

Canned fruits keep, because the bacteria in them have been killed and other bacteria cannot enter if the air is excluded. A few kinds of bacteria can grow without oxygen. If one of these germs is sealed in the can without being destroyed by boiling, the fruit will spoil, even if the jar is air-tight. Most kinds of bacteria are destroyed if kept at boiling point for 15 minutes.

Fruits put up in a large amount of sugar do not have to be sealed, but even preserves are better put in glass jars to protect from mold, which is apt to form on the top of a large open dish. Mold grows from spores, which are always floating about in the air. When these small particles fall upon a moist surface, which furnishes suitable food, they at once multiply and soon cover the entire surface. Mold does not usually cause fermentation of fruits, but is the cause of decay in ripe fruit. To kill mold spores fruit must be boiled and then kept in a cool; dry place, well covered.

HOW TO STERILIZE VESSELS

To sterilize utensils put them in cold water and gradually bring them to boiling point, then boil 15 minutes. Glass cans and tumblers can te sterilized in the same way. They should remain in the hot water till used.

Canning should be done when the air is free from dust. All towels used, as well as the hands and clothes of the worker, should be perfectly clean.

If tin or iron utensils are used in canning, the fruit will become discolored and a disagreeable flavor will be developed. The acids of the fruit act on those metals. The ideal utensils for use in canning are enameled or porcelain lined. Kettles for cooking fruit should be large around, as it is better not to have too many layers of fruit at once.

It is of great importance in canning to have the jars, rubbers and tops in perfect condition. Never use old tops with cracked hinges, or old soft rubbers. Some housewives prefer the wide-mouthed jars that seal without rubbers.

SELECTING THE FRUIT

In selecting the fruit for canning, all imperfect fruit should be discarded. Cut out the bad places and use them for jelly, marmalade, etc. The flavor of fruit is not developed till it is perfectly ripe, but fermentation begins so soon after this point is reached that it is much better to use fruit a little under-ripe for canning. Fruit should be canned as soon after picking as possible. If it is impossible to can it immediately, it should be kept in a cool place away from the flies.

Always leave the lids and cans in hot water till ready to use. Take one can at a time from the hot water, and fill at once. Everything whatever used in the canning process should be thoroughly scalded—cups, spoons, forks, knives, funnels and basins. The inside of the cover should never be touched, either with the hands or a cloth after it is taken from the boiling water. Never wipe the top of the jar with a cloth after the fruit is in. The cans should always be filled full to overflowing before they are sealed.

WHY DREYFUSS PURCHASED MILLION DOLLAR BATTERY

Famous Magnet Tells Why He Loosened Up---Wants to Grab Another Pennant

Barney Dreyfuss paid the unheard of sum of $22,500 to the St. Paul Club of the American Association, for the release of Marty O'Toole, the flame-haired pitching phenom. For Catcher James Kelly, the other end of this "million-dollar" battery' Dreyfuss is said to have handed over the sum of $10,000. This is without doubt the largest sum ever paid for a pair of minor league players. The amount for O'Toole exceeds that paid for any baseball player.

Barney Dreyfuss explains his act of paying a ransom for O'Toole as follows:

"The investment of a sum like $22,500 in a single ball player seems, at first thought, like taking a gambler's chance. The casual observer would probably conclude that the chances of realization on the investment are comparatively small.

But it is certain that I did not make the deal for Pitcher O'Toole of St. Paul, without giving the matter careful consideration. I figured it this way:

Pittsburg is just now engaged in a bitter battle for the National League pennant. We have been keeping near the top with our present pitching staff. But we have been unable to win the few games necessary to put us in front. We have been a fraction short of top-notchers all along.

We have three twirlers who have done grand, consistent work. Adams Leifield and Camnitz have won a big majority o ftheir games. I believed that, if we had another consistent winner on the pitching staff, we would be able to cut down the lead of our rivals and eventually win the pennant.

It is needless for me to try to conceal my desire to land another winner. That is the secret of the deal. Twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars is the largest sum ever expended for a single player. But I am taking the chance that its return will be a National League championship, and a share in the rich world's championship spoils.

However, I was not figuring alone on the present. O'Toole, though not a novice, is still a comparatively young man—only twenty-four. He ought to have ten more years of solid baseball in him. If he is a winner through those years he will be a drawing card for the club right along, and we will be realizing on our investment as long as we keep him. If he should turn out to be a second Camnitz, Mathewson or Brown we can scarcely estimate how much he will be worth to us.

If I were asked to tell in a word why I bought the man I would reply—because we need him. I measured his value by our necessity. If we had had one other winning pitcher on the staff it is not likely that I would have worried much about O'Toole."

MANY PLAYERS PREFER PASS TO SAFE HIT

"A base on balls is as good as a hit" is a statement known to every coacher in the land. It is not the truth, but it is an approximation of truth. A hit will, as a rule, advance a man, already on, two bases, while a pass may leave him where he was, or advance him at best one base.

Nevertheless, there are many men in both leagues who go up to the plate with the intention of playing for a base on balls rather than a hit. Such men are known as good waiters.

The top of every well-ordered batting list is headed by such a man. If the lead-off man can work the pitcher for a base he has accomplished more than if he made a hit, for he impairs the pitcher's confidence in his control and may start him on a blow-up.

Sheckard, of the Cubs, Huggins of St. Louis, Devore of the Giants, Daniels and Hemphill of the New York Americans, Knabe of the Phillies and Hooper of the Red Sox are all conspicuous among the lead-off men for their ability to wait it out.

Huggins, perhaps is the greatest of the group. He led the National League in drawing passes last year, by a big margin. His ability is partly due to his small size, but there are of course other factors as well. Huggins is one of the shortest men in baseball and he also hugs the plate. He will wait out till the last possible minute before offering at a ball, and he almost never goes after the bad ones. Topsy Hartsel is another player whose size is extremely useful to him in drawing passes. In fact, it is for this purpose almost entirely that he is used. He is no longer much of a hitter or fielder, but when Mack sees a pitcher beginning to waver in his control he often sends Hartsel in to get him up in the air. Many of the Athletics' games have been won by the little fellow's ability along those lines.

Position is Important.

The position in which a man stands at the plate has a good deal to do with determining whether he is hard or easy to pitch for. The man who hugs the plate has undoubtedly a big advantage. Pitchers do not like to shoot the ball right at a batter and they are inclined to play the outside corner when serving to plate huggers. This limits the space in which a strike can be put. A crouch is also a factor in helping the pass record, for the umpire never quite allows for the man's height.

The batter who stands still when he has a pitcher in a hole is never a good waiter. It is very much easier to pitch to a stationary mark than to a moving one. The player who jumps about and brandishes his bat catches the pitcher's eye a little bit, and always runs the chance of making him pitch wide. Ty Cobb, who is one of the best waiters, as well as the best batter in the game, is an adept at this art. When the pitcher has served him with two or three balls he becomes a whirling Dervish. He is never still a moment. Just as the pitcher starts to deliver the ball he has a habit of bending over the plate as if to put dust on his hands.

The seeming danger of hitting the batsman in the head is bound to worry the pitcher.

Cobb waits down to the last ball, but some players do not. With the count at three and one, authorities differ as to the proper course of procedure. Some players like to hit at the next one on the ground that it is sure to be a straight ball, while when the count is three and two the pitcher may take a chance on a curve ball. On the other hand, if the batter hits at the first one he may go out and thus lose a sure base on balls, which would have been given to him on the next ball. The surest batters play the latter system of waiting it out until the end. Another point in favour of this system is that it makes the pitcher pitch more and every extra ball which he is forced to serve up tends to weaken him.

It is his ability as a waiter which puts Cobb head and shoulders above other men who hit the ball for almost as high an average. Wagner and Lajoie do not like to wait. They will reach out for wide ones with men on bases in the desire to drive the ball for extra base hits. Joe Jackson is also a notorious offender in this respect. Of course, such a method sometimes turns out well, but it smacks a lot of grand stand playing, and is not the best sort of baseball.

Naturally this does not apply to times where the pitcher is trying to pass a heavy batter in order to get at a weaker batter. In such a case it often pays to nail a pickout. On the whole, however, the best batter is the man who is willing to let the issue be decided by a single ball. He gives the pitcher a chance to get wild, while the first hitter does not. A heavy batter is all the more dangerous if he is willing to forego a hit for a pass. "They also serve who only stand and wait" is certainly true of the national game.

Sports Of All Kinds

Nothing doing next Saturday in baseball. The Soccer Club from the C. G. E. is putting on a good attraction at Riverside Park, when they tackle Baraccas of Toronto.

At Belleville recently the Grand Trunks defeated Baracas of Toronto by a score of 5 to 1. The winners got their runs in the seventh, on a series of errors. The batteries were —Grand Trunks, Ashton and Brown: Baracas, Adams, Spanton and Smith.

The Torontos, by beating the Corinthians, will receive gold medals from Mr. Lol Solman. These prizes were offered to the first team to beat the touring Englishmen.

Ernie Johnson, for many years one of the standbys of the Wanderers, has signed a contract to play in Calgary next winter. Frank Patrick is picking up a team for that city and a few of the best puck-chasers in this province will, it is said, travel West. Johnson will receive $2,600 for his work this coming winter, providing, of course, the Wanderers let him go.

Alfred Shrubb gave Tom Flanagan a good healthy bump when he refused to run Longboat with the Toronto promoter refereeing. Flanagan has been saying nasty things about English sportsmen lately, and Shrubb's action is commendable one. It must be quite a take-down for Toronto's Czar of Sport, but it will teach him the error of his ways.

Eddie Fitzpatrick made a homer in yesterday's game with Newark. At that time the bases were filled and four runs resulted.

Cresswell and McFadden are doing the battery work for the local nine against Frankford this afternoon.

Eddie Collins, of the Athletics, accepted fourteen chances without a skip, at second base yesterday, thus establishing a season's record.

Keeler did not come up to Toronto with the team. He was so disgusted at letting Tonneman's drive get away from him to lose the last game at Jersey City that he streaked it for his home in Brooklyn. "Wee Willie" says that he must be through as a ball player when he let a thing of that sort happen. It is unlikely that he will rejoin the team unless needed badly in the stretch run.

HISTORY OF THE THISTLE

Cursed is the ground for thy sake—thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee: so runs the record of the primeval curse in the world's most ancient history of human depravity. By a strange caprice of chance the thistle, which was originally the symbol of man's first disobedience and the instrument of his punishment, has become the adopted and cherished emblem of the Scottish nation. Its choice for the unexpected honour seems to have been suggested, in the reign of the third James, by the still older national motto, "In Defence"—how much older who can tell? That prince, a small boy of eight, came to the Throne in 1460; and thus the prickly weed which is the honoured badge of Scotland has been ennobled for now four and a half centuries. The French lily and the English rose are probably of earlier date. It would be difficult—if the intention of our forefathers was to illustrate their motto with an appropriate flowering plant—to find or fall upon one more to the purpose than the thorny thistle.

Once adopted, it readily received the approval of our rough ancestors. And who knows what subtle influence it may have had in directing and moulding the Scottish character, such as it is—hardy, robust, self-reliant—if wanting the grace of the lily and the graciousness of the rose? It presently appeared on the Scottish coinage, to remain there through four Stuart reigns down to the time of the Union. It was employed in the literature in 1503 (in what is perhaps the best allegorical poem in any language) to represent the royalty of Scotland in alliance with the red-and-white Rose of England. It was wrought into the decorations of the Scottish royal insignia, forming a floral border to the royal banner; and, after its admission into the herald's office, in 1542, during the reign of the best known of all our Lyon Kings, Sir David Lindsay of the Mount, it was finally and ineradicably established in the higher life of the nation, on the last day of the year 1703, by the institution of an Order of Knighthood, the latest development of which was made in 1827, when the number of its members was increased from twelve to sixteen.

Shortly after the creation of the Knights of the Thistle it again got into our native poetry, in "The Vision" of Allan Ramsay, where it figures with the new national motto.

Burns's devotion to the national emblem is even more pronounced than was Chaucer's to the daisy, as his characteristic letter to the guidwife of Wauchope in the spring of 1787 bears witness to the detriment of good husbandry, but to the credit of his patriotism, he permitted the thistle to flourish among his barley, turning "the weeder-clips aside to spare the symbol dear." Its form is the common ornament of the people. In silver or in gold, embellished with the glitter of amethyst or cairngorm, it is a rival with the cross of St. Andrew for the favour of the young, the brave, and the beautiful. It fastens the plaid, it adorns the dirk or the bonnet, while in brooch or bangle it graces the breast and arm of the fair. The Scots are indeed proud of their Thistle!

POST CARD COLUMN

The "Higher Criticism"

Kawartha Park, Aug. 3, 1911.

Editor, Examiner:

Sir,—The advocates of Higher Criticism (?) are loud in their demands that the "new theology" be taught to the people. We are told it is nothing less than cruel, that the people be left in ignorance of the discoveries of modern scholarship. In other words, these modern apostles of modern thought, are insisting that gradually, as the people are able to bear it, they must be made to see that modern scholarship has proved that Christ was not infallible, that He erred and made mistakes just like any other man. When He spoke of Abel, Noah, Abraham, etc., as being real historic persons, He was mistaken, for modern scholars (?) have discovered that these were only mythical men, who never really lived. The people must be made to understand that when Christ spoke of a flood, He was mistaken again, for modern scholars (?) they say, have discovered that there never was a flood and they discredit even a partial flood—see Methodist theology as taught by Prof. Jackson, of Victoria University.

Again, although the critics admit that Christ taught the people, that Moses wrote the Pentateuch, and that David wrote the 110th Psalm, yet these apostles of modern criticism and scholarship, deny both—see Jackson's teaching, and the people must be taught that our Lord erred and was mistaken again. When our Lord Jesus Christ spoke of Daniel being a book of prophecy, He erred and did not understand what He was talking about, for modern scholarship has discovered that the book of Daniel is nothing but a historical, or probably a religious romance, and insinuates that the writer of the Book of Daniel was nothing but a romancer.

Again, when our Lord said that the people of Nineveh repented at the preaching of Jonah, He erred again and was mistaken, for, as Prof. Jackson says, it is incredible to believe that the people of such a city as Nineveh should repent with such suddenness and completeness. Yes, Mr. Editor and reader, this is what modern scholarship calls "Higher Criticism." Some of us have another name for this theology which denies the authority of our Redeemer, and which must be taught to the people, young and old, as they can bear it. No one is worthy to be called a Christian who will not contend against this great apostasy. They are many, and their number is increasing, who will not accept such theology themselves, nor will they allow it to be taught to their children; no, nor to their neighbours or their neighbours' children without a protest. The colleges and churches where this awful stuff is taught are a standing menace to the commonwealth, and should be immediately quarantined and thoroughly disinfected, for as they stand to-day, they are a great danger to the welfare of the state, as well as a grave peril to the church. Everyone who desires to serve his day and generation well, should strike this thing between the eyes in a sensible, wise way every time he can, and "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints."—Jude 3. R. V.

DEATH OF RESPECTED HASTINGS LADY

HASTINGS, AUG. 5.—Another respected citizen has passed away, in the person of Mr. Thos. Gilchrist, who has been ailing for about three weeks, suffering from leakage of the heart, which resulted in his death on Thursday morning after a period of most acute suffering. He leaves to mourn his loss besides his widow, two sons and three daughters, who have the sympathy of a large circle of friends. The funeral was held on Saturday p. m., when the remains were laid to rest in the T. V. cemetery.

Mr. Irving, of Napanee, has been making a tour of this district in the interests of the Daly Tea Company of that town.

Miss Viola Adams, of Norwood, is spending a holiday at the home of Mr. Thos. McKee.

The afternoon excursion to Idyl Wyld and Gores Landing under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church, was a great success. The weather was ideal and a large number took advantage of the trip. The steamer left the wharf at 1.15, reaching Idyl Wyld about 3.30, where a stop was made for lunch, after which the trip to Gore's Landing was made and much enjoyed. The party went on board for the return trip about 7 p.m., and when almost at the wharf the steamer stuck fast on a rock and the company were taken ashore in different ways, all, however, arriving safely home.

Miss Brisbois, of Peterborough, has been visiting Mrs. Jas. Stevenson.

Mr. Wm. Stewart, of Peterborough, has been a guest at the manse with Mr. and Mrs. (Rev. Thompson.

A number from Norwood drove to town on Wednesday and accompanied the picnic to Idyl Wyld.

Miss Alice Bennington, of Havelock, has been spending a few days with Miss Maud Anderson.

Mr. Geo. Gardiner, of Dummer, gave us a call Thursday last.

Mr. Lew Gilchrist, of Detroit, is the guest of his mother, Mrs. T. Gilchrist.

Miss Winnie Gilchrist, of Campbellford, was called home last week on account of her father's critical condition.

Mrs. R. C. Doxsee is preparing to leave next week for Chicago to spend a holiday with friends.

Mr. Albert Armstrong has been visiting at his home in Havelock.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Shaw and children, of Campbellford, were in town on Saturday, attending the funeral of the latter's father, Mr. T. Gilchrist.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pearce of Norwood, were in town on Wednesday.

Mrs. Dr. Thompson and daughter of India, have been guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Humphries.

Mr. Wm. Rice, town, has accepted a position with Mr. C. Armstrong, of Havelock.

Discovery Affecting Clay Roads

A roadmaking discovery, which, if the claims made for it can be substantiated, is of national importance, has been made by an Ontario man, who for some time has been residing in the west. The discovery has been submitted to the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Like many other important inventions, it is a by-product of another. The inventor was interested in the pottery trade, and produced and patented a compound intended to temper clay for the manufacture of brick, tile, and other products. Its effect is to overcome the alkali, which to a greater or less extent is present in all clays. An alkali is responsible for cracking in drying and checking and melting in firing, a saving of waste is made, and firing may be proceeded with more rapidly when the danger of melting is eliminated.

When he got this length the potter began to experiment on the effect of the treatment of clay roads. After experimenting he asserts that a relatively inexpensive treatment of a clay road would transform such a road into a smooth, noiseless, and dustless one that would not absorb moisture and would therefore give forth no mud. The effect of the compound is to close the pores, and one treatment would last for years.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Cloak Room, Rideau Hall, Ottawa," will be received until 4.00 P. M., on Monday, August 14, 1911, for the construction of a Cloak Room, Rideau Hall, Ottawa.

Plans, specifications and form of contract can be seen and forms of tender obtained at this Department.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

ADDRESS OF MR. STRATTON TO THE ELECTORATE

Electors of the West Riding of Peterborough

GENTLEMEN,—

At a largely attended mass meeting of the electors, on Saturday, I was selected as candidate to contest the representation of the Riding in the House of Commons. I accepted the responsibility of the position and hereby respectfully solicit the favour of your votes and support.

I am well known to you all, for during a representative service of West Peterborough, practically extending over a period of twenty-five years, I have many times come into contact, directly and indirectly, with every elector of the Riding.

In the past I have been honoured with your confidence, and I have earnestly striven to deserve it. In the discharge of my parliamentary and, especially of my representative duties, I have tried to consistently recognize and live up to the fact that I was the representative of the whole people, and in duty bound to serve the interests of all collectively and individually, whether their support had assisted, or their opposition had resisted, my election.

I need not refer to my record to specify what I have been privileged to do in the promotion of the material, moral and social welfare of West Peterborough. My work in this regard, be it little or great, is known to you all. You all know whether or not I have been a faithful servant of the people, whether the Riding is better, and in what respects, from my having been your representative.

I need not be at much pains to define my position in this contest. Everybody knows where I stand—where I am to be found. Such as I have been in the endeavour to advance your interests, I still am, and shall continue to be, if you honour me with re-election.

Apart from the consideration of local—city and county—interests, the national question chiefly involved in this contest is "Reciprocity," or free mutual exchange of natural, mainly farm, products, with the United States. I believe that reciprocity of this kind will be of benefit to the farmers of the country, and through their prosperity to all other interests—manufacturing, financial and commercial, as well as to those of the mechanic and workingman.

The round of benefit is natural. Good crops and good markets mean money for the farmer, which spent with the merchants of all kinds, means increased orders for the manufacturer and increased employment to their workmen. Thus Reciprocity, by affording wider and better markets, promises to be a benefit to the whole country and an injury to no class or interest; and is worth trying, especially as the agreement, not being a treaty, can, if unsatisfactory, be cancelled on reasonable notice.

If I thought for a moment that it would hurt any important interest, especially the manufacturing interest, I would oppose it. I am neither an extreme free trader, nor an extreme protectionist. I believe in a reasonable amount of both. High tariff in the United States has lost to Canada ninety million dollars in barley alone. The British Preference as it affects our manufacturers goes as far as desirable in the direction of free trade and I am opposed to, and will oppose, any increase of it. I myself am a manufacturer or interested in manufactures, in a modest way, but, at the same time, to an extent, important to myself and my associates, and I feel that our industries and working men could not stand a keen manufacturing competition of either Britain or the United States.

In this regard, I am in accord with the assurance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking for the Government, when he gave this pledge, "WE HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURERS AND WILL NOT HURT THEM," and I applaud the stand of Mr. Fielding in negotiating the Reciprocity Agreement, in refusing to even discuss reciprocity in manufactured articles with the United States.

If you approve, gentlemen, of what I consider the reasonable stand I take in relation to national interests; if you believe, judging from my past record of service to the Riding, that I have the business capacity, the business and parliamentary experience to continue to give you good service, and justify the confidence I now ask you to again place in me, I presume to claim your support.

This is probably the last appeal I shall make to you; for I think I have done my share of service to this Riding and have thereby earned the opportunity to give the necessary attention to my private affairs. I should have persisted in my desire to be relieved had I not felt in duty bound to defer to the earnest solicitation of the friends who have stood by me in the past, and also of a great many of my former opponents, and consented to be a candidate.

Another reason that influenced my acceptance, was, that being of a business turn, I naturally desired to complete work I have initiated, and for which I am in some degree, if the opportunity is given me, responsible. I should like to see the completion of the large new docks for the City of Peterborough; of the retaining wall on our river front in Peterborough; also a new concrete dam at Nassau erected, and a Rifle Range provided for this important military centre.

Trusting that I may be favoured with your effective support, I have the honour to remain, gentlemen, as I have been for the past twenty-five years,

Your Obedient Servant,

J. R. Stratton

RICHARD HALL & SON

$75,000 EXPENDED IN SEARCH FOR HEIRESS

Cost of Long Search.

Expended by Newspapers—Reporters' salaries and travelling expenses, cable and telegraph tolls, private detectives	$40,000
By the Arnold Family—Detective agencies, lawyers' fees, telgraph tolls, European trips (estimated)	25,000
By New York Police—Salaries, detectives and travelling expenses, circulars, photographs, telegraph tolls, etc.	10,000
Total cost of search to date	$75,000

NEW YORK, N. Y. AUG. 9. — Since the disappearance of Charley Ross no case of a missing person has had so much attention as that of Dorothy Arnold. And in the history of no missing person was ever so great an effort made in all directions to discover what her fate has been; nor was money ever in any similar case so lavishly spent. The search that so far has been futile, has cost $75,000 if it has cost a penny. It is still going on and money is still being lavishly expended, although as yet there is no definite prospect that the hunt will prove other than futile.

When Dorothy Arnold left her home in Central Park west on Dec. 12 last and left no word behind to explain her disappearance and no clue to her whereabouts, although the youth and beauty of the girl had been illustrated by photographs of her published broadcast in the newspapers and sent out nearly as widely by the police, the mysterious case took the strongest kind of a hold on the public imagination. In addition to her youth and beauty, the wealth of her family and the romances that had been spoken of as indicating the possible explanation of her disappearance, there was in the strange manner of her passing completely out of sight and knowledge of her family and friends a direct challenge to the police and the newspapers and, finally, to her family.

The finding of Dorothy Arnold has been the dream of every reporter since last December. To obtain a real clue to her whereabouts and to follow that clue to the presence of the girl herself would earn spurs and lasting favour and fame for any "cub," and would rank as the crowning achievement of even a star reporter.

Squads of reporters, the highest priced men of the staffs, have been constantly employed from last December to this day and are still exclusively employed in a hunt for Dorothy Arnold. It is conservative to declare that the newspapers have paid out fully $40,000 so far in the search. There are not only to be considered the salaries of the reporters and their expenses in cabs, on telephones, in railroad trains and steamships to all parts of the country and in Europe, to every place where reports have indicated that Dorothy Arnold might be in hiding or might be held against her will; but in addition are the hundreds and hundreds of dollars expended in telegraph and cable tolls. Expeditions have been made into Massachusetts, Connecticut ,to the far south, as far west as San Francisco and into the far north of Canada, in the hope of tracing the missing girl.

The newspapers also employed private detectives in the hope that they might discover what the reporters had not been able to. But all in vain.

Nor does the cost of the long quest end here. There is the money expended by the Police Department of this city. Dozens of detectives were constantly at work here or in many other cities in the country. Circulars were from time to time printed and sent all over the world. The Police Department spent no less than $10,000.

Thus the hunt for Dorothy Arnold became a $75,000 mystery—the most expensive search on record save that perhaps, which led to the Greely expeditions into the Far North and the Stanley expedition in quest of Livingston.

COUNCIL APPOINTS COMMITTEE TO ASK FOR GOOD ROADS

Messrs. Howden and Garbutt Will Petition Provincial Government in Very Important Matter---Byersville News

The North Monaghan Council held a meeting Aug. 3rd, at May's School House, with all the members present and the Reeve in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

That the residents on the above-mentioned streets, who are in favour of having a cement sidewalk, are willing to build a walk in front of their own lots, at their own expense if the Township gives them permission to do so, and also allows them to take stone and gravel out of the Township pit free of charge, the residents to pay all charges for hauling, etc.

Mr. Montgomery and Mr. Braden called on the council regarding the culvert in front of their property, on the gravel road. They requested the Council to have the bottom of the culvert lowered so that the water could get away.

It was moved by Mr. Forster and seconded by Mr. May, that Mr. Morrow, Mr. May and Mr. Robson be a committee to inspect and, if necessary, repair the bottom of the culvert, as they think best.—Carried.

The Reeve presented a report from the Bank of Ottawa, as required by the Municipal Act. On June 30, the indebtedness of the Township was $434.70.

The Byersville sidewalk petition came up before the Council with the names of Frank Brown and Dr. Johnston in addition to the names already on the list.

The petition asked that the sidewalk extend as far south as, and in front of Mr. Frank Brown's residence —120 feet south of brown street.

On motion of Messrs. May and Morrow this petition was granted.

The Council, not wishing to establish the custom of building crossings hereby agrees to grant road division No. 6 money sufficient to cover the cost of building the cement crossings.

This resolution was adopted on motion of Messrs. Forster and Robson.

The residents on Lock and Lansdown streets are hereby granted permission to build a cement sidewalk in front of their property; the Township also agrees to allow them to get stone and gravel out of the township pit for this purpose. The residents are to draw the same at their own expense and to pay all costs of building the sidewalk.

On motion of Messrs. May and Forster, the Reeve was instructed to procure an engineer to get out specification for the sidewalk at Byersville, and also advertise for tenders. The sidewalk is to be built on the outside of the tree line and to be five feet wide. The crossings are to be four feet wide, Mr. May, Mr. Forster and the Reeve being a committee to deal with the sidewalk construction as they think best.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned and the sidewalk committee is to meet on Saturday, Aug. 5, in the Township Treasurer's office, at 11 a.m.

On August 5th, 1911, the Byersville Sidewalk Committee of the North Monaghan Council met in the Township Treasurer's office, the Reeve, Mr. May and Mr. Forster, the Committee in charge, all being present.

A communication was read from residents at Byersville, asking the Township to allow them to take stone out of the gravel pit for the proposed sidewalk.

On motion of Messrs. May and Forster their request was granted.

It was moved by Mr. Forster and seconded by Mr. May, that Mr. Cameron be authorised to get out plans and specifications for the Byersville sidewalk.—Carried.

The meeting then adjourned until the call of the Reeve.

The Vagaries Of Lightning

How To Contend With It

Protection from lightning is a subject that recurs with the coming of each springtime. In the violence of an atfospheric eelctric disturbance, accompanied by the awe-inspiring flashes of lightning so common with the thunderstorm of the Northwest, there are few who have not desired the protection of a lightning-proof shelter. The probability of an individual building being struck by lightning is really very slight, but there is always a possibility of such an occurrence and also that the stroke might be attended with considerable violence, or the building might take fire.

The formation of lightning is very imperfectly understood, but experience with its vagaries and a knowledge of the laws of high tension electric currents has established a fairly good understanding of the methods of constructing lightning conductors for all ordinary discharges. It is very well known that lightning is the discharge of a large amount of electricity in a very short space of time and that whatever affords it a passage to the earth is likely to be badly damaged, unless the vehicle happens to be a good conductor of electricity and of sufficient size to transmit the amount of electric energy the flash contains; in which case it passes away doing no damage at all.

As a storm develops the electrically charged clouds pass over the earth and when the electrical intensity becomes great enough to break down the resistance of the intervening air, the resulting discharge will pass into the earth by the most convenient path. This is commonly some high object of the landscape, a building, a pole, a tree or any other object that extends up from the earth. If the object is a conductor of electricrty and connected with the earth, the lightning will pass into the ground without the least damage being done, but if it is not a good conductor the havoc wrought in an instant is sometimes appalling.

Buildings with metallic roofs that are properly connected with the earth have far better protection from lightning than could be given by rods. Buildings that are completely covered with sheet metal and well connected with the earth are practically lightning proof. Covered in this manner buildings have been known to be repeatedly struck by lightning without the least damage. The sheet iron granary, so common in the West, when well connected with the earth may be considered lightning proof. The ground connections mentioned above may be made of metallic ods that extend well into the earth and are securely fastened to the metallic covering of the buildings.

In considering the form of lightning conductors it is well to keep in mind the fact that a metal covered building well connected with the earth is practically lightning proof, and that one with a metallic roof, well grounded. is excellently well protected if not perf ctly safe. If, then, the roof of a building possesses a metallic ridge, eavetroughs anddownspouts, these will afford very good protection if they are well connected and well grounded. A roof covered with a metallic screen, as a chicken screen, makes an excellent protector when properly grounded.

It must be remembered that the ground connection is a positive necessity, and too much care cannot be exercised in its construction. The earrth is the great reservoir of electrical energy, and it is always at zero potential. If a discharge of lightning can be directed into the moist earth by a conductor, its energy is soon dissipated, but the ground connection must be of considerable area and extend well into the moist earth. A piece of galvanized iron pipe driven into the ground seven or eight feet makes a good "ground." Large buildings must have two or more such "grounds." The connecting wires must be securely fastened to the ground connections.

In the matter of conducting wires. the United States Weather Bureau. in a bulletin on Lightning and Lightning Protection, recommends a No 3 galvanized iron wire (Brown & Sharpe gauge) as amply sufficient in size for ordinary lightning protection. If metallic downspouts are used as conductors the connections should be made with the "grounds" with riveted joints. Copper conductors give no better protection from lightning than iron if the iron is kept covered to prevent it from rusting.

Wire fences are often the cause of damage by lightning because of the method of construction. If the fence wires are grounded the danger from this cause will disappear. Ground wires may be made of ordinary fence wire. and should be connected with each of the wires of the fence and extend into the ground three feet. Such "grounds" should be made for each 100 feet of fence.

FIRST EXCURSION DOWN THE RIVER

On Saturday last Jupiter Plu thought he would pass in a portion of his favourite weather conditions—this just at the time advertised when Knox Church Brotherhood should leave Wolfe Street Wharf on their first excursion down the river. The "Otonabee," chartered for the event. was held back until the water taps should be turned off, and at 2.30, with about 200 on board, and the brilliant rays of a tropical sun beating down on the land, ropes were cast off, and as we folk from Gleaca would say: "We went w ar trup doon the watter," not to Duncon or Rothesay, however! The venue fixed on by the Committee was Jubilee Point, and the selection was happy, judging from the reports of everyone "when the sun sank to rest at the close of one glad day."

Arriving at the field about 5.30. groups squatted here and there to partake of a hasty lunch. At the conclusion of attending to the wants of the inner man. a programme of sports was entered on. The items were all keenly contested, and the results were rewarded on the homeward track by the presentation of literary works to the various prize-winners. The following is a list of the events and their winners:

Boys' 100 yards race—Leith Bartley; prize, straw hat, donated by E. N. McWilliams.

Men's wheelbarrow race—1, Messrs. A. Hardie and T. McArthur; 2. Messrs. G. Knight and A. McArthur. Prizes, Works of Shakespeare, donated by Dr. T. M. McCullough.

Ladies' nail driving contest — 1. Mrs. R. Hillier; prize, one of Chas. Roberts' works; 2, Miss Knight, prize book, (John Burt), both donated by R. J. Soden.

Tug-of-war.—Brotherhood won, second and third pulls from the Football team; prize, Bible, donated by W. G. Bartley.

Largest family on grounds—Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Bartley—seven. Prize reading table, donated by the Otonabee and Lake Simcoe Navigation Co.

At the conclusion of the presentation ringing cheers were given to the donors of the prizes, the Captain and crew of the Otonabee for their usual courtesy and kindness; to the Committee, headed by Messrs. K. Denoon and G. W. Bartley, who were untiring in their efforts for the happiness of all, and to the ladies, Mrs. McKenzie and Mrs. Shinter, for so gracefully handing over the prizes.

Wolfe Street Wharf was reached about eleven o'clock and the happiness shone on the faces of all augurs well for future outings of the Brotherhood of Knox Church.

Rev. Mr. Keith was unable to be present, owing to being from home on holidays.

"There's a Reason"

Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs

ITEMS FROM STONEY LAKE

Mr. W. A. Davis of Painsville. Ohio, has become the owner of one hundred acres of land at the south end of Gilchrist Bay, which includes the dock, formerly the site of the old saw mill. as well as the entrance to and source of the Indian River, extending down as far as the portage. The purchase was completed last August, and and this spring Mr. Davis had a cottage constructed on the peninsula jutting north into Gilchrist Bay, where he and his family are spending their vacation.

Mr. Davis proposes erecting a commodious boat house on the dock, to accommodate his yacht the "Floiire," named after his three children, Florence, Lillie and Robert.

The launch was built in Kingston. and presents a very trim appearance. She is powered with a "Fox" 7-horse-power engine.

Mr. R. J. Colville and family have taken up their residence at their summer home "Beverley."

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Clegg are camping at Kawartha Park. Mr. Clegg has just finished the erection of a cottage in the vicinity of the spring.

Mrs. Wesley Sherin, Miss Dorothy and Miss Elsie are located for the summer at their cottage, "Westela."

Mrs. Crane and Mr. Chapman of Toronto, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Will Jones, Eagle Mount.

The supply boat "Bobs" is making its regular trips. Mr. McAuley is the owner this season, having purchased her from Mr. Dunford.

Mrs. Aikens of Toronto, is having a handsome summer home constructed near Mt. Julian. Mr. Frowde of Peterborough, has a large gang of men at work rushing it to completion.

Mr. Lawrence Grahame has added a handsome stone fire-place to the attractions at "Kiluna." Later on Mr. Grahame proposes erecting another in the log cabin ,which is in process of construction on the little island to the west of "Kiluna."—Simon the Sailor.

The New Cunarder

The dimensions of the new Cunarder Aquitania, which is beginning to take shape at Clydebank, have now been finally fixed by the Cunard Line Some doubt has been expressed (says the London correspondent of the Glasgow Herald) as to whether the vessel will exceed in length the Emperator, at present being built by the Vulcan Company at Hamburg for the Hamburg-American Line. The Aquitani awill be over 900 feet in length and will therefore be the largest vessel in the world. The competition among the great Atlantic shipping lines to possess the largest as well as the fastest vessel afloat is evidently very keen. A brief consideration of the history of the two great liners at present in the making is significant, and suggests that the respective owners are not indifferent to what is being done by the others. Thus, the original intention of the Hamburg-American Company, as indicated by the specifications, was to have a vessel of 879 feet 3 inches length over all, 95 feet 2 inches in breadth, and of a gross tonnage of 45,000, these dimensions were subsequently increased to 880 feet, 96 feet and 50,000 tons respectively, and later to 900 feet, 100 feet and 52,000 tons respectively. The safe tale falls to be told of the Aquitania. The specifications were for a vessel of 885 feet in length over all, 95 feet 6 inches in breadth and a gross tonnage of just over 40,000. It was, as I announced six months ago, decided to increase these dimensions to 900 feet, 96 feet 6 inches and 48,000 tons. I am now in a position to state that these figures had again been added to, and that the plans have now been finally approved by the Cunard Company. While I am not at liberty to name the exact dimensions, I may state that the length will exceed 900 feet, and will be short of 910 feet. In the matter of accommodation the Emperator and Aquitania will be found to be pretty much the same. Both will be fitted up to carry just over 4,000 passengers, and with the crews added provision will be made for about 5,000 persons on board. Being designed for a greater speed than the Emperator (23 knots as compared with 22), the Aquitania will not be so full in form, and in total displacement and gross tonnage will probably be exceeded by the German boat.

WHAT POULTRY REQUIRE

From Farm and Dairy.

A regular supply of grit or sharp gravel is required by poultry of all sorts to aid them in the digestion of their food. Having no teeth, fowls cannot masticate their food, but every particle of food they eat passes through the gizzard after leaving the crop.

The gizzard may be described as a mill for pulverising all the food which passes between its two grinding surfaces. But these surfaces, being of a tough, flexible, and not of a hard nature, cannot of themselves grind the food. It is, therefore, necessary that fowls should pick up grit at regular intervals, which passes with the food through the gizzard, and helps, by the movements of the surfaces of the gizzard, to grind the food passing theses with the food through the bowels.

Any attempt of the gizzard to pulverise food without the help of grit would be as futile as the attempt of the toothless saw of the stone-cutter to divide a rock unaided by sand. Fowls that have a run containing gravel need not be supplied with artificial grit, but those that are closely confined in small runs require a supply of some such grit as sharp gravel, broken flint, limestone, etc.

All laying fowl need a regular supply of old mortar, or some material containing lime, for shell-making. The need of this often causes poultry to lay thin shelled or shellless eggs.

OMEMEE ITEMS

Examiner Special:

OMEMEE, AUG. 8.—Captain New, formerly of the Salvation Army preached at the Presbyterian church at Omemee, Mt. Pleasant and Fowlers Corners, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Currie, who is enjoying a four weeks' holiday.

Toronto's Civic Holiday contributed a large number of former friends and citizens. While they like the capital of our great Ontario, the quiet little village, 725 feet above the bay, has still attractions for them. Among the visitors were Mr. Clifford Mulligan, Mr. Charles McCaffery, Mr. H. Dancy, Miss M. Johnson, Miss B. Elliott.

The tennis and lawn bowling club had another delightful evening on McCrea grounds. The young men and ladies are becoming splendid players and many of them display a good deal of skill and dexterity both in the cage and on the bowling green.

Mr. John Phelps, of Toronto, who is relieving Manager Hodgetts of the local branch of the Bank of Toronto, presided at the pipe organ in the Methodist church, morning and evening, last Sunday. Banker Phelps is a fine musician and acquits himself with credit at the organ. During the evening service, Mr. Phelps accompanied Miss Laidley in her singing. "There shall be no night there." Miss Laidley has a fine voice and rendered the selection with fine feeling and expression.

Principal McLean was in Lindsay last week as relieving reporter on the staff of the Daily Warder.

Rev. and Mrs. C. Carew, of London, Ont., are spending a few days with his brother.

Miss O. E. Burns is visiting relatives in St. Catharines.

Miss Etta Scott left on Tuesday morning for Oak Lake, Manitoba, where she will put in a pleasant time for three months with her sister, Mrs. (Rev.) D. H. Clare.

The 'Eaton Hall' is proceeding rapidly in its construction since the car-load of lumber arrived Saturday. The roof is now on, and Contractor Williams, of Lindsay, is again on the job putting on the brick veneering.

Williamson, the veteran 'honey man,' has finished extracting the clover honey and he reports only about half a yield. This means a light crop of clover seed for the farmer. The busy bee is one of the greatest friends of the farmer. When the bee does well the farmer is progressive along the same line.

Mrs. J. McCrea and Miss E. McCrea along with Mr. Arthur McCrea, autoed to Toronto, where they are enjoying a visit with with Mrs. J. C. Eaton, who has just returned from an extended trip through the British Isles and on the continent of Europe.

Dr. Sutton, of Lindsay called at the Memorial Parsonage while making a flying call on some friends.

Mr. Clifford Mulligan and Mr. Burke of Toronto, were here over Sunday at the home of Reeve Mulligan.

Mrs. Dodds, of Toronto, who has been visiting relatives, left this week for a short stay in the state of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Kerr and family returned to Chicago after a pleasant visit among relatives and friends.

Miss A. McCrea, of Toronto is at the home of her mother, after enjoying an extended trip abroad. Miss Scott of Toronto, is also visiting with Miss McCrea.

Mrs. White, Sturgeon street, entertained a few friends on Friday at an afternoon tea.

Mr. Horton has returned to Cleveland, Ohio, having enjoyed his holiday. Mrs. Horton and daughters will remain for another month.

Mr. C. Stark, manufacturer, of Michigan, U.S.A., spent a few days last week at the home of his father, Mr. Harry Stark.

Miss Vilmay Cannon, of Wilconce, is visiting at the home of Mrs. John M. McCrea.

LINDSAY COUNCIL AGAIN "THOMASED"

LINDSAY, AUG. 9.—"Detective" Dollery, the lynx-eyed chicken sleuth, was the subject of a fifteen minutes' debate at the Council Chamber last night.

It seems that this individual, anxious to achieve fame and glory as a second edition of Sherlock Holmes, applied to Alderman McCrae, Chairman of Police and Light Committee, for a position as night constable. He informed Mr. McCrae that he would like to make a record as he was a first-class detective. He was asked for his credentials, but could not produce anything to show that he had unearthed anything of a sensational character during his career.

Mr. McCrae informed him that as chairman of a committee he could not spend an amount exceeding $5.00 without the sanction of the Council. Chickens thieves were committing depredations in this locality at the time and Mr. McCrae told Dollery that he might try and 'make a record' in this matter.

This was all the ambitious sleuth required. He immediately started out to win fame and incidentally to put the town in debt. In his zeal for the capture of the chicken thieves, he engaged conveyances at Lindsay's livery and now the town is confronted with the bill. Besides this, his wife also secured from the Council the sum of $15 for his services.

The unsolved question is who gave him the authority? Constable Short who was acting Chief at the time, states he had nothing to do with him and Ald. McCrae stated he gave him no authority to hire livery rigs.

The man of mystery, it might be stated, has left town and Mr. Lindsay is looking to the town for the payment of the livery bill.

WHERE RECIPROCITY HELPS THE CANADIAN FARMER

The main issue now before the country is the reciprocity agreement with the United States. By this agreement a large number of articles produced by the Canadian farmer are admitted to the United States free of duty, and the same articles from the United States have free entry into Canada. Great efforts will be made by the "special interests" to misrepresent reciprocity, as proposed under the agreement. It will be, therefore, a matter of interest to farmers, market gardeners, fruit growers, etc., to note the information contained in the following table, which shows the present duty on the several articles mentioned which are removed and given entrance duty free into the United States:

Articles	Present Tariff.	Under Reciprocity.
Cattle less than one year old	$3.00 per head	Free

Extract of hemlock-bark	½c a lb.	Free
Maple sugar and maple syrup	4c a lb.	1 cent a lb.

This great sweeping away of duties by the United States, if accepted by the people of Canada, as it surely will be, will mean millions upon millions of sheer gain every year to the producers of Canada. They will not gain the whole amount of the former duties, but a considerable proportion in each case. If a farmer is making a comfortable living now, will he hear without a laugh the voice of the orator who tells him to "let well enough alone" and refuse the proffer of an extra gain undreamed of before last winter? It is for the farmers to decide, as to the benefits of reciprocity, whether or not an enlarged market, without any tariff obstacles will be a benefit. Let the farmer of to-day consult with some veteran farmer who remembers the results of the reciprocity treaty of 1854-66. He will tell him that the United States market then was a great benefit, and it will be the same to-day under the proposed reciprocity agreement. It is to be remembered that the present reciprocity agreement is the first measure of tariff relief in the interests of the farmers since Confederation. Will the farmers reject the advantages offered? They will do so if they do not support the candidates of the government that is offering the reciprocity agreement—a wider market—to the farmers of Canada.

VETO IS SENT BACK

British Commons Cuts Off the Lords' Amendments

ROBERTS JOINS THE REBELS

London, Aug. 9.—The veto bill, shorn of the vital amendments of the House of Lords, but with some of the minor concessions added to it, will be presented to the House of Lords today, but there are so many peers who wish to take part in the debate that a vote is not likely until Thursday.

The insurgents have obtained a weighty recruit in Lord Roberts, who has announced his intention to vote with the followers of the Earl of Halsbury against the measure. Lord Roberts contends that in politics, as in war, the path of duty also is the path of safety.

The decision of the Government to take up the House of Lords' amendments to the veto bill seriatim instead of enbloc involved a prolonged sitting, owing to the opposition of the Laborites, who contended it was a needless concession to the Lords and compelled the Ministers to accept a modification of their proposal that the Speaker should consult the chairman of the committee on ways and means and the chairman of the committee on public accounts to determine the character of bills.

After the House had carried minor amendments dealing with the Government concessions and committees had been appointed to draw up the reasons for the Lower House disagreeing with the amendments of the Upper Chamber an adjournment was taken.

Lords Pass Censure.

London, Aug. 9.—By a vote of 2-2 to us the House of Lords last night carried a motion made by Lord Curson censuring the Government for having secured from the King a promise of sufficient peers to pass the veto bill should that measure be rejected by the Upper House of Parliament. The motion was similar to that of Arthur Balfour, the Opposition leader, which was lost in the House of Commons Monday by a majority of 119.

With the result a foregone conclusion the debate in the Lords last night created little interest. The speeches of the Conservative peers rang with charges that the Government had prostituted the prerogatives of the crown for the purpose of carrying home rule for Ireland without consulting the people.

The Earl of Crewe in opposing the motion caused something of a sensation by admitting that the members of the Government were not all of one mind with respect to the creation of new peers. He said King George regarded the plan "with legitimate reluctance" and that it depended upon the action of the House of Lords whether the Government would be compelled to create new peers.

The Earl of Halsbury charged Premier Asquith with being guilty of an atrocious breach of his trust. He drew a pathetic picture of the young and inexperienced King at the mercy of an astute lawyer, who told him that the creation of peers was the only way of solving the problem of the veto bill.

Viscount Haldane and Lord Loreburn were among those who spoke on behalf the Government, while Lord Selbourne and Lord Lansdowne supported the censure.

POPE IS SUFFERING.

His Holiness Confined to Bed With Gout.

Rome, Aug. 9.—Pope Pius is suffering from a severe and painful attack of the gout, and upon the orders of his physicians is keeping closely to his chamber.

Dr. Petacci, private physician to his holiness, and Dr. Marchiafava, consulting physician at the vatican, who are in attendance, say that if there should be any change to cooler weather, they hope for the speedy recovery of the distinguished patient.

The doctors declared last night that the case would not be considered of the slightest importance were the Pope not an elderly man—he is 77 years old—or if his constitution recently had not been weakened by an attack of laryngitis, which also affected the trachea, and the excessive heat. The attack bears all the classical characteristics of gout.

Yesterday when Drs. Petacci and Marchiafava visited his holiness they found his condition somewhat better and the patient taking nourishment; but with the approach of night the paroxyms of pain became acute. Pope Pius complained that in the right knee he experienced a burning sensation and severe throbbing and pricking pains. The inflammation of the affected part is so intense that Pope Pius dreads to have the leg moved or jarred. Even the weight of the bedclothes on it or the slightest shaking of the bed causes him much pain.

MOTHER BRANDED HER.

Montreal Child Charges Parents With Cruelty.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Branding with a red-hot iron was the method of punishment Marie Rose Rousseau claims her parents used when she did not do as they desired.

Louis Rousseau and his wife were brought before Judge Leet yesterday morning, in the recorder's court, charged with cruelty to their daughter, Marie Rose. They pleaded not guilty and were remanded until Aug. 10, pending an investigation of the case by H. Skroeder, secretary of the Society for the Protection of Women and Children.

Marie Rose, who is only ten years of age, told the court that when she did not sweep the house and wash the dishes as she was told, she was struck and beaten by both her father and mother.

Frequently, said Marie Rose, when her parents did not think kicks and cuffs sufficient chastisement for her offences, they would roll up her sleeve and while the step-father held her her mother would brand her on the arm several times with a red-hot iron, while she screamed with pain and was helpless to resist.

To Auction a Railroad.

Marion, Ohio, Aug. 9.—Judge Daniel Pabst yesterday entered a decree in the Court of Common Pleas that an order be given the sheriff of Marion County commanding him to have appraised and sell at public auction, the Columbus, Delaware & Marion Railroad Co. to satisfy a mortgage of $1,000,000 given the Western Reserve Trust Co. of Cleveland, two mortgages of $800,000 each held by the Standard Trust Co. of New York and a mortgage of $2,500,000 held by the Mercantile Trust Co. of New York; the last named covering the other three and being ordered held a prior.

Commission of $100,000.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Suit has been entered in the Superior Court here by the House of Browne, Limited, real estate agents, against the Lyall Realties, Limited, in which Mr. Peter Lyall is chiefly interested for the recovery of the sum of $100,000.

The plaintiff declares that certain properties in Long Pointe Parish were purchased and were under contract to be divided into lots, etc., and sold. He alleges that a different disposition was made of said lands and claims ten per cent. commission on the sale price of $1,000,000.

Rowdyism at Sandpoint.

Sandpoint, Ont., Aug. 9.—Harvesters passing through here Friday to the west were guilty of wanton rowdyism. An excursion train was brought to a stop near the place by having the cars disabled, and stores were broken into and robbed. Stones were thrown at sectionmen at work and women in the town were made the targets for insulting language.

For fifteen minutes the town was in the power of the toughs. One woman drove them out of her place with a revolver, but in most cases the citizens were terrorized.

Coal Merchants Want Rebate.

Winnipeg, Aug. 9.—Local coal dealers left last night for Ottawa to ask that the removal of the duty on coal from the south be made retroactive. Numerous dealers brought in many thousands of tons just previous to the removal of the duty and they are now seeking to have this money refunded.

GRAHAM IS NOMINATED

All Classes Rally Around the Railway Minister

MANUFACTURERS ENLISTED

Brockville, Ont., Aug. 9.—Brockville was in the throes of political excitement yesterday, with two conventions on at the same hour in different portions of the town. The result of the deliberations of these bodies, both numerously attended, was that Hon G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, will again lead the Liberal forces, and John Webster, commission merchant, will oppose him on behalf of the Conservative party.

Farmers, manufacturers and artisans acclaimed reciprocity at the big enthusiastic convention which again nominated Hon. George P. Graham. It was noteworthy that the voice of every interest was raised enthusiastically in support of laurier and larger markets. The voice of the manufacturers was dominant and significant. Among the speakers were John Gill president of the James Smart Manufacturing Co.; W. C. McLaren of Halls, Ltd.; James Cumming of the Canadian Millers, and others.

HON. G. P. GRAHAM.

The City Hall was thronged with electors before the hour of commencement, and the arrival of Hon George P. Graham and Hon. Charles Murphy was greeted with great enthusiasm. A feature of the gathering was the presence of certain lifelong Conservatives who have extended their support to the Minister of Railways on the present occasion.

The convention devoted itself solely to reciprocity. The nomination of Hon. Mr. Graham by Messrs. W. H. Comstock, ex-M.P.P., Jesse Manhard and Mayor Patterson was received with prolonged enthusiasm. The choice was unanimously endorsed.

To-day Mr. Webster was made the unanimous choice, and on his behalf Andrew Broder, M.P., Morrisburg, A. E. Donovan, M.P.P., and H. A. Stewart, K.C., delivered addresses.

Donald Sutherland Chosen.

Woodstock, Ont., Aug. 9.—Donald Sutherland, director of colonization for the Ontario Government, will represent the Conservatives of South Oxford in the coming Dominion elections. Mr. Sutherland was the unanimous choice of the convention, which was held at Mount Elgin yesterday.

Carrick For Rainy River.

London, Aug. 9.—J. J. Carrick, the Ontario M.P.P., says he has been considering since Thursday whether to accept the nomination for the Thunder Bay and Rainy River district Yesterday, after the receipt of cablegrams from R. L. Borden and Hon Mr. Cochrane, he decided to accept He sails on the Royal George to-day

Assumes Reins of Office.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Dr. Beland was sworn in at Murray Bay yesterday as Postmaster-General by Earl Grey, according to a private despatch which was received by a prominent Liberal No confirmation has been received. Mr. Lemieux, who was in the city yesterday morning for a short time, on Government business, returned to Ottawa yesterday afternoon.

Borden Opens Aug. 15.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—R. L. Borden will open his campaign in London on the 15th, the day selected for the Laurier meeting at Simcoe. The Ontario itinerary arranged for Mr. Borden and sanctioned by him yesterday, is as follows: London, Aug. 15; Chatham, 16th; Simcoe, 17th; Woodstock, 18th; Palmerston, 19th; Berlin, 21st; Owen Sound 22nd; Toronto, 23rd; Peterboro 24th, Campbellford, 25th, Napanee 26th, Brockville, 28th.

Challenges Bourassa.

St. Hyacinthe, Que., Aug. 9.—Hon Rodolphe Lemieux will be the chief speaker at the St. Hyacinthe meeting next Sunday, and as H. M. Beauparlant, ex-M.P. for the county, has issued a challenge to Mr. Bourassa, who is the local member for the same constituency, to be present and discuss the political issues of the day the situation becomes interesting. Has given that the Nationalist Chieftain has openly charged, in Le Devoir, that the Postmaster-General has evaded him.

Liberal Convention at Montealm.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—The Liberals of Montcalm will hold their convention at St. Julienne next Thursday, Aug. 15.

EXPECT BIG CROP

Toronto Grain Men Say West Will Break All Records

NOT AFRAID OF RUST

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Reports from the Canadian West up to last week were of the most encouraging nature, and it is only during the last few days that anything like a crop scare has been in effect. Now there is talk of black rust in the wheat, and particularly so in Southern Manitoba and Saskatchewan Provinces, in the vicinity of the international border line. The Chicago grain exchange has gone through the throes of a scare of this nature, and reports from the so-called crop experts sent out by the grain houses of Wall street, have been the factors on which the damage has been based.

The time has passed when the action of the grain exchanges could be taken as an absolute criterion of crop prospects, however, and local grain men and bankers are not disposed to view the movement of prices as of anything more than passing importance, relying altogether on the statement of their own men in the field, and on the opinion of the farming community at large.

Some rust damage has been conceded in Southern Manitoba, but despite this fact no apprehension is felt by local authorities on the crop situation. It is pointed out that the wheat has advanced to a stage where there is not likely to be any material damage occasioned by the pest, and that, with fair weather from now on to harvest, a new record for production should be established.

The consensus of opinion is that the crop will even surpass the big estimates made by such authorities as Sir William Whyte of the C.P.R., who stated that the yield should approximate nearly 200,000,000 bushels. Estimates far and above this were the rule rather than the exception among the grain men, and an average struck from some round dozen estimates ran into 217,000,000 bushels.

When it is remembered that the wheat in the Canadian West was only 117,000,000 bushels last year, the significance of this will be readily apparent.

ON LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Niobe Cadets Are Taking Their Regular Vacation.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—Speaking with reference to the story of one of the Toronto cadets on the Niobe, that the boys were sent home at the expense of their own bank accounts, made up of half a dollar a week deducted from their pay, it was stated at the Naval Department yesterday, that the lads sent home from the Niobe were really enjoying their regular leave of absence.

As a matter of fact the Department was figuring out how the lads could be grouped for leave of absence, so as not to have too many at one time, when the accident to the Niobe occurred, making it necessary to send them all ashore. In this was found a solution of the problem, and the whole contingent was given leave of absence.

In the case of leave of absence the cadet pays his own travelling expenses up to a limit of $9, the Government paying the balance, if this figure is exceeded. This was done in the case of the Niobe cadets, it was affirmed by the naval officials.

Big Industrial Plant Closes.

Halifax, Aug. 9.—Instructions have been received from Montreal to close down the mines of the Canada Iron Corporation at Torbrook. As the pumps are being taken up, it is probable that work will not be resumed again this season.

The reason given for closing the mine is that the industrial depression in the United States, where half the blast furnaces are idle, is resting upon the country.

Settling Carpenters' Strike.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—The harbor commissioners have signed the agreement with the carpenters' union calling for a 30 cent per hour wage all through the winter months, and yesterday 150 men returned to work at the new elevator now in course of construction at the harbor.

There now only remains the firm of Peter Lyall & Sons to sign, when the carpenters' strike will be a thing of the past.

Senator Fry Dead.

Lewiston, Maine, Aug. 9.—William Pierce Fry, senior U. S. Senator from Maine, died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Helen White. The end came at 3.55 p.m. At his bedside were Mrs. White and his other daughter, Mrs. Alice Briggs, who also resides in Lewiston. Although he had been ill for a long time, death came suddenly.

Washington, Aug. 9.—The second international opium conference, which has been postponed several times will meet at The Hague, October 16. All of the powers interested have accepted that date and it is expected that the Netherlands Government will issue the invitations shortly.

That Interview With Fisher.

London, Aug. 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—W. T. Stead, referring to the Fisher interview, says he sent a proof of the interview to Fisher with a letter. Fisher, however, had apparently left London, and when two or three days later no reply was received, Stead assumed that silence gave consent to publish it. "It was because Fisher had been saying exactly this kind of thing ever since he came to England that I went to see him," added Stead.

Knights Templar at Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 9.—As representatives from the Preceptories from coast to coast, over 600 Knights Templar are assembling here as delegates to the convention of the Grand Priory of Canada. Every boat and train has been met by the Citizens' Band, which escorted the guests to their hotels. The city has been gaily decorated with bunting, and presents a pretty spectacle.

Toronto Men Fined.

London, Ont., Aug. 9.—A man named McFadden, of Toronto, attending the Old Boys' reunion, was fined by Police Magistrate Judd $25 for brutal treatment of a horse he was driving Monday night. His companion, Henderson, also of Toronto, was fined $10 for not attempting to stop McFadden's thrashing of the horse. Incidentally the magistrate gave the pair a terrific verbal scorching.

Steel Enquiry Held Up.

Washington, Aug. 9.—George W. Perkins, director of U. S. Steel Corporation, and the House Committee of Enquiry into the United Steel Corporation were deadlocked yesterday over the persistence of Chairman Stanley, of the committee, that the witness should answer questions relating to his participation in campaign contributions.

Is This a Union Bomb?

Chicago, Aug. 9.—A bomb partly destroyed the plant of the Victor Jensen Electrical Supply Co. on the south side yesterday. Windows within a block of the building were shattered by the force of the explosion. The firm employs non-union workmen, and the police believe that the labor unions are responsible for the explosion.

British Commons Cuts Off the Lords' Amendments

Borden Opens Aug. 15.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—R. L. Borden will open his campaign in London on the 15th, the day selected for the Laurier meeting at Simcoe. The Ontario itinerary arranged for Mr. Borden and announced by him yesterday, is as follows: London, Aug. 15; Chatham, 16th; Simcoe, 17th; Woodstock, 18th; Palmerston, 19th; Berlin, 21st; Owen Sound 22nd; Toronto, 23rd; Peterboro, 24th, Campbellford, 25th, Napanee 26th, Brockville, 28th.

Challenges Bourassa.

St. Hyacinthe, Que., Aug. 9.—Hon Rodolphe Lemieux will be the chief speaker at the St. Hyacinthe meeting next Sunday, and as H. M. Beauparlant, ex-M.P. for the county, has issued a challenge to Mr. Bourassa, who is the local member for the same constituency, to be present and discuss the political issues of the day the situation becomes interesting. For every past the Nationalist Captain has openly charged, in the House, that the Postmaster-General has evaded him.

Liberal Convention at Montcalm.

EXPECT BIG CROP

Toronto Grain Men Say West Will Break All Records

NOT AFRAID OF RUST

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Reports from the Canadian West up to last week were of the most encouraging nature, and it is only during the last few days that anything like a crop scare has been in effect. Now there is talk of black rust in the wheat, and particularly so in Southern Manitoba and Saskatchewan Provinces, in the vicinity of the international border line. The Chicago grain exchange has gone through the throes of a mare of this nature, and reports from the so-called crop experts sent out by the grain houses of Wall street, have been the factors on which the damage has been based.

The time has passed when the action of the grain exchanges could be taken as an absolute criterion of crop prospects, however, and local grain men and bankers are not disposed to view the movement of prices as of anything more than passing importance, relying altogether on the statement of their own men in the field, and on the opinion of the farming community at large.

Some rust damage has been conceded in Southern Manitoba, but despite this fact no apprehension is felt by local authorities on the crop situation. It is pointed out that the wheat has advanced to a stage where there is not likely to be any material damage occasioned by the pest, and that, with fair weather from now on to harvest, a new record for production should be established.

The consensus of opinion is that the crop will even surpass the big estimates made by such authorities as Sir William Whyte of the C.P.R., who stated that the yield should approximate nearly 200,000,000 bushels. Estimates far and above this were the rule rather than the exception among the grain men, and an average struck from some round dozen estimates ran into 217,000,000 bushels.

When it is remembered that the wheat in the Canadian West was only 117,000,000 bushels last year, the significance of this will be readily apparent.

ON LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Niobe Cadets Are Taking Their Regular Vacation.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—Speaking with reference to the story of one of the Toronto cadets on the Niobe, that the boys were sent home at the expense of their own bank accounts, made up of half a dollar a week deducted from their pay, it was stated at the Naval Department yesterday, that the lads went home from the Niobe were really enjoying their regular leave of absence.

As a matter of fact the Department was figuring out how the lads could be grouped for leave of absence, so as not to have too many at one time, when the accident to the Niobe occurred, making it necessary to send them all ashore. In this was found a solution of the problem, and the whole contingent was given leave of absence.

In the case of leave of absence the cadet pays his own traveling expenses up to a limit of $9, the Government paying the balance, if this figure is exceeded. This was done in the case of the Niobe cadets, it was affirmed by the naval official.

Big Industrial Plant Closes.

Halifax, Aug. 9.—Instructions have been received from Montreal to close down the mines of the Canada Iron Corporation at Torbrook. As the pumps are being taken up, it is probable that work will not be resumed again this season.

The reason given for closing the mine is that the industrial depression in the United States, where half the blast furnaces are idle, is reacting upon the country.

Settling Carpenters' Strike.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—The harbor commissioners have signed the agreement with the carpenters' union calling for a 35 cent per hour wage all through the winter months, and yesterday 150 men returned to work at the new elevator now in course of construction at the harbor.

There now only remains the firm of Peter Lyall & Sons to sign, when the carpenters' strike will be a thing of the past.

Senator Fry Dead.

Lewiston, Maine, Aug. 9.—William Pierce Fry, senior U. S. Senator from Maine, died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Helen White. The end came at 3.55 p.m. At his bedside were Mrs. White and his other daughter, Mrs. Alice Briggs, who also resides in Lewiston. Although he had been ill for a long time, death came suddenly.

International Opium Conference.

Washington, Aug. 9.—The second international opium conference, which has been postponed several times will meet at The Hague, October 15. All of the powers interested have accepted that date and it is expected that the Netherlands Government will issue the invitations shortly.

That Interview With Fisher.

London, Aug. 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—W. T. Stead, referring to the Fisher interview, says he sent a proof of the interview to Fisher with a letter. Fisher, however, had apparently left London, and when two or three days later no reply was received, Stead assumed that silence gave consent to publish it. "It was because Fisher had been saying exactly this kind of thing ever since he came to England that I went to see him," added Stead.

Knights Templar at Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 9.—As representatives from the Preceptories from coast to coast, over 600 Knights Templar are assembling here as delegates to the convention of the Grand Priory of Canada. Every boat and train has been met by the Citizens' Band, which escorted the guests to their hotels. The city has been gaily decorated with bunting, and presents a pretty spectacle.

Toronto Men Fined.

London, Ont., Aug. 9.—A man named McFadden, of Toronto, attending the Old Boys' reunion, was fined by Police Magistrate Judd $25 for brutal treatment of a horse he was driving Monday night. His companion, Henderson, also of Toronto, was fined $10 for not attempting to stop McFadden's thrashing of the horse. Incidentally the magistrate gave the pair a terrific verbal scorching.

Steel Enquiry Held Up.

Washington, Aug. 9.—George W. Perkins, director of U. S. Steel Corporation, and the House Committee of Enquiry into the United Steel Corporation were deadlocked yesterday over the persistence of Chairman Stanley, of the committee, that the witness should answer questions relating to his participation in campaign contributions.

Is This a Union Bomb?

Chicago, Aug. 9.—A bomb partly destroyed the plant of the Victor Jensen Electrical Supply Co. on the south side yesterday. Windows within a block of the building were shattered by the force of the explosion. The firm employs non-union workmen, and the police believe that the labor unions are responsible for the explosion.

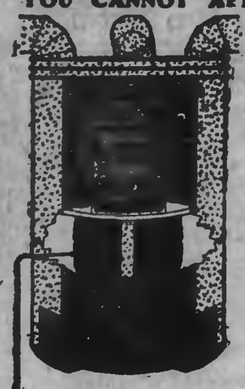
A FURNACE THAT WILL GIVE YOU AS MUCH HEAT FROM SIX TONS OF COAL, AS YOU EVER GOT FROM SEVEN, IS ONE YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO OVERLOOK.



The "Hecla" will do this: It is built to save coal at every point, but the big coal-saving feature is the Steel Ribbed Fire Pot. By adding Steel Ribs to the Fire Pot the surface which radiates heat is increased three times.

Every Furnace has flanges or projections of some sort on the fire pot to get more radiating surface, because the heating capacity of the fire pot increases as you increase the radiating surface. But the "Hecla" is the only Furnace that has attained the greatest possible radiating surface and the reason is that where other Furnaces have clumsy cast-iron Flanges, the flanges on the "Hecla" are made of steel plate and fused to the fire pot casting by our patent process.

STEEL RIBBED FIRE POT
Constructed to save Fuel
Flanges of steel plate—97 in number—are fused into the Fire Pot casting, increasing the radiating surface three times. This gives the air better access to the source of heat so that the heat is conducted away from the coal as rapidly as it is created and without waste.

"Hecla" Furnace

A test extending over three years, demonstrated that this ribbed fire pot made a saving in coal—18%.

Isn't that worth looking into?

Ask someone who owns a "Hecla."

You will find the "Hecla" the best warm air Furnace you ever saw. You will find that it gives an even distribution of heat—heat that is moist and free from gas or dust.

You will find the "Hecla" a Furnace easy to run. One that does not waste live coals when you shake it down. You will find a Furnace that burns wood or coal equally well.

By JACK LONDON

And in that tense moment the faces of all of them were imprinted on her mind in an unforgettable picture—one of them, an old man, with torn and distended ear-lobes that fell to his chest; another, with the broad flattened nose of Africa, and with withered eyes so buried under frowning brows that nothing but the sickly, yellowish looking whites could be seen; a third, thick-lipped and bearded with kinky whiskers; and Gogoomy — she had never realised before how handsome Gogoomy was, in his mutinous and obstinate wild-animal way. There was a primitive aristocraticness about him that his fellows lacked. The lines of his figure were more rounded than theirs, the skin smooth, well-oiled, and free from disease. On his chest, suspended from a single string of porpoise teeth around his throat, hung a big crescent carved out of opalescent pearl-shell. A row of pure white cowrie shells banded his brow. From his hair drooped a long, lone feather. Above the swelling calf of one leg he wore, as a garter, a single string of white beads. The effect was dandyish in the extreme. A narrow gee-string completed his costume. Another man she saw, old and shrivelled, with puckered forehead and a puckered face that trembled and worked with animal passion as in the past she had noticed the faces of monkeys tremble and work.

"Gogoomy," she said sharply, "you no cut 'm grass, my word, I bang 'm head belong you."

His expression became a trifle more disdainful, but he did not answer. Instead, he stole a glance to right and left to mark how his fellows were closing about her. At the same moment he casually slipped his foot forward through the grass for a matter of several inches.

Joan was keenly aware of the desperateness of the situation. The only way out was through. She lifted her riding-whip threateningly, and at the same moment drove in both spurs with her heels, rushing the startled horse straight at Gogoomy. It all happened in an instant. Every cane-knife was lifted, and every boy save Gogoomy leaped for her. He swerved aside to avoid the horse, at the same time swinging his cane-knife in a slicing blow that would have cut her in twain. She leaned forward under the flying steel, which cut through her riding-skirt, through the edge of the saddle, through the saddle-cloth, and even slightly into the horse itself. Her right hand, still raised, came down, the thin whip whishing through the air. She saw the white, cooked mark of the weal clear across the sullen, handsome face, and still what was practically in the same instant she saw the man with the puckered face, over-ridden, go down before her, and she heard his snarling and grimacing chatter—for all the world like an angry monkey. Then she was free and away, heading the horse at top speed for the house.

Out of her sea-training she was able to appreciate Sheldon's executiveness when she burst in on him with her news. Springing from the steamer chair in which he had been lounging while waiting for breakfast, he clapped his hands for the house-boys; and, while listening to her, he was buckling on his cartridge-belt and running the mechanism of his automatic pistol.

"Ornfiri," he snapped out his orders, "you fella ring big fella bell strong fella plenty. You finish 'm bell you put 'm saddle' on horse. Visiturl, you go quick house belong Seelee he stop, tell 'm plenty black fella run away—ten fella two fella black fella boy." He scribbled a note and handed it to Lalaperu. "Lalaperu, you go quick house belong white fella marster Boucher."

Eczema Worse in the Spring

The Blood is Watery—Difficult to Get the Healing Process Started.

But Whatever the Cause You Can Relieve the Itching and Heal the Sores With

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Salt rheum and eczema are usually worse at this time of year because of the sudden change of temperature and the watery condition of the blood.

It is not necessary to refer to the suffering caused from the intense itching nor to the tendency of these ailments. The essential point is how to bring about cure, and if you have been reading the cures reported from time to time in this paper you will already know that there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema, salt rheum, psoriasis and every form of itching skin diseases.

This ointment stops the itching almost as soon as applied, lessens the discharge from the vesicles or blisters, cleans out the morbid growth and stimulates the process of healing.

Because other treatments have failed, you may feel discouraged. But in Dr. Chase's Ointment there is a cure for you. We know this because of the reports we have received from so many thousands of cases.

For instance, there is the cure of Mrs. Nettie Massey, of Consecon, Ont., who had psoriasis or chronic eczema so bad that almost the whole body was covered with sores, and three doctors failed to cure her. One doctor said she could never be cured. Write to Mrs. Massey about her case.

OWES HER HEALTH

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Scottville, Mich.—"I want to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done me. I live on a farm and have worked very hard. I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not broken down with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them of my good friend, your Vegetable Compound, and that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take it as I have. I am scarcely ever without it in the house.

"I will say also that I think there is no better medicine to be found for young girls to build them up and make them strong and well. My eldest daughter has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for painful periods and irregularity, and it has always helped her.

"I am always ready and willing to speak a good word for the Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies. I tell every one I meet that I owe my health and happiness to these wonderful medicines."—Mrs. J. G. Johnson, Scottville, Mich., R.F.D. 8.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases.

"That will head them back from the coast on both sides," he explained to Joan. "And old Seelee will turn his whole village loose on their track as well."

In response to the summons of the big bell, Joan's Tahitians were the first to arrive, by their glistening bodies and panting chests showing that they had run all the way. Some of the farthest-placed gangs would be nearly an hour in arriving.

Sheldon proceeded to arm Joan's sailors and deal out ammunition and handcuffs. Adamu Adam, with loaded rifle, he placed on guard over the whale-boats. Noa Noah, aided by Matapuu, were instructed to take charge of the working gangs as fast as they came in, to keep them amused, and to guard against their being stampeded into making a break themselves. The five other Tahitians were to follow Joan and Sheldon on foot.

"I'm glad we unearthed that arsenal the other day," Sheldon remarked as they rode out of the compound gate.

A hundred yards away they encountered one of the clearing gangs coming in. It was Kwaque's gang, but Sheldon looked in vain for him.

"What name that fella Kwaque he no stop along you?" he demanded.

"Shut 'm mouth belong you altogether," Sheldon commanded.

He spoke roughly, living up to the role of the white man who must always be strong and dominant.

"Here, you fella Babatani, you talk 'm mouth belong you."

"Gogoomy he finish along Kwaque altogether," was Babatani's explanation. "He take 'm head b'long him run like hell."

In brief words, and with paucity of imagination, he described the murder, and Sheldon and Joan rode on. In the grass, where Joan had been attacked, they found the little shrivelled man, still chattering and grimacing, whom Joan had ridden down. The mare had plunged on his ankle, completely crushing it, and a hundred yards' crawl had convinced him of the futility of escape. To the last clearing gang, from the farthest edge of the plantation, was given the task of carrying him into the house.

A mile farther on, where the runaways' trail led straight toward the bush, they encountered the body of Kwaque. The head had been hacked off and was missing, and Sheldon took it on faith that the body was Kwaque's. He had evidently put up a fight, for a bloody trail led away from the body.

Once they were well into the thick bush, the horses had to be abandoned. Papehara was left in charge of them, while Joan and Sheldon and the remaining Tahitians pushed ahead on foot. The way led down through a swampy hollow, which was overflowed by the Berande River on occasion, and where the red trail of the murderess was crossed by a crocodile's trail. They had apparently caught the creature asleep in the sun and desisted long enough from their flight to hack him to pieces. Here the wounded man had sat down and waited until they were ready to go on.

An hour later, following along a wild-pig trail, Sheldon suddenly halted. The bloody tracks had ceased. The Tahitians cast out in the bush on either side, and a cry from Utami apprised them of a find. Joan waited till Sheldon came back.

"It's Mauko," he said. "Kwaque did for him, and he crawled in there and died. That's two accounted for. There are ten more. Don't you think you've got enough of it?"

She nodded.

"It isn't nice," she said. "I'll go back and wait for you with the horses."

"But you can't go alone. Take two of the men."

"Then I'll go on," she said. "It would be foolish to weaken the pursuit, and I am certainly not tired."

The trail bent to the right as though the runaways had changed their minds and headed for the Balesuna. But the trail still continued to bend to the right till it promised to make a loop, and the point of intersection seemed to be the edge of the plantation where the horses had been left. Crossing one of the quiet jungle spaces, where naught moved but a velvety, twelve-inch butterfly, they heard the sound of shots.

"Eight," Joan counted. "It was only one gun. It must be Papehara."

They hurried on, but when they reached the spot they were in doubt. The two horses stood quietly tethered, and Papehara, squatted on his hams, was having a peaceful smoke. Advancing toward him, Sheldon tripped on a body that lay in the grass, and as he saved himself from falling, his eyes lighted on a second. Joan recognised this one. It was Cease, one of Gogoomy's tribesmen, the one who had promised to catch at sunset the pig that was to have baited the hook for Satan.

"No luck, Missie," was Papehara's greeting, accompanied by a disconsolate shake of the head. "Catch only two boy. I have good shot at Gogoomy, only I miss."

"But you killed them," Joan chided. "You must catch them alive."

The Tahitian smiled.

"How?" he queried. "I am have a smoke. I think about Tahiti, and breadfruit, and jolly good time at Bora Bora. Quick, just like that, ten boy he run out of bush for me. Each boy have long knife. Gogoomy have long knife one hand, and Kwaque's head in other hand. I no stop to catch 'em alive. I shoot like hell. How you catch 'em alive, ten boy, ten long knife, and Kwaque's head?"

The scattered paths of the different boys, where they broke back after the disastrous attempt to rush the Tahitian, soon led together. They traced it to the Berande, which the runaways had crossed with the clear intention of burying themselves in the huge mangrove swamp that lay beyond.

"There is no use our going any farther," Sheldon said. "Seelee will turn out his village and hunt them out of that. They'll never get past him. All we can do is to guard the coast and keep them from breaking back on the plantation and running amuck. Ah, I thought so."

Against the jungle gloom of the farther shore, coming from downstream, a small canoe glided. So silently did it move that it was more like an apparition. Three naked blacks dipped with noiseless paddles. Long-hafted, slender, bone-barbed throwing-spears lay along the gunwale of the canoe, while a quiverful of arrows hung on each man's back. The eyes of the man-hunters missed nothing. They had seen Sheldon and Joan first, but they gave no sign. Where Gogoomy and his followers had emerged from the river, the canoe abruptly stopped, then turned and disappeared into the deeper mangrove-gloom. A second and a third canoe came around the bend from below, glided ghostlike to the crossing of the runaways, and vanished in the mangroves.

"I hope there won't be any more killing," Joan said, as they turned their horses homeward.

"I don't think so," Sheldon assured her. "My understanding with old Seelee is that he is paid only for live boys; so he is very careful."

CHAPTER XXIII
A MESSAGE FROM THE BUSH

Never had runaways from Berande been more zealously hunted. The deeds of Gogoomy and his fellows had been a bad example for the one hundred and fifty new recruits. Murder had been planned, a gang-boss had been killed, and the murderers had broken their contracts by fleeing to the bush. Sheldon saw how imperative it was to teach his new-caught cannibals that bad examples were disastrous things to pattern after, and he urged Seelee on night and day, while with the Tahitians he practically lived in the bush, leaving Joan in charge of the plantation. To the north, Boucher did good work, twice turning the fugitives back when they attempted to gain the coast.

One by one the boys were captured. In the first man-drive through the mangrove swamp Seelee caught two. Circling around to the north, a third was wounded in the thigh by Boucher, and this one, dragging behind in the chase, was later gathered in by Seelee's hunters. The three captives, heavily ironed, were exposed each day in the compound, as good examples of what happened to bad examples, all for the edification of the seven score and ten half-wild Poonga-Poonga men. Then the Minerva, running past for Tulagi, was signalled to send a boat, and the three prisoners were carried away to prison to await trial.

Five were still at large, but escape was impossible. They could not get down to the coast, nor dared they venture too far inland for fear of the wild bushmen. Then one of the five came in voluntarily and gave himself up, and Sheldon learned that Gogoomy and two others were all that were at large. There should have been a fourth, but according to the man who had given himself up, the fourth man had been killed and eaten. It had been fear of a similar fate that had driven him in. He was a Malu man, from northwestern Malaita, as likewise had been the one that was eaten: Gogoomy's two other companions were from Port Adams. As for himself, the black declared his preference for government trial and punishment to being eaten by his companions in the bush.

"Close up Gogoomy kai-kai me," he said. "My word, me no like boy kai-kai me."

Three days later, Sheldon caught one of the boys, helpless from swamp fever and unable to fight or run away. On the same day Seelee caught the second boy, in similar condition. Gogoomy alone remained at large; and, as the pursuit closed in on him, he conquered his fear of the bushmen and headed straight in for the mountainous backbone of the island. Sheldon with four Tahitians, and Seelee with thirty of his hunters, followed Gogoomy's trail a dozen miles into the open grass lands; and then Seelee and his people lost heart. He confessed that neither he nor any of his tribe had ever ventured so far inland before, and he narrated, for Sheldon's benefit, most horrible tales of the horrible bushmen. In the old days, he said, they had crossed the grass lands and attacked the salt-water natives; but since the coming of the white men to the coast they had remained in their interior fastnesses, and no salt-water native had ever seen them again.

"Gogoomy he finish along them fella bushmen," he assured Sheldon. "My word, he finish close up, kai-kai altogether."

So the expedition turned back. Nothing could persuade the coast natives to venture farther, and Sheldon, with his four Tahitians, knew that it was madness to go on alone. So he stood waist-deep in the grass and looked regretfully across the rolling savannah and the soft-swelling foothills to the Lion's Head, a massive peak of rock that upreared into the azure from the midmost centre of Guadalcanar, a landmark used for bearings by every coasting mariner, a mountain as yet untrod by the foot of white man.

That night, after dinner, Sheldon and Joan were playing billiards, when Satan barked in the compound, and Lalaperu, sent to see, brought back a tired and travel-stained native who wanted to talk with the "big fella white marster." It was only the man's insistence that procured him admittance at such an hour. Sheldon went out on the veranda to see him, and, at first glance at the gaunt features and wasted body of the man, knew that his errand was likely to prove important. Nevertheless, Sheldon demanded roughly:

"What name you come along house belong me sun he go down?"

"Me Charley," the man muttered apologetically and wearily. "Me stop along Binu."

"Ah, Binu Charley, eh? Well, what name you talk along me? What place big fella marster along white man he stop?"

Joan and Sheldon together listened to the tale Binu Charley had brought. He described Tudor's expedition up the Balesuna, the dragging of the boats up the rapids, the passage up the river where it threaded the grass lands, the innumerable washings of gravel by the white men in search of gold, the first rolling foothills, the man-traps of spear-staked pits in the jungle trails, the first meeting with the bushmen who had never seen tobacco and knew not the virtues of smoking, their friendliness, the deeper penetration of the interior around the flanks of the Lion's Head, the bush-sores and the fevers of the white men, and their madness in trusting the bushmen.

"Allee time I talk along white fella marster," he said. "Me talk: 'That fella bushman he look 'm eye belong him. He savvee too much. S'pose musket he stop along you, that fella bushman he too much good friend along you. Allee time he look sharp eye belong him. S'pose musket he no stop along you, my word, that fella bushman he chop 'm off head belong you. He kai-kai you altogether'."

But the patience of the bushmen had exceeded that of the white men. The weeks had gone by, and no overt acts had been attempted. The bushmen swarmed in the camp in increasing numbers, and they were always making presents of yams and taro, of pig and fowl, and of wild fruits and vegetables. Whenever the gold-hunters moved their camp, the bushmen volunteered to carry the luggage. And the white men waxed ever more careless. They ever grew weary prospecting and at the same time carrying their rifles and the heavy cartridge-belts, and the practice began of leaving their weapons behind them in camp.

"I tell 'm plenty fella white marster look sharp eye belong him. And plenty fella white marster make 'm big laugh along me, say Binu Charley allee same pickaninny—my word, they speak along me allee same pickaninny."

Came the morning when Binu Charley noticed that the women and children had disappeared. Tudor, at the time, was lying in a stupor with fever in a late camp five miles away, the main camp having moved on those five miles in order to prospect an outcrop of likely quartz. Binu Charley was midway between the two camps when the absence of the women and children struck him as suspicious.

"My word," he said, "me t'ink like hell. Him black Mary, him pickaninny, walk about long way big bit. What name? Me savvee too much trouble close up. Me fright like hell. Me run. My word, me run."

Tudor, quite unconscious, was slung across his shoulder and carried a mile down the trail. Here, hiding new trail, Binu Charley had carried him for a quarter of a mile into the heart of the deepest jungle and hidden him in a big banyan tree. Returning to try to save the rifles and personal outfit, Binu Charley had seen a party of bushmen trotting down the trail, and had hidden in the bush. Here, and from the direction of the main camp, he had heard two rifle shots. And that was all. He had never seen the white men again, nor had he ventured near their old camp. He had gone back to Tudor, and hidden with him for a week, living on wild fruits and the few pigeons and cockatoos he had been able to shoot with bow and arrow. Then he had journeyed down to Betande to bring the news. Tudor, he said, was very sick, lying unconscious for days at a time, and, when in his right mind, too weak to help himself.

"What name you no kill 'm that big fella marster?" Joan demanded. "He have 'm good fella musket, plenty calico, plenty tobacco, plenty knife-fee, and two fella pickaninny musket shoot quick, bang-bang-bang — just like that."

The black smiled cunningly.

"Me savvee too much. S'pose me kill 'm big fella marster, bime by plenty white fella marster walk about Binu cross like hell. 'What name this fella musket?' those plenty fella white marster talk 'm along me. My word Binu Charley finish altogether. S'pose me no kill 'm him, bime by he give me plenty tobacco, plenty calico, plenty everything too much."

"There is only the one thing to do," Sheldon said to Joan.

She drummed with her hand and waited, while Binu Charley gazed wearily at her with unblinking eyes.

"I'll start the first thing in the morning," Sheldon said.

"We'll start," she corrected. "I can get twice as much out of my Tahitians as you can, and, besides, one white should never be alone under such circumstances."

He shrugged his shoulders in token, not of consent, but of surrender, knowing the uselessness of attempting to argue the question with her, and consoling himself with the reflection that heaven alone knew what adventures she was liable to engage in if left alone on Berande for a week. He clapped his hands, and for the next quarter of an hour the house-boys were kept busy carrying messages to the barracks. A man was sent to Balesuna village to command old Seelee's immediate presence. A boat's crew was started in a whale-boat with word for Boucher to come down. Ammunition was issued to the Tahitians, and the store-room overhauled for a few days' tinned provisions. Visburi turned yellow when told that he was to accompany the expedition, and, to everybody's surprise, Lalaperu volunteered to take his place.

Seelee arrived, proud in his importance that the great master of Berande should summon him in the night-time for council, and firm in his refusal to step one inch within the dread domain of the bushmen. As he said, if his opinion had been asked when the gold hunters started, he would have foretold their disastrous end. There was only one thing that happened to any one who ventured into the bushmen's territory, and that was that he was eaten. And he would further say, without being asked, that if Sheldon went up into the bush, he would be eaten, too.

Sheldon sent for a gang-boss and told him to bring ten of the biggest, best, and strongest Poonga-Poonga men.

"Not salt-water boys," Sheldon cautioned, "but bush-boys—leg belong him strong fella leg. Boy no savvee musket, no good. You bring 'm shoot musket strong fella."

They were ten picked men that filed up on the veranda and stood in the glare of the lanterns. Their heavy, muscular legs advertised that they were bushmen. Each claimed long experience in bush-fighting, most of them showed scars of bullet or spear-thrust in proof, and all were wild for a chance to break the humdrum monotony of plantation labor by going on a killing expedition. Killing was their natural vocation, not weed-cutting; and, while they would not have ventured the Guadalcanar bush alone, with a white man like Sheldon behind them, and a white Mary such as they knew Joan to be, they could expect a safe and delightful time. Besides, the great master had told them that the eight gigantic Tahitians were going along.

The Poonga-Poonga volunteers stood with glistening eyes and grinning faces, naked, save for their loin-cloths, and barbarously ornamented. Each wore a flat, turtle-shell ring suspended through his nose, and each carried a clay-pipe in an ear-hole or thrust inside a beaded biceps-armlet. A pair of magnificent boar tusks graced the chest of one. On the chest of another hung a huge disk of polished fossil clamshell. "Plenty strong fella fight," Sheldon warned them in conclusion.

They grinned and shifted delightedly.

"S'pose bushmen kai-kai along you?" he queried.

"No fear," answered their spokesman, one Koogoo, a strapping, thick-lipped ethiopian-looking man. S'pose Poonga-Poonga boy kai-kai bush-boy?"

Sheldon shook his head, laughing, and dismissed them, and went to overhaul the dunnage-room for a small shelter-tent for Joan's use.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD NON-ELECT?

Our Friends, Neighbors, Holy, Unholy, Civilized, Vile?

Galesburg, Ill., August 6.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn, and now also of London, delivered addresses to large audiences at the Galesburg Chautauqua to-day. His topics were, "Where are the Dead?" and "The Judgment of the Great White Throne." We report the former. Each address lasted for nearly two hours, but so deeply interested were the audiences that they seemed not to note the flight of time. He said:

No other question could be of deeper interest to thinking people than the one now before us—"Where Are the Dead?" Our ancestors, our neighbors, our friends, are dead or dying, and ourselves with them. What will be our condition when the spark of life flickers out? I have no new revelation on this subject. I have merely for my guide what is recognised by all Christians as the Divine revelation on this subject—the Bible. I hold that there is no other source of information comparable to it.

Before presenting his own findings on the subject, in the Bible, Pastor Russell reviewed the findings of others—Christian in general. The agnostic view, that there is no life beyond the tomb, he could not entertain. He believed that man's organism, so much higher than that of the brute, implies not only an all-wise Creator, but His benevolent intention for man's future. He examined the Catholic view, and, while according full liberty to every Catholic to believe what to him seems reasonable respecting the dead, Pastor Russell could not agree with Roman Catholic teachings. He summarised their view to be that a very saintly few were fit for heaven and that they went thither. He complimented the justice of their intentions, that a comparatively small number of humanity were worthy of eternal torture.

For his own part, he could not imagine any human being, on account of any human weakness or depravity, as meriting endless torture. The Catholic view, that all heathen and practically all Protestants and Catholics go in death to purgatory, he could not agree with for two reasons. First, he finds no Scriptural authority for such a view, and secondly, his mind cannot accept the thought that an all-wise, all-just, all-loving and powerful Creator will torture His creatures for centuries in any such manner as Catholics generally believe, and as Dante's great poem, "Inferno," so graphically depicts.

Pastor Russell declared that he was a Protestant, in large measure because his parents were such. But he declared that while he took many truths both in Protestants and in Catholic teachings he considers that the Protestant view respecting the hereafter of the dead the most diabolical conception to be found on the face of the earth, the grossest blasphemy against the Divine character and provision for humanity. Had he nothing better to offer he would not be addressing his audience on the subject.

Perplexed and disconcerted by his early teachings, he had, when a youth, discarded all human creeds and the Bible as well—believing that the latter was the basis for the former. It was a happy day for him when he learned that this was a mistake—when he learned that the creeds of the Dark Ages are diametrically opposed to the teachings of God's Word. Now this Bible has become to him a new book—the most wonderful book in the world. Its teachings he now sees to be, beyond all comparison, the most logical—the only rational presentation, and a most glorious one respecting man—explaining his past, present and future as prearranged by a wise, gracious and all-powerful Creator.

Protestant views respecting the hereafter are various, but two in particular represent Protestant thought in general: (1) The Calvinistic theory; (2) the Arminian theory.

Five centuries ago there were no Protestants—all were Catholics and believed in three places for the dead—heaven for the saintly few; Purgatory for the general mass of mankind; and hell, everlasting torture, for the incorrigible. Luther and coadjutors got to studying the Bible, and, finding nothing there respecting purgatory and mass for the dead, they threw these out. Figuratively, they smashed completely the idea of Purgatory. A little later they were perplexed and said to each other, We have smashed Purgatory, but now what shall we do with all these thousands of millions who have been there in our imagination for centuries—roasting, sizzling, and hoping some day to attain an eternity of bliss.

The thought of their responsibility in connection with the thousands of millions blanched their cheeks and made their hearts quail. They looked at each other in terrified bewilderment. Their noble, generous hearts led them to desire to put the whole mass directly into heaven, but, as they searched the Scriptures on the subject, they found, as they had always believed as Catholics, the Bible teaching that only the saintly, the footstep followers of Jesus, the "overcomers" of the world, are fit for the Kingdom of Heaven. In despair they said to each other, This leaves nothing for us to do but enlarge hell many times and stuff the entire mass therein, writing over the doorway, "Who enters here abandons hope." They did it, but it was a sorrowful matter, quite contrary to their generous hearts.

It was when the Reformers were feeling very sad for what they felt they had been obliged to do with the heathen and with their neighbors and friends and the vast majority of their own families, that Brother Calvin appeared. "Cheer up," said Calvin. "Of course we all are sorry, but it is not our fault. The shame of such a conclusion is not ours. I will show you the way out of the matter; charge the whole terrible business upon Almighty God! Say that He foreordained and predestinated things thus, and that we cannot help it!"

Pastor Russell said that these good men hesitated for a time about charging against God what they had been ashamed to acknowledge as their own plan and doing; but seeing no way out of the difficulty they finally agreed, and then extolled John Calvin as the greatest theologian the world had ever known. Calvin arranged the entire matter into a philosophy and his doctrine became the basis of all creeds of the Reformation period, including the Westminster Confession of Faith, which is generally acknowledged by Presbyterians, Baptists, etc. Thus, said Pastor Russell, we Protestants got our diabolical theory respecting the dead. We must confess that it is much worse than the theory of our Catholic friends. If we could not accept theirs because it was unloving, unmerciful, unjust and ungodly, surely we cannot accept any longer our own.

The blessings of the Reformation were considerably overshadowed and handicapped by the great Calvinistic error of an all-powerful God, destitute of love, vindictive and devilish to a degree never approximated by any human degenerate. Centuries later that good man, John Wesley, appeared. His soul cried out against the injustice and lovelessness of Calvinism; and his claim that God is love has permeated Christendom to such an extent that even those denominations which confess the Westminster Confession of Faith and Calvinistic theories do not really believe it. We must love Brother Wesley for his largeness of heart even though we must confess that he had a less logical head than had Brother Calvin.

Brother Wesley and the majority of his followers failed to see the inconsistency of his claim that God is love, and yet nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand are to be eternally tormented—because the mass of them had never heard of "the only name whereby we must be saved"; and because others who had heard did not live contrary to their tendencies; did not live saintly lives!

Pastor Russell declared that Wesley and Calvin put exactly the same saintly few into heaven, and put all the remainder into eternal torment. Hence it was a mere question between these two men as to why this was so, and not as to the fact. Calvin said, "It is God's will and He foreordained it thus." Wesley said, "No, God is love, and love would never do thus. It was the result of Divine lack of wisdom in their creation, and lack of power to help after their creation. Hence the fate of the masses."

Pastor Russell said, There is a great mistake. None of these theories satisfy your heads and hearts, nor mine. The difficulty is that we have been trying to accept the errors of the Dark Ages instead of going clear back to and making our theology afresh from the words of Jesus, the Apostles and prophets. Let us do this now and find the beauty of the Divine Plan in the Bible, and a glorious Divine character such as we know it should have—far beyond human wisdom, justice, love and power. So the Lord says: "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways and My plans higher than your plans."

The Bible confirms the ablest findings of science when it tells us that the dead are dead and not alive at all, anywhere. The Scriptures declare, "The dead know not anything"; "their sons come to honor and they know it not; they come to dishonor but they perceive it not of them." Again the Bible says, "There is neither wisdom nor device nor knowledge in the grave (sheol, the Bible hell) whither thou goest" (Ecclesiastes ix. 10).

Where, my dear friends, is the key to the whole problem? The Bible hell is the grave, sheol, hades, the death state. The salvation which God has provided is the salvation from sin and from death. The hope set before us in the Gospel is—the resurrection of the dead. If anybody is dead there can be no resurrection of the dead. It is not the body which dies that God has promised shall be resurrected, but the soul. It was not Adam's body merely that was punished with death, but it was his soul, which involved the body and every power Adam possessed. All of his children have shared with him in his fall, in his death.

God's provision for the salvation of mankind is that "As by man came death (not eternal torment), by a man (the man Christ Jesus) comes also the resurrection of the dead. For as all in Adam die, so all in Christ shall be made alive" (I. Corinthians xv, 22).

Not only do the Scriptures clearly set forth that the wages of sin is death and that thus death passed upon the entire human race (Romans v, 12), but they also set forth that the redemption price which Jesus gave was death—"He poured out His soul unto death"; He made His soul an offering for sin (Isaiah liii, 10, 12).

As a result, "in due time," there will come a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust. By the just is meant those justified and brought into harmony with God through faith in Christ. By the unjust is meant all others. Thus the Church will share in the First Resurrection with Christ; these are the Elect of the Scriptures. Their resurrection and complete change of nature has already begun in them through the begetting of the Holy Spirit.

They will be like the angels and like Christ, who is the express image of the Father's nature. Like God and the angels they, as spirit beings, will be invisible to mankind. Those with their Lord and Head will set up the Kingdom of God—the Messianic Kingdom. "They will live and reign with Christ a thousand years." These are the saintly ones, a class recognised by Catholics and Protestants, by Luther, Calvin and Wesley. All are agreed respecting such a class. The entire point of discrimination is respecting the masses of our race for whom Christ died and for all of whom the various creeds provide torments unutterable, unthinkable.

Brothers Luther, Calvin and others, when they smashed purgatory as unscriptural, should have said, "We do not know where those poor creatures are whom we so long supposed were in purgatory." They should not have felt it incumbent upon them to enlarge hell and to put the thousands of millions out of purgatory into it. But, as a matter of fact, they all are in hell; the difference is that it is the hell of the Bible—the grave, the unconscious state of death, and not a place of suffering and torture.

Do not the Scriptures repeatedly tell you that the dead fall asleep? St Paul writes of those who fell asleep in Christ; and again, of those who "sleep in Jesus"; and again that all would sleep except those saints who would be changed in a moment, at the second coming of Messiah. Do not we read that St. Stephen, stone to death, fell asleep? Did not Jesus say, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth," and subsequently explain his meaning saying, "Lazarus is dead!" Do we not read that "Abraham slept with his fathers," and so of the kings and prophets and all, good and bad? Abraham's fathers, being heathen, none will claim that they sleep in heaven. Our Catholic friends will not claim that they sleep in purgatory, and surely nobody would claim that they could sleep in eternal torture. Where, then, do they sleep, and for how long? The Bible answers, "They that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake" (Daniel xii, 2). The Bible tells us that the weeping, sighing and dying of the present time will give place to a glorious morning of better things, the resurrection morning.

Pastor Russell disclaims Universalism; he cannot find it in the Bible, else he would preach it. He finds the Bible to teach a universal opportunity for salvation and everlasting life, but that the gift of God, eternal life, will be given only to those who will avail themselves of the opportunity. Upon all others will come the wages of sin, namely, death. Those who sin wilfully, preferring wrong to right, after being granted full opportunity for reformation, will be destroyed in the Second Death, utterly, as St. Peter declares, "like natural, brute beasts" (II. Peter ii, 12).

It was not in vain that the Redeemer taught us to pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." That glorious time will come when, as the Prophet declares, "Every knee shall bow and every tongue confess Messiah; and then the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth, as the waters cover the great deep; and when none shall need longer to say to his neighbor and his brother, Know thou the Lord, because all shall know Him. Then "they shall build houses and inhabit them, and plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them, and long enjoy the work of their hands." Then "the wilderness shall be glad and blossom as the rose"; and "the earth shall yield her increase"; and the Lord will make His earthly footstool glorious (Isaiah lx, 13). This is the hereafter which God has provided for the world of mankind in general.

But this long-promised restitution blessing to the world, lifting them up out of sin and death conditions, cannot come until first the Royal Priesthood shall have been selected. The election of the Church, in progress during this Gospel Age, is God's preparation for the blessing of mankind. The elect saints will be kings and priests, judges, etc., in association with Jesus for the uplifting of the thousands of millions of humanity—"in due time."

HASN'T SHE LOVELY HAIR!

How often have you heard this remark? Very often indeed: Everyone admires well kept, luxuriant hair because it is a real beauty in itself; and as Balzac says in his famous work on beautiful women:—"The soul of lovliness of a beautiful woman lies in the tresses of her hair."

Any woman can have beautiful hair if she will but give it proper care with a proper hair dressing. Sageine is such a dressing. It will bring life and beauty into dull faded hair and make it clean, fluffy and attractive.

Since the introduction of Sageine in America it has met with wonderful success and is the popular hair tonic with leading men and women everywhere.

SAGEINE is now obtainable in Peterborough at W. J. Kent's drug store. It is not sticky or greasy and is daintily perfumed. A large bottle costs only 50c. That Sageine will please you is our liberal guarantee. W. J. Kent Money back if it doesn't.

MY MOST EXCITING ADVENTURE

A Short Story.

(All rights reserved)

1—An incident in the Matabele War. By F. C. Selous, Author of "Sunshine and Storm in Rhodesia," etc.

Like all new countries Rhodesia has had a stirring and chequered history. Twice was its very existence as a British colony threatened by the brave and warlike savages whose supremacy had been challenged by the white settlers, and when after the rebellion of 1896, the natives were finally subdued, the fair land was time and again devastated, and its economic stability gravely strained by terrible cattle plagues, and the simultaneous devastations of unprecedented swarms of locusts.

Amongst all those who took part in the first occupation of Mashunaland, which may be called the founding of the colony of Rhodesia, it was a settled conviction that sooner or later they would have to try conclusions with Lo Bengula and his arrogant warriors. All South African history pointed that way, for neither in the Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange Free State or the Transvaal, has any warlike tribe ever submitted to the restraints necessarily enforced upon them by the near proximity of a civilised state, without an appeal to arms.

WAR BREAKS OUT

In December, 1891, Lo Magondi, a native chief, living about 70 miles to the north east of Salisbury, was murdered, and some seventy women and children of his tribe carried off as slaves, the reason given for the raid being that it was a punishment inflicted on Lo Magondi and his people because they had worked for the white men and shown them some old gold workings. The relations between the settlers in Mashunaland and Lo Bengula and his people then became more and more strained, and after the raid on the Victoria district in July, 1893, war became inevitable, and indeed broke out very soon afterwards.

In this war the whites were certainly the aggressors, but they were driven to aggression in self-defence, for it had become perfectly clear that either the colonisation of Mashunaland would have to be abandoned or the power of the Matabele broken. The invasion of Matabeleland was carried out simultaneously from the east and the west, the western column, to which I was attached as guide and scout, being under the command of Major (now Sir Hamilton Goold Adams. This column consisted of some 450 white men, and a contingent of Bechwana natives under command of the chief, Khama.

When we reached the western border of Matabeleland late in October, the dry season was already far advanced, the cattle and horses were in low condition and the problem as to the best route to take towards the better watered country to the eastward, a difficult one to solve.

IN SEARCH OF WATER

On the advice of Khama and his headmen, Major Goold Adams wished to strike for the head waters of the Ramokwebani river, and from thence make his way straight to Bulawayo, leaving the difficult hilly country which lay between Mangwe and the high plateau of Matabeleland to the south. This plan, however, I knew to be impracticable, as I felt sure that at this time of year there could no where be found in the Ramokwebani river a sufficient supply of water for some 2,000 head of cattle and over 500 horses. Owing to my remonstrances, the invading force remained encamped on the Tati river, whilst I went to see whether I or the Bechwanas were correct. I took my own Griqua afterrider with me, and riding mostly by night we followed the course of the Ramokwebani river almost to its source, and found as I had expected, that nowhere was there sufficient water for any considerable number of cattle. I had fully expected to meet with some scouting parties of Matabele, but we saw none nor indeed a native of any kind.

On my return to the oxtams it was decided to proceed to the M'pauki river, and from thence to cut a road round the hills to the eastward. The duty of finding and cutting this road in advance of the column devolved upon me, and as we were now in the enemy's country, and there was a good moon, I did all the initial scouting by night. The scarcity of water and the low condition of the oxen, which were pulling the heavy transport waggons, made the advance of the invading expedition difficult, but we reached the Singuesi river with the major portion of the force without opposition on October 30th. I had ascertained through native Makalaka, with whom I had formerly been acquainted, that a large force of Matabele under Gambo, the son-in-law of Bengula, was at this time encamped amongst the hills to the east of Mangwe, and indeed on the night of October 30th my Griqua after-rider and I had approached to within a short distance of their camp, and had also visited the farm-stead of my old friend Cornelius van Rooyen, which had only been burnt down a few hours previously. As, however, the Matabele army, after having cooked their food, had extinguished their fires, and the moon was obscured by clouds, it was impossible for me to make any estimate of their numbers; but as Gambo and Bukwela had joined forces and were together in command of the whole western division of Matabeleland, they probably numbered from seven to eight thousand men.

A SURPRISE ATTACK

Immediately upon establishing the laager near the Singuesi river, Major Goold Adams had sent a despatch to Captain Tancred, who was in command of a small detachment left at the Ramokwebani river, telling him to come on at once, as the road was now open. The oxen, however, which were pulling the waggons in Captain Tancred's charge, were in such low condition that they had to be outspanned and sent on to the water when the waggons were still some miles distant. Very early on the morning of Nov. 2nd, some fresh spans of bullocks were sent out to bring in these waggons, and by eight o'clock they had all reached the laager, with the exception of five which were said to be near at hand. At this time the troop horses were all out feeding, in charge of armed guards, at a short distance from the laager. As my position as scout and guide was an independent one, I never let my two horses go out to feed with the troop horses, but always kept them close at hand in charge of my Griqua servant. Suddenly heavy firing broke out not far away from the laager, and evidently on the road leading to it, and I knew instinctively that the waggons which had not yet come in and their escort of native troops commanded by one of Khama's headmen, were being attacked by the Matabele. Instantly all was bustle and excitement in the laager. The bugle call for "horses in" rang out shrilly and every trooper ran to catch his horse. But to catch a large number of horses and then to saddle them up slowly and methodically in military fashion at the word of command takes some time, and I knew that prompt help, even the small amount of assistance which one man could give, was urgently needed by the men in charge of the approaching waggons. Long before any troop horse was caught I got the saddle on my favourite shooting pony, which my Griqua boy had brought inside the laager when the firing commenced, and mounting without any further delay I jumped him over the thorn fence surrounding the laager, and, rifle in hand and a belt full of cartridges round my waist, galloped back along the road. The firing in front of me was now very heavy and sounded very close, and I had not ridden a mile before reaching the scene of conflict, which was a large opening in the scrubby forest, with which the greater part of the surrounding country was covered.

IN THE NICK OF TIME

Four waggons defended by a contingent of Khama's men armed with Martini rifles were being urged across this open piece of ground, and scattered round the edge of the bush behind them were a large number of Matabele, mostly spearmen, though many of them were also armed with guns and rifles. As a matter of fact, I arrived in the nick of time, or the waggons would have undoubtedly been lost, for the native escort were just on the run, only turning towards the enemy to fire very much at random, whilst the Matabele were already advancing from the bush into the open. The sight of a mounted white man galloping up from the laager had, however, an excellent effect, for doubtless both Khama's men and the pursuing Matabele thought that I had a troop close behind me, and the latter had no wish to be caught in the open by mounted men. "Don't run, don't leave the waggons, the white soldiers are coming," I shouted, in their own language, as I passed the native escort who belonged to a race not remarkable for excessive courage. I gave a few words of encouragement too to the waggon drivers, who were either Zulus or men of the equally brave Amaa race. Then galloping a short distance beyond the last waggon, I pulled in my horse, and quickly dismounting, sat down on the ground in front of him, and at once opened fire on the Matabele, who were now spreading out fanwise along the edge of the bush on either side of the point where the waggon road came into the open ground. To the left this bush or scrub forest ran round beneath a ridge of low granite hills and was nowhere within 200 yards of where I sat, but on the right it came quite near me, and this was the side on which my chief danger lay. My horse was a well-trained and very quiet shooting pony, but as a precaution I had attached him to me with a thong from a running ring on the bridle, which was made fast to my belt. The Matabele were held back no doubt not so much by my shooting as by the momentary expectation of seeing more mounted white men come galloping into the open ground, but they turned a very warm fire on me in the meanwhile. Many of the shots fired at me came from old-fashioned muzzle loading guns of large caliber, and as the bullets were propelled by bad powder, and were therefore travelling at a low velocity and were moreover often cast in bullet moulds in which a stone had first been placed to concentre the lead, they often made a loud thudding noise when I could hear approaching long before they reached me. I only heard the zip of the Martini bullets as they passed.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Some minutes passed in this way, and still neither my horse nor I were hit, but my usually quiet steed had then become so alarmed by the constant buzzing of the bullets round his head (most of the shots fired at me went high), that he kept moving from side to side behind me, snorting loudly and tugging on the thong attached to my belt. Then a shot came from the bush to my right and a loudly buzzing bullet passed close to my head, and I saw that some natives were working towards me from that direction. Half turning and looking towards them, I held them in check for a moment with my pointed rifle, but I could not fire, as my horse was now nearly frantic with terror, and never for an instant ceased pulling and jerking at the bridle. Suddenly the buckle of my belt broke, but fortunately I caught the end of it in my left hand before my horse could break away, and at once rising to my feet, I got the bridle over my horse's head and prepared to mount and retreat on the laager as the waggons had had time to get pretty close to it, and must I thought are now have been met by one of the mounted troops which was saddling up when I left. Had it not been for my sudden appearance and the very successful bluff I had played on the Matabele, I think they would undoubtedly have captured and looted the four waggons, assegaied the drivers, and driven off the oxen. But I myself was not quite out of the wood. Even as I got my left foot in the stirrup and was just in the act of mounting, a bullet fired from close quarters by one of the many Matabele who were running towards me amongst the scrub to my right, struck me in the side, but fortunately did not prevent my getting into the saddle. I think this was undoubtedly a large bore round bullet travelling at a low velocity, as it felt exactly as if someone had struck me a tremendous blow with a sledge-hammer, and had indeed just the effect of such a blow, for later on my whole side from the arm-pit to the hip became discoloured. Having been struck at an angle a little behind the head of the rib, the elasticity of the bone had deflected the direct course of the bullet, causing it to run round the bend of the rib and make its exit a little beneath my right breast, and some six inches from where it had entered my body. Had the projectile which struck me come from a Martini rifle, it would undoubtedly have gone right through my right lung and inflicted a very dangerous wound, whereas, as it was, I had merely received a flesh wound. I was hardly in the saddle and had only just turned my horse's head towards the laager when Capt. Coventry came galloping up with a troop of the Bechwanaland Border Police, and some of Khama's men, led by his brother Radikladi.

ATTACK ON THE LAAGER

Leaving them to deal with the Matabele, I then rode slowly back to the laager, and as the muscles in my side, which had been cut by the passage of the bullet through them, did not immediately become stiff I was able to take my part in its defence during the subsequent attack.

When I rode out and met the four waggons with their escort, just as the Matabele were preparing to rush them, I did not know that there were any more waggons behind them. Unfortunately there was a fifth waggon coming on at a little distance behind the other four, which were all travelling close together. The Matabele first attacked and captured this last waggon, killing Corporal Mundy, who was in charge of it, as well as the driver and leader. A section of them then came on in pursuit of the other waggons, whilst the rest cut loose and drove off the oxen, looted the stores, and piling dry wood beneath the waggon, completely burnt it. In the attack on the laager and subsequent skirmishing, we had four men killed and twelve wounded, but the Matabele were everywhere scattered and driven into the hills lying to the south of our laager. During the following night they rejoined their main force near Mangwe, and it was doubtless their defeat and the news which he must have received almost simultaneously of the fight of Lo Bengula from Bulawayo, which decided Gambo to retire from the very strong position which he occupied, leaving the main road to the capital of Matabeleland open to Major Goold Adams' troops, which subsequently joined hands with the expeditionary force from Mashunaland without any further opposition.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders. Later come dropsy, stone rheumatic pains, and perhaps diabetes. But don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and aches and make you well again.

DROWNING MYSTERIES

Dozens of cases of drowning have occurred during the past few weeks, and many more will be added to the list before the summer is over.

Quite a good deal of mystery surrounds many of these cases, as swimmers sink and are gone without a struggle. The old fallacy about "going under for the third time" receives a severe jolt in these cases, for the body goes under and stays there.

Two cases serve to show that a great deal remains unknown about drowning. A young man camping with friends at one of the Northern lakes dived from a boat. When he failed to come up his friends went to the rescue, and after several hours of hard work restored him to consciousness. He remembered starting to dive, but had no recollection of any struggle in the water, or feeling of strangling. In fact, he could not recall striking the water, having apparently lost consciousness between the time of leaving the boat and striking the water.

A second case occurred at Atlantic City. A lady was in shallow water feeling perfectly well. A swimmer touched her on the arm as she passed and she lost consciousness and was very much surprised a little later when she came to on the beach to learn that she had been rescued from drowning. Everything was a blank from the moment of contact with the swimmer until restored to consciousness on the beach.

In both cases some sudden violent reaction occurred in the circulatory system causing syncope. Possibly, a large number of those drowning do so in the same way, instead of, as is popularly supposed, succumbing to "cramps."

One thing is apparent to any one who has passed several years without swimming, and that is that the ability to swim suffers great deterioration without practice.

Good swimmers are surprised at the short space of time it required to completely exhaust themselves when compared to what they were able to do a few years before. This unquestionably accounts for some fatalities, the lack of practice, indulgence in tobacco and perhaps alcohol being fatal to one's staying qualities.

People contemplating swimming any considerable distance are exposed to great danger if several years have passed since they were in the water. While no one who has once learned to swim can ever forget how, it requires a pretty constant practice from year to year to keep up one's efficiency.—From Report of Cincinnati Board of Health.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Public Building, Uxbridge, Ontario," will be received at this office until 4 p.m. on Monday, August 21, 1911, for the erection of a Public Building at Uxbridge.

Plans, specification and forms of contract can be seen and forms of tender obtained at this Department, on application to Mr. Thos. A. Hastings, Clerk of Works, Postal Station F, Yonge Street, Toronto, Ont., and at the Post Office at Uxbridge.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signatures, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent. (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering declines to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

WHICH would you rather have when you go a-visiting, elaborate and fussy fare especially gotten up for your delectation, and a hostess tired out by the extra exertions, and subconsciously hoping that you won't come again too soon, or your share of the family fare and a serene and undisturbed hostess who is not deterred by weariness from enjoying and making you enjoy your visit to the full and from genuinely hoping you'll come again soon?

I can't imagine but one answer to that query.

And yet, how many hostesses give their guests the credit of being decent enough to visit them for their conversation and friendship rather than their food?

How many women have the common sense and large-mindedness to insist that heir hospitality shall always be a pleasure rather than a burden?

Perhaps one in five, but I doubt it.

To all too many housemothers "company" is synonymous with "bother," and "unexpected company" with "catastrophe."

And in many houses where formal hospitality is really enjoyed, the informal guest—to my mind, the essence of hospitality—is an unknown quantity.

On my list of friends I am most happy to include a certain middle-aged couple who have what appeals to me as the ideal attitude towards hospitality.

These people almost never entertain formally. A weekly "afternoon at home" and an occasional casually arranged card party are their biggest concessions to formal hospitality.

But in informal hospitality they fairly revel.

The husband is always free to bring home a guest whenever he wishes—using discretion, of course—the wife's women friends feel free to drop in at any time, and the children frequently bring their young friends to the house.

A guest here does not disturb the family routine in the least. He shares the family fare. He never feels that he is in the way at all. On the maid's night out the well-known guests are sometimes invited into the kitchen, to join the family circle there while the dishes are being disposed of, and many a young bachelor has even sugely enjoyed the joke of donning an apron and helping out.

As to the ways and means, the housemother says: "We usually have plenty to eat in the house, and plenty for four can generally be expanded to enough for five. For the occasions when my fare needs eking out I keep a stock of canned vegetables and soup and preserves.

"If we run short of anything, we laugh at it together, and the novelty of this treatment of the situation usually pleases the guests.

"Hospitality has been one of the greatest pleasures of our married life, and I think it is just because we made up our minds at the beginning to enjoy our friends in a simple way and never to insult them by letting our entertainment of them become a burdensome duty. If we lost any friends in this way, we felt they would hardly be friends worth keeping."

To quote the poet, "Them's my sentiments, too," and I wish they were more folks'.

JOYS OF RUNNING A COUNTRY WEEKLY

An exchange has the following to say about the joy of running a country newspaper.

This is the day after publication—in other words — the newspaperman's Jonah Day. The editor is taking the brief respite between this and the time when he must again rustle for copy for his next issue, to the making out of his last month's bills which he has not had time to attend to before.

Ding, ding!" goes the telephone bell and an irate voice demands "Why didn't we get our paper this week? Of course we don't care anything about the old rag, but since we paid our good money for it we want it regularly." Apologies and earnest promises on the editor's part ,all in smooth, honeyed tones.

He settles down to figure again when the stenographer usners in the president of the Woman's and Bustle club, who takes up half an hour's valuable time pursuading him to publish a four column article on "The Inadvisability of Uneligible Handwriting in Our Public Schools; or What is This World Coming To?" As one goes out, in comes Reuben Snoopenlike of Squeechet Centre, and wants to know if we will take out a part of his back subscription (he is owing since 1863) in potatoes. We have has Reuben's potatoes before and they are pretty poor fodder, but in this business you have to take what you can get.

Back to the bills again, when "Ding, ding" goes that phone again, another angry voice wants to know why the item was omitted about Saul Smithdyke having two new shingles put on his red barn? Excusable lies follow, and his wrath is appeased. Mrs. Fotherington Fosdyck, of the Smart Set, lets us know she is quite put out over the paragraph about their having measles in the family. "Such a common disease and besides it was one of the kitchen maids not one of the children." More apologies and promises to do better.

Here one of the leading citizens and nuisances of the village calls up and wants to know if we can't drop everything and come up and interview her about the way a neighbour across the street abuses her children. In the course of the next half hour this office is used as an employment bureau, general information booth, station for hard luck stories, loan dispensary and what not.

In taking a few minutes to glance over yesterday's issue it is found that in the medical ad. for Dr. Killyem's Purple Pills for Peculiar People the printer caused one line to read: "Sure Cure or Certain Death."

Now, here comes the "devil," back from the post office with a list as long as your arm of changes of addresses ,and as soon as we get our mailing list all nicely revised will receive another list changing them back to where they were in the first place. Oh joy! Oh bliss! Along with this mail are three cards informing us that three old duffers, owing us $10, $1 and $20 apiece have died and were buried at the town's expense. Forty-two more to go on the loss side of the ledger.

And yet every day dozens of people are remarking how easily it must be to run a country weekly and what a lot of money there must be in it.

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

GRANTHAM, ONT.

"Two years ago the doctor made forty-four calls on me, and then said he had done all he could for me. I was suffering with Inflamed Kidney Trouble and Inflammation had set in. Two other doctors were consulted and agreed that nothing could be done to help me.

On the recommendation of a neighbor, I took "Fruit-a-tives" and they cured me. To-day, I take "Fruit-a-tives" as my only medicine. I am in excellent health, and "Fruit-a-tives" is the medicine that cured me after I had been at Death's Door for months.

I am glad to be able to give you this testimonial. It may benefit some other woman suffering as I suffered, as I believe that I would not be alive to-day had I not used "Fruit-a-tives".

MRS. P. E. WEBBER.

"Fruit-a-tives" — by its marvellous action on the kidneys — completely restores those vital organs to their normal strength and vigor—and cures every trace of Kidney Trouble. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit.

COMPLAINT FROM CHEMONG RESERVE

Editor The Examiner:

Sir,—Would you be so kind as to allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a little about the school teachers that are sent to the poor Indians. Indians need their education as well as the white man.

Now, I suppose you often wonder, which I am sure you have, how the poor Indians are so slow to learn. The Indian has as good a brain as any white man, quick to learn, all he wants is a good man to teach him, not those that are sent to teach the Indian children, without a certificate or permit, and I have known superannuated preachers to be sent to teach the Indian children; and I say it is a shame that such are sent. Children will only be losing time. Now in the time, while they are willing to go. When they are 13 or 14 years of age they are not so easy to get to go to school.

Hiawatha Indians are boasting of having a good teacher ;their children are learning fast. I told them that because you have a white man trustee to look after the schooling, and a white man will not keep a teacher one day if the teacher was not qualified to teach school, and that is right too;; but we here seem to be looked on as of minor importance, and will be as long as there is a little made by looking after the minor, for if the Indian got to be well educated and could do for himself, why he would need no assistance and some one would lose his office, etc, etc. I am, sir,

Yours That Knows the Difference Between Right and Wrong.

P.S.—What is the school inspectors for. Is it not their duty to find out if the school teachers are qualified to teach school?

STONEY LAKE BREEZES

CROWE'S LANDING, STONEY LAKE, AUG. 7—The big event of the present week at this end of the lake is the annual regatta of the upper Stoney Lake Campers' and Cottagers' Association, which takes place on Wednesday afternoon on the splendid course off "Bellevidere." Arrangements are completed both for the programme of aquatic events in the afternoon and for the concert, presentation of prises and dance in the pavillion in the evening. A record attendance is expected, and no doubt every part of Stoney Lake will be well represented. The programme of water sports is unusually interesting and promises to be warmly contested.

The biggest maskinonge caught in this part of the lake this season was landed on Saturday afternoon by Mr. Thomas Hull, of Rochester who, while travelling near the head of the lake, hooked a lunge weighing 18 1-2 pounds The big fellow, which measured in length exactly four feet, was brought into Crowe's Landing on Saturday evening and the usual week-end dance was suspended until the guests had an opportunity to inspect the monster.

A very enjoyable bon-fire and marsh-mallow roast brought together a big crowd of young people at "Bellevidere' 'on Friday night. This evening there will be a moonlight excursion around the lake, the steamer "Islinda" having been chartered for the occasion.

Mr. Roy Turner, of Toronto, who has been spending his vacation at "Siberia" and "Bellevidere' returned home on Saturday.

Mr. Bruce Simpson, of Toronto, is spending his holidays at the lake.

Mrs. Drury, Miss McKenzie and Miss Ella Cunningham of Toronto, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Mitchell at "Sunnyside."

Mrs. Aitchson, of Toronto, is the guest of Mrs. J. D. Craig for a few days.

Mr. Archie Burton, of Port Hope, is the guest of Judge Hudspeth at "Kawartha Lodge.'

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lansdon Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

SHOULDER DISLOCATED

Mr. William Davies, an employee of the Bell Telephone Company, was the victim of a peculiar and painful accident at Lakefield yesterday afternoon.

The young man, together with his fellow workers, was engaged in repairing the telephone line at Lakefield when one of the poles upon which Davies was working, snapped off near the base, throwing him to the ground with sufficient force as to dislocate his shoulder and cause other minor injuries.

Doctors Baker and Burgess were summoned and the injuries attended to, after which he was removed to the city and conveyed to Nicholls hospital by the Belleghem private ambulance service.

BIBLE LECTURES

Elder J. T. Thompson of Toronto, is giving a series of Bible lectures in Central Park each evening. Some very interesting topics are being treated upon. The Elder represents the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Be it understood that this body has no affiliation with "Utah Mormonism," but are strong opponents of all its evils. They believe in a one-wife system of marriage and claimed that polygamy is a heresy and a menace to the home and country.

SIX POUND BASS FROM "ISLINDA"

The following letter comes from the famous Buckhorn Lake resort, and will be of interest to lovers of the piscatorial science:

Bobcaygeon P.O., Aug. 5, 1911.

Dear Mr. Craig,—Did you hear about the 6 lb. black bass caught at "Oak Orchard" this week?

It was a beauty—21 inches long. 16½ in. girth, and weighed 6 pounds exactly. It was the largest black bass I've ever seen caught. I've seen some mounted, which were called 6 pounds, and you've got to believe it whether it is or not, but this one was a six-pound bass, by weight. No porch talk or porch weights.

The measurements were sworn to before a Notary and witnesses, and the fish will be entered in the Field and Stream contest of 1911.

The bass fishing has been exceptionally good at Oak Orchard this year, which is gratifying, in view of the number of new guests the place is attracting.

Trusting you are having a good summer, I remain

Yours cordially,
Perry Alexander.

Wire In Scugog Causes Damage

The steamer "Monarch" had to go into dry dock in the canal on Monday evening on her arrival here from Lindsay. The cause was wire on the propellor shaft gathered in the Scugog river. Also the key holding the propellor was loose and it was necessary to make and put in a new one The boat was laid up until nearly midnight.—Fenelon Falls Gazette.

Montreal Union Terminal.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Arthur W. Smithers, chairman of the Grand Trunk Railroad from London, is in Montreal, and will start out to-day, accompanied by C. M. Hays, president of the line, on his annual tour over the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific section, which will embrace a trip over some 15,000 miles.

Mr. Smithers will inspect the new Union Station at Winnipeg, which was officially opened yesterday morning.

In reply to a question as to the probability of the Canadian Northern Railway uniting with the Grand Trunk for a union terminal in Montreal, Mr. Smithers replied: "I think you had better ask the Canadian Northern Railway. I know nothing of it and have heard nothing of it."

Twenty-Six Sailors Shot.

Madrid, Aug. 9.—A court-martial at Cadiz yesterday condemned to death twenty-six men who took part in the mutiny on board the Spanish battleship Numancia, while the vessel was lying in the roadstead at Tangier on Saturday. The men received communion at nine o'clock in the morning, and it is understood that their execution followed immediately.

At the time of the mutiny the official explanation was that the incident was not political in character, but a demonstration against the alleged hardship of the daily duties.

IMPORTATION OF SHEEP MR. H. ARKELL EXPLAINS

If Trade Agreement is Passed He Says There Will be a Boom in the Sheep Industry---He is Conservative But Will Vote for the Pact.

GUELPH, AUG. 8.—"There is nothing mysterious about the importation of United States sheep into Canada at the present time," said Mr. Henry Arkell, of Arkell, one of the largest breeders of sheep in Canada, and for years a prominent Conservative, to your correspondent to-day.

"The tariff against Canadian sheep imposed by the United States is responsible for it. If the tariff was removed the Canadian sheep producers would be encouraged to go into the production of sheep more extensively.

"The reason there are United States sheep coming in here at present is that there is a shortage of the Canadian article. There has been a large increase in the population from the old land in the past few years and they are all consumers of mutton. The tariff restrictions and the limited market that has resulted since the introduction of the Dingley tariff by our United States neighbours are responsible for the shortage. This tariff has discouraged the raising of sheep for mutton purposes in Canada, and where a man had a large flock of sheep previous to the passing of that legislation he has not more than five per cent. now of his former flock. If the trade agreement is passed and tariff restrictions removed we can look for a remarkable boom in the sheep industry in Canada.

"It is the veriest nonsense to say that the throwing open of the sheep market between the two countries will kill the industry in Canada, for there is really no industry of that kind here to kill. Remove the tariff and watch the Canadian sheep industry grow. I voted Conservative for years, but I am for the trade agreement."

How A Tariff Free Market Will Make Barley Crops Profitable

The Western Brewer, a specialized publication of recognized standing in the barley, malt and hop trades deals with the Canadian estimate of a barley crop of 50,000,000 bushels, made up of 20,000,000 bushels from Ontario, 20,000,000 bushels from Manitoba, and the balance from outside points. After a careful analysis the entire situation is thus summed up:

"Taking into consideration home feed requirements and inferior quality, we doubt if Canada will have to exceed 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 bushels of malting barley available for consumption in the United States, provided reciprocity should come to the point of enactment."

This is an estimate from the standpoint of the malting interests, and shows that there will be a demand for all the malting barley Canada can supply. The same article continues:

"As the barley crops for the past few years have proven inadequate to the requirements of the trade it is fair to presume that every bushel of barley available for malting purposes will be required before another crop can be harvested."

So much for the American demand for one of Canada's staple products.

Turning to the question of prices, which affect the volume of the supply and also the markets where it is disposed of, there are some striking comaparisons and contrasts. The following figures are prices for the best Ontario malting barley during 1910., as supplied by L. Coffee & Co., Toronto, grain dealers:

Sept. 30—Sold 10,000 bushels on the track at Montreal at 63¾c per bushel; equal to 57c on track, Toronto.

Oct. 5.—10,000 bushels at 63¾c.

Oct. 14—Bought at 58c per bushel, loaded on cars at country points in Ontario.

Oct. 28—Bought 5,000 bushels at 60 cents, outside points.

Nov. 4—Price at country points was 58c to 58¾c.

Nov. 4—Price of United States barley at Buffalo was $1 to $1.02 per bushel.

Nov. 28.—Sold 15,000 bushels at 57 cents, delivered in Montreal; equal to 59 cents at Ontario points.

Dec. 8.—Sold 25,000 bushels to a St. Louis firm at 75 cents per bushel, delivered at St. Louis in bond. That meant $1.05 per buanel, duty paid.

On Nov. 4 the price at country points in Ontario was 58c to 58½c, while the price in Buffalo was $1 to $1.02. And the Canadian malting barley is of better quality.

Barley 30 Cents Per Bushel.

This item from the United States tariff, an item which is to be swept away by the tariff agreement, shows why Canadian farmers have been forced to accept discouraging prices for superior barley.

The Crop Reporter, a journal of the highest standing in the commercial world, gives in its issue of July, 1911, the price of barley in Wisconsin as 84c per bushel on June 1, 1911, and July 1, 1911.

Here is an extract from a letter received by D. O. Ellis, a Toronto grain dealer, from his brother-in-law, W. P. Rose, Ayr, North Dakota, Aug. 1st:

"One of our neighbours has just finised threshing his barley. It averaged 37 bushels to the acre, and he sold it for 84c per bushel at the elevator. I expect ours will go about the same."

The price of barley on cars at country points in Ontario on Friday last was 67 cents. To the farmer the price would average about 64c, as compared with 84c in North Dakota.

Here is a difference of 20c on quotations that are largely nominal, as there is little barley to sell. The quotations during the active season last year show that our farmers lose on an average the 30c American duty.

This levy will be remitted to them under the tariff relief agreement.

It is nonsense to say Ontario farmers cannot grow barley as they did in the old days. They will grow it when they get the additional 30c, as in the old days.

The talk of impoverishing the land through neglecting live stock is visionary. Our farmers can market barley and buy other grain for feed.

If the crop remains at 50,000,000 bushels the 30c relief will mean $15,000,000 to Canadian farmers.

For that item alone we could profitably spare Hon. Mr. Fielding and Hon. Mr. Paterson for a week at Washington.

Dock Strike Assuming Large Proportions

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, ENG., AUG. 10.—The dock strike is becoming still more serious. The vicinity of the ports is practically under mob rule and it is feared it will be necessary to call out the militia if the scenes of violence continue. The police are powerless to handle the situation.

London is in serious danger from food famine, while countless ships lie in the harbours awaiting unloaders, with contents rotting. The Board of Trade says they are getting nearer a settlement and will sit all night if there is any chance of a solution

Liverpool, Eng., Aug. 10.—The troops, which were ordered out here to help the police were greeted with a fusilade of stones. They made several charges on the railway station, with batons, securing a few loads of provisions.

Many who fail with the older and heavier systems prove highly successful with 20-day Syl-la-bic Shorthand.

FATALLY INJURED

Special to The Examiner.

KINGSTON, AUG. 10.—Capt. Lewis Morrison, aged thirty-five, of Sarnia, captain of the steamer "Acadian," of the Merchants' Mutual Line, while walking between decks last night, fell below. He lived only a few minutes.

A SUPPOSED TRAGEDY

Special to The Examiner

TACOMA, WASH., AUG. 10.—Capt. E. McMullen of the British tug, Bermuda, reports seeing a man thrown overboard by men on a tramp steamer coming from Vancouver, and flying a foreign flag. The Canadian authorities have been notified.

FRUIT CROP LIGHT

HAMILTON, ONT., AUG. 10—Government Inspector Lewis is investigating the fruit conditions in the Niagara Belt. He says the crop is light this year, owing to the ravages of insects.

18 INJURED

BOCHUM, RUSSIA, AUG. 10.—Eighteen persons were seriously injured, and twenty-six slightly hurt as a result of the collapse of hoisting machinery in a Hannibal coal mine to-day.

Lighting Of Lift Lock

The project to light the Lift Lock in a permanent and adequate manner is a very commendable one that will meet with the approval of all concerned. This interesting event will take place to-night, commencing at 8.30 o'clock. The 57th Band will be in attendance and the first boat will be locked through after dark. All are invited.

$150,000 Fire

LONDON, AUG. 10.—Very few of the belongings of the patrons in the Carlton Hotel fire were damaged by fire. The loss to the hotel is placed at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

PROMINENT DOCTOR DEAD

ALMONTE, ONT., AUG. 10.—Dr. Denis P. Lynch, fifty-four years of age, and one of the most prominent medical men in Eastern Ontario, died early this morning of pneumonia.

ASPHODEL LIBERALS ARE ORGANIZED

An Enthusiastic Meeting at Norwood---Mr. Kerr, the Liberal Candidate, Addressed the Meeting---Reciprocity is Popular.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, attended an organization meeting of his supporters for the Township of Asphodel and the Village of Norwood on Tuesday night. There was a splendid attendance, every polling sub-division, both in the township and the village, being represented. Mr. Kerr addressed the meeting and told of the success he had been meeting with during the past few weeks.

Mr. John Riddell, of Peterborough, formerly of South Monaghan, who has been a practical farmer all his life, gave an interesting address on reciprocity. He pointed out that at a business meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board last March a resolution endorsing the proposed reciprocity agreement had been unanimously passed. The fact that the Peterborough Cheese Board had placed itself on record as favourable to reciprocity was conclusive evidence that its members, who are both Liberal and Conservative, must feel that the agreement is in the best interests of the farmers of Peterborough County, particularly those engaged in dairying.

The farmers of Asphodel appear to be enthusiastic over reciprocity, and they are getting well organized for the coming contest.

THE BARACCAS OF TORONTO COMING STRONG SATURDAY

The C. G. E. Team Have Their Work Cut Out---The Winners Will Go Into the Finals

The second chapter of the elimination contest will be over on Saturday night. The Canadian General Electric aggregation, undoubtedly the best association team that ever represented Peterborough, will meet the Baraccas of Toronto in a semi-final championship feature at 2.15 sharp. The game is taking hold of the people here in good style, and counting on the large number of old country men to whom football is the game, a large patronage is assured. Manager "Billy" Milburn has his charges hard and fit for a long struggle, and although the visitors are conceded to be the best team seen in this city for many years, the little Scotchman promises them the game of their lives. Keep the date and hour pasted under your lid and you will get your money's worth. The admission fee for gents has been set at a quarter of a dollar, while ladies will be requested to hand over only fifteen cents.

Assault Case To Be Tried At Havelock

Magistrate Edmison will go to Havelock to-morrow to try an assault case. Mr. Ghent, a prominent Havelock lawyer, vs. the Division Court Clerk. The assault consists of disorderly conduct and an attack on the street.

BAD COLD IN THE CHEST

"I am happy to tell you that I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and was promptly cured of a very bad cold in the chest," writes Miss Josephine Gauthier, Dover South, Ont. You can depend on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to relieve and cure all inflammations and irritations of the throat and bronchial tubes.

POPE REPORTED BETTER

Special to The Examiner

ROME, AUG. 10.—The Pope was reported somewhat better this afternoon. He sat up in a chair and attended to a little church business.

A slight operation may be made on the knee to ease the pain.

LACROSSE

Hanover trimmed Orangeville in a C. L. A. semi-final championship game yesterday by the score of 19-3.

The Veto Bill

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., AUG. 10—The debate on the Veto Bill continued this afternoon in the House of Lords. Viscount Morley announced that if the measure was defeated the King had assented to the creation of sufficient Peers to guard against the possible combination of different opposition parties, by which the bill might be exposed a second time to defeat.

Saved Two Lives

Examiner Special:

COBALT, ONT., AUG. 10.—For the second time this morning James Cornell, a fireman at Cobalt Lake, saved a life. He dived into the lake yesterday and brought up Theodore Barkel, a newsboy.

Returning Home

Mr. J. J. Turner received a telegram last night from his son, Mr. R. Turner, who is now on the ocean. It was as follows:

Weather fine. Both well. Latitude 53.29. Longitude 40.53.

Signed.
LAZIERGE.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Turner are expected in Quebec on Friday and will in all probability reach this city on Saturday.

Don't Wear Old Appearing Glasses

Why have Glasses that are awkward to wear and that give an unnecessary "old" appearance? Why duck and peer over your Reading Glasses to see objects at a distance? Why wear two pair of glasses, one for distance, the other for reading? Why wear conspicuous pasted wafers cemented to your distance lenses, when it is not necessary?

Wear Our Toric Kryptoks

Toric Kryptoks have the appearance of single lenses but give perfect distant and close work service. There is no marked "old appearing" dividing line to distract the vision and collect dirt, there is no plaster to blur or fall off—instead you have solid lenses which you can wear at all times for all purposes as naturally as you would use your eyes without glasses.

Opera House Will Open Aug. 23rd

"The County Sheriff" by O. E. Weis, will mark the opening of the Peterborough Opera House on August 23rd. The management also expect to secure the big musical attraction, "Doctor DeLuxe" by Ralph Harts for August 28th. This company are billed to play in the 'Princess', Toronto, during the first week of the fair.

Mr. A. J. Small, booking agent for Peterborough, says that the theatregoers of this city will see a better grade of shows than has ever been seen in the city before.

LADY CAPTURES GIGANTIC 'LUNGE

Messrs. Joe Benniger and Dick Desbecks and Edwin Houten went on a fishing trip to Little Mud Lake on Tuesday ,and report splendid success. They also state that ducks are plentiful.

Mr. and Mrs. Murray Spencer and daughter Norma, of Sherbrooke avenue, Montreal, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. Pattie.

Mrs. C. J. Rutherford hooked a mighty fourteen pound lunge on Sundaynight, and had the monster sent to St. Vincent's Orphonage. It is a safe bet that each of the inmates of that institution had more than a bite.

Mrs. J. J. Macdonald, of Morris, Ill., accompanied by her two sons, Jack and Alex. and daughter Flora, are staying at the hotel.

The ball club is going to Chemong Village to-morrow to play the third game of the series with the team of that place.

Fishing is still good, many good catches being reported.

Rev. Father Fergus O'Brien has been spending a couple of days in the Park.

The cottagers are requested to meet at the Chemong Park Hotel on Saturday night to complete arrangements for the annual regatta, to be held on the 24th inst.

PREPARING TO RETURN.

Opposition papers say that Sir Wilfrid and the other Cabinet Ministers are "sulking in their tents at Ottawa—afraid to come out in the open—Sir Wilfrid. This is imagination. The ministers are having daily cabinet meetings, to clear up routine business before they leave the capital. They want to leave everything in good shape, so that they will find it in the same condition when they come back triumphant from the present contest. It happens that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Borden will open the campaign in Ontario, at different points, on the same day. After all Mr. Borden is not much braver than Sir Wilfrid.

AN EASY WAY.

Will some flag-waving enthusiast of those who declare that the reciprocity agreement by removing the duties from articles of farm production will result in annexation, tell us how we are to escape destruction as a Canadian nation. If the Yankees really want to annex us, all they have to do is to strike off their tariff and leave their market wide open to Canadian products. Of course the United States would lose some revenue; but that would be a cheap price to pay for one of the biggest and richest countries in the world—that is if Canadians are such cravens and poltroons as to throw themselves into the arms of the United States because they can send garden stuff over the border without paying duty. A little sober thought is only necessary to show the absurdity of the contention that more untramelled trade will promote annexation.

THE FARMERS BANK.

The Conservative journals and politicians are very severe on Mr. Fielding because he issued a charter to the Farmers' Bank, whose failure four years after caused great loss and hardship to shareholders. Some, especially the Conservative candidate in West Peterborough, demands that "the government stand the loss." Yes?

But not the Dominion government; more reasonably the Conservative government of Ontario, which seems to have been more closely connected with the cause of failure than any other government; for the wrecking of the farmers bank was more due to Conservatives high up and intimate in the councils of the Whitney government, than to anybody else.

There is no room for doubt that the man largely responsible for the wrecking of the Farmers bank was Dr. Beattie Nesbitt. He was the Conservative boss at Toronto, a member of the supporters, of Sir James Whitney in the Legislature and the first President of the Farmers Bank. It was he who tempted Mr. Travers, the manager, into fatal mining speculation — the Keeley mine—and was himself a borrower to the tune of $25,000.

Mr. Osler, Conservative M.P., says he warned Mr. Fielding against giving the charter. In 1906, Mr. Fielding, with all the requirements of the banking act, complied with, issued the charter to the bank in a lawful and regular way. But Mr. Osler, who, when the smash came, remembered that he had told Mr. Fielding to be careful in issuing the charter, must have known how the bank was being run, and the character of its presidency; yet more than two years later he did warn. Mr. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, who under the pressure of Conservative supporters, increased the deposit of the peoples' money in the Farmers bank from $10,000 to $35,000—that is, increased it by $25,000, exactly the amount of the loan to Beattie Nesbitt. After the bank had been running two years—and Mr. Osler and other prominent Conservatives must have known how—Dr. Beattie Nesbitt was candidate for mayor of Toronto, and the Mail and Empire, Conservative, almost deified Dr. Nesbitt in promoting his candidature. He was "the man Toronto needs . . . to push to realization great undertakings and protect the city from deals." This is the same man Mr. Fielding was warned against, and denounced because he gave him a charter for the Farmers bank. Yet, more than two years later, when Dr. Nesbitt's political friends, who must have known how the bank was being run, he had the full confidence of the Conservative element; the Treasurer of the Conservative government increased the deposit of the people's funds in the Farmers Bank, by $25,000, the chief Conservative organ lauded him as the man best able to protect the city of Toronto from "deals"—the man who tempted Mr. Travers into putting the Farmers bank literally into a hole—into the Keeley mine, to the tune of half a million dollars. It will be noticed that all the elements associated with the wrecking of the Farmers bank were of the Conservative colour — and the chief wrecker a Conservative politician, rewarded with the fat office of registrar, was allowed to escape from justice, and now nobody, except those perhaps who connived at, and assisted in his escape, knows where he is. The Attorney General's office of the government would make short work of running down a common thief, but the Conservative boss, the man who knew so many party secrets, the man responsible for wrecking the bank, cannot be found. Thus it is seen that the man responsible for the ruin of the Farmers bank, was a high up, trusted Conservative — praised by the chief Conservative organ as the man to save the city from "deals," the man trusted as the safe custodian of the provincial funds, by the Conservative Provincial Treasurer and mixed up with Conservatives in the events that led to the final crash.

Mr. Buruham is right, "the government should stand the loss," but not the Liberal government. He must have meant the Conservative government of Ontario.

SOMETHING ABOUT SHEEP.

The Toronto World, in its sheep controversy, is proving too much. It is provng, or trying to prove, in the first place, that reciprocity will increase importation of United States sheep, thus ruining and thus bringing down the price of mutton in Canada—something that the consumer will not complain of.

The farmers who are threatened with ruinous competition by the World, know something about the sheep industry. They know that it has been killed in Canada by the high tariff of the Dingley Bill. They know what a profitable industry it was before the high tariff was imposed, and they know that the removal of the tariff entirely will, in the case of mutton, as well as barley, and many other commodities, restore what was once a profitable agricultural enterprise.

The Toronto World is making much of alleged large shipments of sheep to the Toronto markets from the United States. This is an exceptional occurrence and goes to prove one of the advantages of reciprocity. When there is a shortage of one commodity of farm products in our country there may be a surplus in the other. This is the case now in the matter of sheep. High tariff has practically killed, compared to what it might be, the sheep raising ndustry in Canada, and it is an advantage to the Canadian consumers to have the market supplied by the surplus for the moment across the border. Thus the consumer gets the advantage of cheaper mutton and the farmer is not injured if he hasn't the sheep to sell.

So in other things. There may be as there often is, a surplus of potatoes in the Maritime provinces, and a dearth in the near-by New England States. It would be to the convenience of both to have the tariff removed. At the same time there may be a shortage of potaties in Ontario, and a surplus in New York, or adjacent States. A free, open market in this case, is to the advantage of both.

Both parties are able to realize the ideal of Sir John Thompson, former Conservative Premier of Canada, who, in an address to the electors of Antigonish, urged the approval or Sir John Macdonald's policy of reciprocity in the election of 1891. He proposed that reciprocity should be adopted and open the market of the United States "for the products which our people desire most to send there." And conversely the Canadian markets would be opened to the products of the United States, which they wanted ot sell and we to buy.

One advantage of reciprocity is that it equalizes the market and equalises prices, and so works to the advantage of both seller and consumer. The middleman is the father of high prices. With reciprocity, his power to corner the local market will be lessened—to pay low prices to the farmer and producer and exact high prices from the consumer.

Reciprocity must be judged by its general effect on general conditions. The sheep importation the Toronto World is so excited about is only an exceptional case and not at all probable to be a general condition. When a Peterborough housewife comes down town on Saturday night, and, finding fruit dealers overloaded with fruit—berries or peaches—which could not be carried over Sunday, she gets a bargain—a basket of peaches for 35 or 50 cents, and 4 or 5 boxes of strawberries for a "quarter." But she knows that this is only an exception, and that at ordinary times she has to pay the run of the market, which is far higher than the middleman pays in the orchard.

In dealing with prices and products we must take the average—be guided by the rule, not the exception.

The Toronto World's sheep surplus in the Toronto market is the exception to the rule, which is something like this: During the year ending March 31st, 1910, the United States sold sheep and lambs in Canada to the value of $131,492, and Canadians sold in the United States to the value of $547,604. The Canadians in 1909 shipped to the United States sheep to the value of $420,000, and got from that country sheep to the value of $176.95. In 1908, the shipment of Canadian sheep was $911,740, and those of the United States, $177,847. In 1907, Canada sent to the United States, sheep to the value of $1,080,580, while the receipts of sheep from the United States in that year was only $227,610. In 1906, the figures were: Canadian shipments, $814,112; United States, $200,414.

The total number of Canadian sheep—788,817—sent to the United States in the five years, 1906-1910, brought $3,836,456, and the total number of United States sheep sent into Canada in the five years was $296,409, of the value of $970,831.

This shows that the average price of Canada's sheep sold in the United States, was $4.10, and the average price of United States sheep sold in Canada, was $3.50. And the Canadian sheep had to jump a tariff barrier of $1.50 for sheep and 75 cents for lambs, while sheep for the improvement of stock are free coming into Canada and others bear a duty of only 25 per cent.

Even with the sheep industry in Canada at a low ebb and excluded from the south by a tariff of $1.50, and 75 cents per head, Canada, in the five years, recovered, got the big end of the trade in sheep, both in number and price.

What sane farmer will deny that the sheep industry will be stimulated by removing the $1.50 barrier, and throwing open a market of ninety millions.

"ANNEXATION AS DEAD AS EVER."

Under the above heading, the Western British American, published in Chicago, has the following, which goes to show that annexation is something in the minds only of scheming and interested politicians on both sides of the line, and that no reputable public man or citizen in either country is in favour of it. The British American says:

A large party of American editors, recently in convention at Detroit, are now taking a holiday trip up through Quebec and Ontario. When their coming was announced in the Canadian newspapers, some of the latter hinted that the object of the Yankee journalists in crossing the boundary at this time was to stimulate sentiment in favour of annexation. At the least, it was rumoured, they were bent upon "spying out the land" in the interests of the conspirators, supposed to be active on this side, who lie awake nights plotting ways and means of alienating the Dominion from the Empire.

The editors have just been cordially welcomed and entertained at Montreal. Incidentally of course, speeches were made by hosts and guests, and the Montrealers lost no time in convincing the visitors that loyalty to the Motherland was never so strong in Canada as it is to-day. Annexation was feared by some nervous Canadians, they intimated, but favoured by none. The universal aim was to rivet more securely the ties of friendship with their neighbours to the south, but to preserve their staunch allegiance to the new King and the old flag.

The visiting Americans may have been a little surprised at these earnest expressions of fealty, but their spokesmen in responding made it clear that Uncle Sam's present intentions were of the best. One emphatic scribe stated that "there was not enough annexation spirit in the United States to wad a shot gun." Another editor, who hailed from Virginia, said this: "We are not interested in annexation. This 20th century belongs to the Canadians for development, and we say to you 'God bless you, and speed you!' Nothing would please us better than to see Canada grow so that in this century she is in population and wealth, and in every other respect, the equal of the United States."

The journalists before departing promised that not a single word favourable to annexation would be written by any one of them, but without exception they all announced their purpose to preach Reciprocity until the Pact was established on both sides of the border.

If this illustrates one thing more than another, it is that annexation sentiment exists in the United States and Canada nowhere outside of the brains of interested politicians. Whenever the two peoples get together and compare notes they discover that it is a dead issue. Frequent exchanges of candid opinion on this vital subject by Americans and Canadians will bury annexation beyond recall, and, at the same time, boost one of the most important of present-day reforms,—Reciprocity.

GET AT THE FACTS AND YOU WON'T BE DECEIVED

You are told, by those who have an interest in deceiving you, that the reciprocity agreement means removal of all duties from manufactured articles.

THAT IS NOT TRUE. The agreement only provides for removal of duty, both ways, on natural products, products of the farm.

It further provides for a slight reduction of duty on a small list of manufactured articles, chiefly such as these used by farmers.

As reduced on these articles, the duty—protection—on these articles is, respectively, 17 1-2 per cent, 20 per cent, 27 1-2 per cent. and 32 1-2 per cent, the greatest reduction being 5 per cent. on farm implements and 2 1-2 per cent. on a few other articles.

These few articles—25 or 30—and of which articles used by farmers, are all that are affected.

The remaining 1200, or so, items of the Canadian tariff, are not touched, nor will they be touched.

Speaking in parliament in discussing the agreement, Sir Wilfrid Laurier publicly gives this pledge:

"We HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURER AND WILL NOT HURT HIM."

Take this fact into your mind—

The reciprocity agreement does not apply to manufactured articles—does not place one manufactured article on the free list—it only makes farm products free, and slightly reduced duties on a few manufactured articles in a few cases only.

Here is a list of the manufactured articles slightly affected by the agreement—by a reduction of from 2 1-2 to 5 per cent.:

ADDRESS OF MR. STRATTON TO THE ELECTORATE

Electors of the West Riding of Peterborough

GENTLEMEN,—

At a largely attended mass meeting of the electors, on Saturday, I was selected as candidate to contest the representation of the Riding in the House of Commons. I accepted the responsibility of the position and hereby respectfully solicit the favour of your votes and support.

I am well known to you all, for during a representative service of West Peterborough, practically extending over a period of twenty-five years, I have many times come into contact, directly and indirectly, with every elector of the Riding.

In the past I have been honoured with your confidence, and I have earnestly striven to deserve it. In the discharge of my parliamentary and, especially of my representative duties, I have tried to consistently recognize and live up to the fact that I was the representative of the whole people, and in duty bound to serve the interests of all collectively and individually, whether their support had assisted, or their opposition had resisted, my election.

I need not refer to my record to specify what I have been privileged to do in the promotion of the material, moral and social welfare of West Peterborough. My work in this regard, be it little or great, is known to you all. You all know whether or not I have been a faithful servant of the people, whether the Riding is better, and in what respects, from my having been your representative.

I need not be at much pains to define my position in this contest. Everybody knows where I stand —where I am to be found. Such as I have been in the endeavour to advance your interests, I still am, and shall continue to be, if you honour me with re-election.

Apart from the consideration of local—city and county—interests, the national question chiefly involved in this contest is "Reciprocity," or free mutual exchange of natural, mainly farm, products, with the United States. I believe that reciprocity of this kind will be of benefit to the farmers of the country, and through their prosperity to all other interests—manufacturing, financial and commercial, as well as to those of the mechanic and workingman.

The round of benefit is natural. Good crops and good markets mean money for the farmer, which spent with the merchants of all kinds, means increased orders for the manufacturer and increased employment to their workmen. Thus Reciprocity, by affording wider and better markets, promises to be a benefit to the whole country and an injury to no class or interest; and is worth trying, especially as the agreement, not being a treaty, can, if unsatisfactory, be cancelled on reasonable notice.

If I thought for a moment that it would hurt any important interest, especially the manufacturing interest, I would oppose it. I am neither an extreme free trader, nor an extreme protectionist. I believe in a reasonable amount of both. High tariff in the United States has lost to Canada ninety million dollars in barley alone. The British Preference as it affects our manufacturers goes as far as desirable in the direction of free trade and I am opposed to, and will oppose, any increase of it. I myself am a manufacturer or interested in manufactures, in a modest way, but, at the same time, to an extent, important to myself and my associates, and I feel that our industries and working men could not stand the keen manufacturing competition of either Britain or the United States.

In this regard, I am in accord with the assurance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking for the Government, when he gave this pledge, "WE HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURERS AND WILL NOT HURT THEM," and I applaud the stand of Mr. Fielding in negotiating the Reciprocity Agreement, in refusing to even discuss reciprocity in manufactured articles with the United States.

If you approve, gentlemen, of what I consider the reasonable stand I take in relation to national interests; if you believe, judging from my past record of service to the Riding, that I have the business capacity, the business and parliamentary experience to continue to give you good service, and justify the confidence I now ask you to again place in me, I presume to claim your support.

This is probably the last appeal I shall make to you; for I think I have done my share of service to this Riding and have thereby earned the opportunity to give the necessary attention to my private affairs. I should have persisted in my desire to be relieved had I not felt in duty bound to defer to the earnest solicitation of the friends who have stood by me in the past, and also of a great many of my former opponents, and consented to be a candidate.

Another reason that influenced my acceptance, was, that being of a business turn, I naturally desired to complete work I have initiated, and for which I am in some degree, if the opportunity is given me, responsible. I should like to see the completion of the large new docks for the City of Peterborough; of the retaining wall on our river front in Peterborough; also a new concrete dam at Nassau erected, and a Rifle Range provided for this important military centre.

Trusting that I may be favoured with your effective support, I have the honour to remain, gentlemen, as I have been for the past twenty-five years,

Your Obedient Servant,

J. R. Stratton

CHAPTER XXIV
IN THE BUSH

It was quite a formidable expedition that departed from Berande at break of day next morning in a fleet of canoes and dingeys. There were Joan and Sheldon, with Binu Charley and Lalaperu, the eight Tahitians, and the ten Poonga-Poonga men, each proud in the possession of a bright and shining modern rifle. In addition, there were two of the plantation boat's crews of six men each. These, however, were to go no farther than Carli, where water transportation ceased and where they were to wait with the boats. Boucher remained behind in charge of Berande.

By eleven in the morning, the expedition arrived at Binu, a cluster of twenty houses on the river bank. And from here thirty-odd Binu men accompanied them, armed with spears and arrows, chattering and grimacing with delight at the warlike array. The long quiet stretches of river gave way to swifter water, and progress was slower and more dogged. The Balesuna grew shallow as well, and oftener were the loaded boats bumped along and half lifted over the bottom. In places timber-falls blocked the passage of the narrow stream and the boats and canoes were portaged around. Night brought them to Carli, and they had the satisfaction of knowing that they had accomplished in one day what had required two days for Tudor's expedition.

Here at Carli, next morning, half way through the grass lands, the boat's crews were left, and with them the horde of Binu men, the boldest of which held on for a bare mile and then ran scampering back. Binu Charley, however, was at the fore, and led the way onward into the rolling foot hills, following the trail made by Tudor and his men weeks before. That night they camped well into the hills and deep in the tropic jungle. The third day found them on the runaways of the bushmen—narrow paths that compelled single file and that turned and twisted with endless convulsions through the dense undergrowth. For the most part it was a silent forest, lush and dank, where only occasionally a wood-pigeon cooed or snow-white cockatoos laughed harshly in laborious flight.

Here, in the mid-morning, the first casualty occurred. Binu Charley had dropped behind for a time, and Koogoo, the Poonga-Poonga man who had boasted that he would eat the bushmen, was in the lead. Joan and Sheldon heard the twanging thrum and saw Koogoo throw out his arms, at the same time dropping his rifle, stumble forward, and sink down on his hands and knees. Between his naked shoulders, low down and to the left, appeared the bone-barbed head of an arrow. He had been shot through and through. Cocked rifles swept the bush with nervous apprehension. But there was no rustle, no movement; nothing but the humid oppressive silence.

"Bushmen he no stop," Binu Charley called out, the sound of his voice startling more than one of them. "Allee same damn funny business. That fella Koogoo no look 'm eye belong him. He no savvee little bit."

Koogoo's arms had crumpled under him, and he lay quivering where he had fallen. Even as Binu Charley came to the front, the stricken black's breath passed from him, and with a final convulsive stir he lay still.

"Right through the heart," Sheldon said, straightening up from the stooping examination. "It must have been a trap of some sort."

He noticed Joan's white, tense face, and the wide eyes with which she stared at the wreck of what had been a man the minute before.

"I recruited that boy myself," she said in a whisper. "He came down out of the bush at Poonga Poonga and right on board the Martha, and offered himself. And I was proud. He was my very first recruit—"

"My word! Look 'm that fella," Binu Charley interrupted, brushing aside the leafy wall of the runway, and exposing a bow as massive that no one bushman could have bent it.

The Binu man traced out the mechanics of the trap, and exposed the hidden fiber in the tangled undergrowth that at contact with Koogoo's foot had released the taut bow.

They were deep in the primeval forest. A dim twilight prevailed, for no random shaft of sunlight broke through the thick roof of leaves and creepers overhead. The Tahitians were plainly awed by the silence and gloom and mystery of the place and happening, but they showed themselves doggedly unafraid and were for pushing on. The Poonga-Poonga men, on the contrary, were not awed. They were bushmen themselves, and they were used to this silent warfare, though the devices were different from those employed by them in their own bush. Most awed of all were Joan and Sheldon, but, being whites, they were not supposed to be subject to such commonplace emotions, and their task was to carry the situation off with careless bravado as befitted "big fella marsters" of the dominant breed.

Binu Charley took the lead as they pushed on, and trap after trap yielded its secret lurking-place to his keen scrutiny. The way was beset with a thousand annoyances, chiefest among which were thorns, cunningly concealed, that penetrated the bare feet of the invaders. Once, during the afternoon, Binu Charley barely missed being impaled in a staked pit that undermined the trail. There were times when all stood still and waited for half an hour or more, while Binu Charley prospected suspicious parts of the trail. Sometimes he was compelled to leave the trail and creep and climb through the jungle so as to approach the man-traps from behind, and on one occasion, in spite of his precautions, a spring-bow was discharged, the flying arrow barely clipping the shoulder of one of the waiting Poonga-Poonga boys.

Where a slight runway entered the main one, Sheldon paused and asked Binu Charley if he knew where it led.

"Plenty bush fella garden be stop along there short way little bit," was the answer. "All right you like 'm go look 'm along."

"Walk 'm easy," he cautioned. "A few minutes later: "Close up, that fella garden. S'pose some bush fella he stop, we catch 'm."

Creeping ahead and peering into the clearing for a moment, Binu Charley beckoned Sheldon to come on cautiously. Joan crouched beside him, and together they peered out. The cleared space was fully half an acre in extent and carefully fenced against the wild pigs. Paw-paw and banana trees were just ripening their fruit, while beneath grew sweet potatoes and yams. On one edge of the clearing was a small grass house, open-sided, a mere rain-shelter. In front of it, crouched on his hams before a fire, was a gaunt and bearded bushman. The fire seemed to smoke excessively, and in the thick of the smoke a round dark object hung suspended. The bushman seemed absorbed in contemplation of this object.

Warning them not to shoot unless the man was successfully escaping, Sheldon beckoned the Poonga-Poonga men forward. Joan smiled appreciatively to Sheldon. It was head hunters against head-hunters. The blacks trod noiselessly to their stations, which were arranged so that they could spring simultaneously into the open. Their faces were keen and serious, their eyes eloquent with the ecstasy of living that was upon them for this was living, this game of life and death, and to them it was the only game a man should play, withal they played it in low and cowardly ways, killing from behind in the dim forest gloom and rarely coming out into the open.

Sheldon whispered the word, and the ten runners leaped forward—for Binu Charley ran with them. The bushman's keen ears warned him, and he sprang to his feet, bow and arrow in hand, the arrow fixed in the notch and the bow bending as he sprang. The man he let drive at, dodged the arrow, and before he could shoot another, his enemies were upon him. He was rolled over and over and dragged to his feet, disarmed and helpless.

"Why, he's an ancient Babylonian!" Joan cried, regarding him. "He's an Assyrian, a Phœnician! Look at that straight nose, that narrow face, those high cheek-bones—and that slanting oval forehead, and the beard, and the eyes, too."

"And the snaky locks," Sheldon laughed.

The bushman was in mortal fear led by all his training to expect nothing less than death; yet he did not cower away from them. Instead, he returned their looks with lean self-sufficiency, and finally centred his gaze upon Joan, the first white woman he had ever seen.

"My word, bush fella kai-kai along that fella boy," Binu Charley remarked.

So stolid was his manner of utterance that Joan turned carelessly to see what had attracted his attention and found herself face to face with Gogoomy. At least it was the head of Gogoomy — the dark object they had seen hanging in the smoke. It was fresh—the smoke-curing had just begun—and, save for the closed eyes, all the sullen handsomeness and animal virility of the boy, as Joan had known it, was still to be seen in the monstrous thing that twisted and dangled in the eddying smoke.

Nor was Joan's horror lessened by the conduct of the Poonga-Poonga boys. On the instant they recognised the head, and on the instant rose their wild hearty laughter as they explained to one another in shrill falsetto voices. Gogoomy's end was a joke. He had been foiled in his attempt to escape. He had played the game and lost. And what greater joke could there be than that the bushmen should have eaten him? It was the funniest incident that had come under their notice in many a day. And to them there was certainly nothing unusual nor bizarre in the event. Gogoomy had completed the life-cycle of the bushman. He had taken heads, and now his own head had been taken. He had eaten men, and now he had been eaten by men.

The Poonga-Poonga men's laughter lied down, and they regarded the spectacle with glittering eyes and gluttonous expressions. The Tahitians, on the other hand, were shocked, and Adamu Adam was shaking his head slowly and grunting forth his disgust. Joan was angry. Her face was white, but in each cheek was a vivid spray of red. Disgust had been displayed by wrath, and her mood was clearly vengeful.

Sheldon laughed.

"It's nothing to be angry over," he said. "You mustn't forget that he hacked off Kwaque's head, and that he ate one of his own comrades that ran away with him. Besides, he was born to it. He has but been eaten out of the same trough from which he himself has eaten."

Joan looked at him with lips that trembled on the verge of speech.

"And don't forget," Sheldon added, "that he is the son of a chief, and that as sure as fate, his Port Adams tribesmen will take a white man's head in payment."

"It is all so ghastly ridiculous," Joan finally said.

"And—er—romantic," he suggested slyly.

She did not answer, and turned away; but Sheldon knew that the shaft had gone home.

"That fella boy he sick, belly belong him walk about," Binu Charley said, pointing to the Poonga-Poonga man whose shoulder had been scratched by the arrow an hour before.

Are You Anaemic or Bloodless?

If So, the Spring is a Most Trying Time for You.

Your Hope Rests in Getting the Blood Rich and Red by Using

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Shortness of breath and fatigue with slight exertion, failure of the vital organs to properly perform their functions, and pallor of the gums and eyelids, are among the indications of anaemia or bloodlessness.

The blood is thinner and more watery in the spring than at any other season, and for this reason the person who is subject to anaemia, or lack of blood, suffers the most.

You must increase the number of red corpuscles in the blood, and this can best be done by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This great restorative treatment does not merely stimulate the organs to renewed activity, but cures by building up the system. For this reason its benefits are both natural and lasting.

Sleeplessness, indigestion, neuralgic and sciatic pains and weakness and irregularities of the vital organs become a thing of the past when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used.

It is only natural that you should get strong and well when this building-up treatment is used, for it supplies to the blood in condensed and easily assimilated form the elements which go to form new, rich blood.

Your digestive system has failed to extract sufficient nutrition from the food you eat, and hence the necessity of such direct nourishment as is supplied to the blood by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

RICHARD HALL & SON

SYNOPSIS OF SERMON

By Elder J. T. Thompson, Delivered in Central Park—Laying On of Hands

God is perfect, hence His laws must be perfect. He demands a perfect obedience. Then a perfect salvation will follow. Jesus Christ was the chief exponent of His laws on earth. He taught them to His followers. They, in turn, continued to preach them after Christ was gone. Those laws were all binding on humanity.

Immediately after Baptism hands were laid on the candidates for the reception of the Holy Ghost. It was God's law. When the work was done the blessing followed. They spoke with tongues and prophesied, and what ever gift God saw fit to bestow was their's to enjoy. (See Acts 8:17; Acts 19, 1:6; I. Timothy, 4:14; II. Timothy, 1:16. If there is an exception to the law, it is God's business to make the exception, not man.

Jesus Christ blessed little children by laying on of hands: (Matt. 19, 13: 15.) No proof in the Bible for infant baptism. Belief, repentance and teaching precede baptism. An infant is not capable of doing any, hence not a fit subject for baptism. A birth of water and of the spirit is necessary for an entrance into the Kingdom of God. Jesus says children are already in. Hence no need of baptism. Children are born pure. Sin is a transgression of law. A child knew no law, hence, not a sinner. The Bible does not teach that man is born in sin. See Psalm 51, 5. It does not mention birth. God ordained marriage; hence, fruit of marriage is not a sin. Christ never baptized a baby, nor authorized His disciples, nor his ministers never did it. It is a tradition of the early church fathers; so admitted by themselves. (See Roman Catholic Manual of Controvery P. P. 223, 224.)

The laying on of hands was practised for healing of the sick. God is unchangeable. He is no respector of persons. Healing was done in the past. Therefore if I have faith to be healed and it is God's will to heal, I can be made whole.

The God that made the body can repair it. Christ never made a specialty of faith healing. It was not done to make believers, but to confirm the believers. He told them many times "see that you tell it to no man." His apostles were given that power. If authority is on earth to-day, and the same Gospel being preached, the same blessing must follow. Nowhere does it say all these things are past and done away.

Again, laying on of hands was used to ordain men for ministry. There are four uses for this ordinance. One is as necessary as the other. All are binding.

Elder Thompson will preach to-night on "Hell".

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"Two men looked out from prison bars;
One saw mud, another stars."
Robert Louis Stevenson.

ISN'T it an interesting thought to realize how much the subjective element enters into our vision?

In other words, what a different word each and everyone of us sees.

And I don't refer only to the difference between the man who sees mud and the man who sees stars, the man who sees clouds and the man who sees sunshine, but to the fact that no two people ever see the same world in any sense.

For instance, three people—two men and a woman — walk down the street together.

One man is interested in architecture. He is thinking of building a house. So he sees all the houses on the street. He notes the French roof of one, the comfortable bay windows of another, places a third in the Queen Anne period, and approves the long French windows of a fourth.

The other man is interested in automobiles. He notices the makes of all that pass, calculates their horsepower, mentaly criticises the wind shield of one and admires the colour of another.

The woman sees the people they pass, gets an idea for her spring hat from the first woman, thinks the man who comes next is a Gibson type and looks rather like her beloved Mr. Gillette, wonders why on earth the next woman wears her hair so unbecomingly, is so glad she doesn't have to live with that cross-looking man, and screws her head way round for a last look at that duck of a baby in the white kitty cap.

One and the same street.

And yet, what different things those three people saw—and didn't see—as they passed down it.

And then there is the element of subjective vision even in the way different people see the same person or object.

My dog, for instance (I realize that he is neither an object nor a person, but he is so near the second that I feel justified in using him for an example) may be homely and ungainly to other people, but to me he is a handsome dog because I see a light in his eyes and an intelligence in his gaze which the stranger misses.

It may be partly that light and the intelligence lean up to greet me as they don't for the stranger, but they are also partly subjective, I think.

The old apple tree in your yard that you climbed and played house in and fell out of as a child must look different to you than it does to the man who comes to trim it.

The living room that you have gradually added to and saved for and enriched with the gifts and purchases of years must look a very different place to you than it does to the casual caller.

We are apt to think we see merely what is before us, and to liken our eyes to photographic apparatus.

As a matter of fact, we see what is within us as much as what is without, and our eyes are far more like the artist who picks and chooses and concentrates the light on one object and shades it from another, than the camera, which must represent everything before it impartially.

Ruth Cameron

STONEY LAKE CAMPERS' AND COTTAGERS' ANNUAL REGATTA MOST SUCCESSFUL

The Event Was Held on the Splendid Course Opposite Belvidere Summer Resort---List of Winners in the Numerous Races, etc.---Whole Programme Run Off Without a Hitch.

Examiner Special:

CROWE'S LANDING, AUG. 9.—The fifth annual regatta of the Upper Stoney Lake Campers' and Cottagers' Association was successfully held this afternoon on the splendid course opposite Belvidere summer resort, a large attendance, a well managed and warmly contested list of aquatic sports and perfect weather conditions, featuring the premier events of the season at the east end. The programme was run off without a hitch or unpleasant feature and the occasion may be ranked with the most successful events held under the same auspices.

When the members of the committee retired last night a half gale was blowing under lowering skies and the weather outlook for to-day's festivities was not the most promising, but the climatic conditions proved fully up to requirements. For a while it looked as if there would not be enough wind for the sailing events, but a fresh breeze sprang up from the southwest and the white wings had no difficulty in negotiating the course. It was bright and sunshining and the sparkling blue water, dotted with boats of every description, made a picture that will not soon be forgotten. Every part of Stoney Lake was represented in the crowd that gathered on the terraces or watched the races from the verandahs of Belvidere or from the pavilion. Dozens of launches with long tows of canoes and row boats carried merry parties from down the lake points, while a large crowd came up on the Empress and returned on the Islinda.

The results in the two sailing events sound like an echo of last year's winners, as in both the open sailing and canoe sailing the 1910 winners repeated. Harold Knapman, the youthful skipper of the Cygnet handled his fleet craft to perfection in the open event, registering his third victory in succession in this event at the upper regatta and carrying off the cup presented by Hon. J. R. Stratton. His only opponent was J. C. Eakins, who sailed a clever race, but was beaten by a good margin.

That veteran canoe sailor, "Jack" Roxborough, won his "steenth" victory in the canoe sailing. He is at home equally as well in a zephyr as in a gale and neither any conditions is about the hardest man on the Kawartha waters to beat. To-day his only opposition came from Harold Lees, the youngster making a good showing against his more experienced opponent.

The different paddling and rowing events were well contested in almost every case. Gordon Grahame, winner of the men's single canoe race at both Stoney Lake regattas last year, showed his ability again to-day by winning this event handily from three other starters. The men's tandem skiff race was one of the hardest fought on the list, a feature being the splendid rowing of Bruce Lees and Ken Routley—the two youngsters finishing a close second. A close finish was provided in the mixed tandem, in which Mr. and Miss Guilett carried off the honours by a strong sprint on end, which won for them.

The special apple race, a novelty at Stoney Lake, provided plenty of amusement. The contestants were provided with an apple each which they had to throw overboard and then pick up in their teeth, necessarily a somewhat difficult proposition. Ken Routley won this event, upsetting his canoe in the process.

H. Cohn, who finished last in the upset race, was awarded first place, as he was the only one to comply with the conditions.

Following were the results:

2 Bruce Lees.

Overweight Race (Four in Canoe or three averaging 200 pounds.)

1 Bruce Lees, Harold Lees, Ken Routley and Wilfrid Stratton.
2 Leslie Waters, Horace Rogers, E. McKay and P. Pakenham.

The regatta committee consisted of Messrs. A. B. Mitchell, chairman, J. C. Rogers, I. B. Lennox, R. Richardson, W. E. Pakenham, W. L. Craig and G. C. Keefer, while the judges were C. W. Waters, R. I. Simpson and W. L. Craig. Mr. Mitchell acted as starter.

In the evening the prizes were presented in the pavilion by Mr. F. D. Kerr, of Peterborough, who congratulated the Association upon the splendid success of the regatta. A short musical programme was provided, after which the festivities were ended by a most enjoyable dance.

NEW BANK TO BE ESTABLISHED OFFICIAL STATEMENT

All arrangements have been completed for the establishment of the Union Bank here, and the new branch will occupy the premises formerly occupied by Geo. Hutchinson & Sons, stove dealers, on George street, next the Royal Theatre. The bank here will be a centre for the numerous banks situated in the vicinity, and will be a splendid addition to the citys already large number of banks. The fact that banks are still being established here, is an evidence of the fact that Peterborough is a flourishing business centre.

The building is now being renovated and as soon as it is ready, it will be occupied. The exact time depends upon the prograses of the workmen.

Mr. C. H. Penniefather will be the manager. Within the last four years there have been no less than four or five new banks established here, and all are flourishing.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years," writes Mr John W. Nass, Lunenburg, N.S. "Five years ago three boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is soft as a child's now, and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

BERRIES ARE PLENTIFUL

Blackberries or, as many call them, thimble-berries are in the wholesale fruit market in profusion, and still coming. Therefore, there is no reason why the busy housewife for the next few days, cannot procure a sufficient supply of big black juicy fellows, at a rate to make preserving a great saving for winter supplies.

Blackberry and apple together, make a splendid mixture. If you have not got any, ask your retail fruiterer or grocer, why you are not getting an opportunity, as well as the jam factory. The recent rains account for the plentiful supply.

Tomatoes are selling at the wholesale market at 30 cents to 40 cents a basket, for big red, solid, specimens, tiers and tiers of them, one might say tons of them.

Peaches are 75 cents a basket, beauties.

The rains have even induced a second crop of raspberries, many cases being on hand at 10 cents a box.

Retailers are making the claim that the demand is not so great for them, so they do not buy very enthusiastically say the wholesalers, so the caretaker of the house, the buyer of the family, would be wise to tell the supplier of fruit, that you need some cheap fruit to put down for winter, and insist that you get a share of what is on the market.

Apples, the early varieties, are fairly plentiful and reasonable — 20 to 40 cents a basket for good ones, with prospects of plenty to come.

The situation for a few days at least is favourable to the consumer, on account of a well stocked market, so ask for supplies and your store-keeper will get busy.

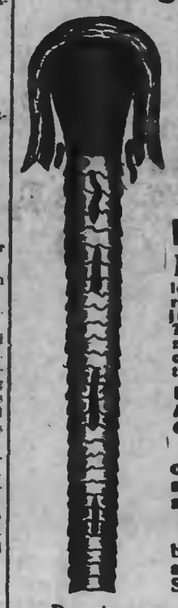
HUMAN HAIR ROOT

Showing Dandruff Germs At Work



WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

Kills the Dandruff Germ and Makes the Hair Grow

Restores Gray Hair to Natural Color

FEW people are aware of the number of Dandruff Germs that infest the human hair and scalp. The germs which locate themselves in the follicle or sack which envelopes the root of the hair, spend a lazy existence in sucking up the juices which should go to keep life and strength in the hair. These germs cannot be seen by the naked eye, but with a magnifying glass of from 300 to 400 diameters the spores of this hair destroyer may be seen in masses, clinging to the hair.

DANDRUFF, ITCHING OF THE SCALP AND FALLING HAIR ARE A SURE SIGN OF DESTRUCTIVE GERMS.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy not only kills the dandruff germs and prevents baldness, but it also restores faded and gray hair to natural color.

Don't Experiment With Old Fashioned Hair Dyes

but save your hair and restore it to natural color and luxuriance by using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy.

Druggists are authorized to sell Sage and Sulphur under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

INITIAL SHOWING OF

New Fall Dress Goods

LIVING up to our reputation for "Showing New Things First" we announce the initial showing of the New Fall Goods for 1911.

Our showing includes all the most attractive style tendencies, and presents a most charming and attractive appearance.

The most favoured cloths are Serges, Cheviots, Panamas, San Toys, Poplins, Henriettas and Broadcloths. Rough finished cloths are the most prominent. Serges will enjoy the greatest demand both in fine and rough finish.

The darker colourings will be most in evidence. The leaders are Navy, King's Blue, Saxe, Tan, Wine, Hunter's Green, Brown and Black. Blues are particularly good.

We will be pleased to have you inspect the new goods at your earliest convenience. Make your selection now while stocks are complete, have your materials made up before the dressmakers are busy with the Fall rush; by so doing you will have the cloth you like best made to your entire satisfaction ready for you when you are most desirous of having it—at the commencement of the season.

Higher Criticism

Kawartha Park, Aug. 6, 1911.

Editor Examiner.

Sir—The Apostles of modern criticism are not only loud in their demands that the people be made to see that Christ was not infallible and that he was liable to err and make mistakes (which thing denies the Scriptures, for it is written, "He was full of grace and truth"—Jno. 1-14), but they are insisting that the common people be made to see also that the New Testament writers and apostles were not inspired when they wrote, but that they were just like ordinary men, liable to err, and that they were not moved by the Holy Ghost to write. When the apostle Peter three times in his two short epistles speaks of the flood in the days of Noah and like his Master tells the people about God "bringing the flood upon the world of the ungodly" and warns men of the perdition that is prepared for ungodly men, now the people must be made to see that modern scholarship has discovered that Peter erred and taught error, for, as they say, the story of the flood is only a myth.—See Jackson's teaching in "Studies of Old Testament."

The people must be taught that St. Paul erred when he held Abel, Enoch, Noah, &c. (Heb. 11) up before the church as heroes of faith, for modern scholarship, falsely so called, has discovered that these were only mythical characters.

When one accepts the teaching of the higher critics he must abandon all faith in the inspiration of the New Testament writers. What sane person could believe that the Eternal Spirit of Truth would move an apostle to write about mythical persons as heroes of faith, men who never lived?

The poor, ignorant people must be made to see that when St. Paul wrote 1 cor., 51-45, "The first man, Adam, had a living soul," that he erred, for, say modern scholars, man has evolved up from that ugly brute beast the ape or monkey.

A professor of McGill College, Montreal, not long ago wrote over his own signature in the Montreal Witness. He said in effect: "All well instructed persons believe that man evolved from the ape." And he said: "I am preparing a special lecture on evolution for my students."

These modern scholars tell us that when man sins he is merely giving way to the remnants of the ape nature that is still in him. C. H. purgeon, like Hon. W. I. Bryant, used to say: "He had no quarrel with those modern scholars who said that their first father was a monkey," but he said "the quarrel begins when they want to attach me to their genealogical tree." St. Paul speaks of how "the servant beguiled Eve by his craftiness" (2 Cor., 3), and in 1 Tim., 2-13-14 he writes, "For Adam was first formed, then Eve, and Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression."

Now, it must somehow or in some way be made clear to the people that Paul was mistaken in accepting the early chapters of Genesis as true. These chapters, say modern scholars, are only myths. The apostle St. John, according to these critics, was also in error, for he writes about Cain and Abel, vis.: "Cain was of that evil one and slew his brother, and wherefore slew he him, because his works were evil and his brother's righteous." 1 Jno. 3-12. Yes, and the apostle Jude was smitten with that early heresy of modern scholarship, if the infidel type is to be believed. Jude writes about Adam, Cain and Enoch. He writes about those who went in the way of Cain (Jude 1-11) just as many are going to-day, denying the sacrificial atonement of Christ. No need for the shedding of blood for the remission of sins, say they. Again, St. Jude says, "Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, 'Behold the Lord cometh with thousands of his saints.'" Jude, 14.

Now, Mr. Editor and Reader, modern scholarship is demanding that the veil be taken away from the people's eyes and that they be made to see that Christ and his apostles were mistaken in much that they taught and wrote, and that Tom Paine, Bob Ingersoll, Geo. Adam Smith, Geo. Jackson and a few others nearer home whose names I may mention later on are all right. In conclusion, let me give your readers a quotation from Tom Pain's "Age of Reason": "The story of Creation in the Book of Genesis, unless we play fast and loose either with words or with science, cannot be brought into harmony with what we have learnt from geology. Its etymological statements are imperfect, if not sometimes inaccurate. The stories of the Fall, of the Flood and of the Tower of Babel are incredible in their present form. Some historical element may underlie many of the traditions in the first eleven chapters in that book, but this we cannot hope to recover."—Pg. 7, "Age of Reason."

Prof. Jackson must have had Pain's book near his elbow when he wrote "Studies in the Old Testament." Paine like Jackson, makes light of and discredits the records of the long lives of the men before the Flood. Now, Mr. Editor and Reader, the question for us to decide is who are right—Christ and His holy apostles or Paine, Ingersoll, Jackson, &c.?

Rev. H. Kenner, Winnipeg, in his book exposing the unsound teaching of Rev. S. G. Bland, D.D., says:

"Hon. S. H. Blake, Toronto, has published seven pamphlets on the Bible controversy. No. 6 contains abundance of reliable information showing that the recent teaching of modern college professors would blot out modern Christian civilization."—Pg. 10.

As one of the common people, I enter a protest against this "higher criticism" being taught to Canadians; and in conclusion would say that the preachers who preach it should preach to empty pews.

JOHN CARLISLE

P. S.—Humanly speaking, Mr. Editor, if modern scholars are right, can it be wondered at if the people who believe them are believing that the Lord made another mistake, that is, that He founded his Church nineteen hundred years too soon. He should have waited until Prof. Jackson and some of the other higher critics with their superior wisdom were born and saved the Church from the confusion and error it is now in. J. C.

HAL CHASE CAPTURES NEW KIND OF FLY

Hal Chase showed before a large crowd in front of American League park shortly after six o'clock a few evenings ago that his wonderful agility may be used promptly and with presence of mind outside the ball field.

A horse, attached to one of the James Butler grocery waggons ran away at One Hundred and Seventy-ninth street and St. Nicholas avenue, and dashed south, entering Broadway at One Hundred and Sixty-eighth street, where a large crowd of 'fans' was awaiting the outcoming of the Highlanders from their dressing rooms. Yells went up to alarm the crowd.

Just then Chase and other players came out through the little door in the green fence. Chase ran out, leaped into the back of the waggon, stepped over the seat, reached out over the shafts and got hold of the reins. Bracing himself, he fell full length, sawing at the horse's head, his feet braced on the metal rail of the dashboard.

Within two blocks the horse had been conquered. Chase drove him back, the horse humbly trotting, and turned the rig over to the driver. Joseph Cohen of No. 612 West One Hundred and Seventy-fourth street.

LONGBOAT BREAKS AWAY FROM HIS MANAGER

TORONTO, AUG. 10.—Sol Mints's famous caption of his Longboat stationary "From Cabin to Castle," is likely to be paraphrased by Tom Longboat to "From Bondage to Freedom" or "From Rosenthal to Flanagan, to Powers, to Mintz, to Myself."

Anyway, Tom Longboat is his own master once again.

Back in 1908 when he returned from England, he signed a contract with Tom Flanagan, and ran several races. Flanagan couldn't manage him, and for $1,500 turned the contract over to Pat. T. Powers of New York. Powers found that to hold the Redskin was like trying to catch fleas with a pair of boxing gloves. He sold the contract to Sol Mints of Hamilton for $1,000. Mints had his troubles with the "Heap Big Injun," too. He couldn't get Tom to train, and was forced to run him "right off the halter." At that he won many races, and forced Shrubb and others to do better than standard time to beat him right at their own distances.

Part Good Friends.

But, in spite of this, Mints and the Indian got along fairly well, and everything was rosy until an European trip was arranged for this fall. Mintz discovered two weeks ago that he couldn't spare the time to go across with Tom, so he proposed another manager.

Tom wouldn't stand for it, and the result was a conference yesterday, in which the Indian bought his own contract for $500, and is now his own master.

First Race Saturday.

He runs his first race under his own management Saturday night at the Island. He has been training hard and says he will win, and show the public "I certainly wish Tom all the luck in the world," said Mints. "We part good friends. If he is right he can beat Shrubb doing anything any time, and I certainly think that the fact that he was about to become his own boss put ginger into him, and that he will be in the pink of condition Saturday. He is twelve years younger than Deerfoot was when he made his famous record, and the best years of his career are before him. I think he will go right on and show them all that he is the real king."

Fred Meadows, Jack Roe, Percy Sellen, and A. C. Wood are entered in the five-mile open preliminary, and a 100-yard open pro. race is proposed.

ATTACKED IN BED

Young Man Receives Mysterious Beating in Toronto

BLOOD ALL OVER HIS ROOM

Toronto, Aug. 10.—Lying in bed with head and hands swathed in bandages, Charles Thom, 19 years, a clerk who sleeps over Sanderson's drug store at 897 Roncesvalles avenue, told a curious story of how he came by the terrible beating and the shot wound in his hand, which are confining him to bed. The condition of the room over the drug store where Thom was attacked is that of a shambles. There is blood everywhere and on everything. Parts of the strange story told by Thom are confirmed by those who live in the neighborhood of the drug store.

He says that he was awakened from sleep at 1.20 yesterday morning to find himself lying upon the floor beside his bed with a chair on top of him. He neither saw nor heard anyone in the room and believed that he must have had a nightmare and fallen out of bed. His face and head were wet but he thought he had been perspiring.

He got into bed again where he lay for a few moments, when he again noticed the moisture of head and hands. When he put his finger in his mouth, he tasted blood and arose quickly, wondering how it had come there, as he could think of no way in which he could have received his injuries. He lighted a light and was alarmed to see that the room showed every sign of a terrific struggle though he had neither seen nor heard anyone enter or leave it and remembered nothing of an attack or struggle.

He went downstairs to see if burglars had entered the store below. He found no trace of any. The cash register was as he had left it. Over $100 in bills which had been concealed beneath his mattress, was untouched. He says that he took his revolver and fired two shots out of his window to frighten away any burglars who might be about.

This is the curious story which Tom told the police.

The bullet holes were found in the screen in the window in the morning, but Tom's left hand is pierced as though by a bullet. Also a bullet was found imbedded in his dressing table, while he says that he fired but the two shots. A window at the rear of the store was found open, and there were footprints outside.

B. W. Kitely, who lives next door, was awakened by groans in Thom's apartment. Then he heard shots. After this Kitely says a man left the store by the rear window, and while in the lane near Geoffrey street, he heard a woman call out, "There they go." This followed by a thud which struck the pavement and flashed on through the arm of a chair on the verandah of 190 Geoffrey street, and broke a large window. The woman who lives in this house says she heard six or seven shots and saw a man running along Geoffrey street toward Sorauren avenue.

The young man's condition is serious, more from shock than from his wounds. The police are following the slight evidence in their hands.

Had Lucky Escape.

Brantford, Aug. 10.—Roy McKellar, a friend of Pop Williams, owner of the Berlin ball club, while driving the latter's auto out of the ball grounds here yesterday afternoon, had a miraculous escape on the Gilkinson street crossing of the Grand Trunk.

Some freight cars were being shunted along the street and struck the auto, McKellar barely jumping in time to escape. The automobile was a total wreck and had there been a number of occupants in it, a bad fatality would have occurred.

The sum of $10,000 was received by President Wedlake of the Y.M.C.A. here yesterday from Lord Strathcona for Brantford's new building. The donation was conditional Brantford having to raise ninety thousand and the condition was more than fulfilled.

Died From Sunstroke.

Montreal, Aug. 10.—Lodarriska Benanger, aged 31 years, died from the effects of a sunstroke at St. Jean's Asylum, Longue Pointe, Tuesday. Deceased, who was an inmate of the asylum, got out in the sunshine a day or so before his death, and became a raving maniac from its effects.

Mackenzie at Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Aug. 10.—Sir William Mackenzie will consult with the city in Friday regarding the proposed sale of the Winnipeg Electric Railway holdings in the city.

Big Strike Impending.

Montreal, Aug. 10.—During the past few weeks, through the efforts of International Organizer Bruce Lansdale of Hamilton, Ont., the men and women employed in the ready-made clothing industry have joined the union of the United Garment Workers of America, with headquarters in New York City. Two small independent unions, one coat, pressers, one pant makers, have also affiliated with the parent body. The main object of the new organizations is to "level up" conditions in the clothing industry in this province by agreement and conciliation if possible and by strike if necessary, says the organizer.

Mr. Landers says there are ten thousand men and women employed in the industry in Montreal whose working condition are very much inferior to their fellow workers in the same trade in other provinces. Forty-nine hours per week is the prevailing time limit in Toronto, while in Montreal it is from 54 to 60 and over. Piece work, sub-contract and other conditions prevail here which do not prevail in the west.

A general organizer will arrive from New York the early part of next week to confer with Mr. Landers on the advisability of a general strike in Montreal in the tailoring industry.

Tip From Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 10.—Dirty faces and hands are likely to be numerous in Chicago. An ordinance prohibiting the use of roller towels in public places will become effective, and unless provision is made in the meantime to provide individual towels in public washrooms, patrons of these places will have to go with unwiped faces and hands or use their handkerchiefs.

FISH MAN FOR PACT

Head of an Export House Strongly Supports Reciprocity

McLEAN OPPOSES BORDEN

Halifax, Aug. 10.—The feature of the Liberal convention of Halifax, which last night nominated Hon. A. K. McLean and D. D. Blackadar as Government candidates, was the strong speech in favor of reciprocity by Howard Smith, head of N. & M. Smith, Limited, the largest exporters of dried fish in the world. Mr. Smith appeared in the Liberal convention for the first time in his life, but I said this was an occasion when the issue before the people was above party. In the last campaign Mr. Smith was one of the most active and most influential supporters of Messrs. Borden and Crosby. This time he is throwing his whole support to the side of the Liberals, because he realizes that reciprocity means a new era of prosperity. Under the new order, he declared, Nova Scotia will come into her own, and her fishing fleet will be doubled in from three to five years.

Mr. McLean stated in accepting that he had contemplated in retiring from politics some time in the future, but that this intention was now abandoned. He said the statement that he had been offered the solicitorship of the Canadian Northern Railway was erroneous, for no such offer had been made. Mr. McLean will in a few days resign the Attorney-Generalship and his position in the Provincial Government.

The Conservatives of Pictou, in a convention held at Westville yesterday, nominated A. C. Bell of New Glasgow, who will have as his opponent the present member for Pictou, E. M. Macdonald.

Capt. Wallace for Centre York.

Toronto, Aug. 10.—There was only one man in it at the Centre York Conservative convention yesterday, and that man Captain "Tom" Wallace. The gathering was held at the Labor Temple, and was largely attended.

Returning thanks for his renomination, the candidate said he had always tried to keep his pledge as an independent. Once or twice he had differed from Mr. Borden, but as a rule he had found it very easy to vote at his side. He believed in protection, not only for the manufacturers, but also for the farmers and the workers of the country. Under reciprocity the Canadian farmers, instead of getting another large market, would be handing over their own market to the United States.

Hon. A. B. Morine appealed the continued support of the National Policy which, he said, had built up Canada's home markets. Reciprocity would destroy them. Capt. Wallace had made a splendid representative of the farmers' interests.

Canadian Reciprocity.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 10.—Sir William Mackenzie, president of the Canadian Northern Railroad, in an interview here yesterday stated that he thought Canadian reciprocity was a doubtful issue.

"Reciprocity is being fought to a finish in Canada," he said. "The outcome is problematical. The idea of annexation has become so strongly attached to the treaty proposal that its defeat is highly probable."

Sir William was in Chicago with a party which will tour the west. In the party were Sir Edward Ward, London; Baron Bryon von Fossant, Berlin, and Sir Donald Mann, vice-president of the Canadian Northern Railway.

Ottawa Liberal Convention.

Ottawa, Aug. 10.—The Liberal convention last night selected H. B. McGiverin, the old member, and Ald. J. A. Pinard as their standard-bearers at the general elections. Mr. McGiverin was selected by acclamation and Ald. Pinard on the first vote.

New Brunswick Nominations.

St. John, N.B., Aug. 10.—The Kings-Albert Liberal convention yesterday at Sussex nominated Dr. D. H. McAllister as their standard-bearer in the coming elections.

The Westmoreland Conservatives' convention nominated M. Z. Siddall of Port Elgin as their candidate in the federal contest.

Wilson for Laval.

Montreal, Aug. 10.—Charles Wilson, late M.P. for Laval, again received the Liberal nomination at the convention of the Liberal electors of that division last night.

McCarthy For North Simcoe.

Stayner, Aug. 10.—The Town Hall was filled when Dr. McPaul, president of the North Simcoe Liberal Association called the nominating convention to order yesterday afternoon, Leighton McCarthy was nominated by Dr. D. Niddrie, Creemore, seconded by Geo. Campbell, Oro; John Bernie, Collingwood by W. H. B. Patton and E. C. Drury, and E. C. Drury by J. W. Brown, Dalston.

Mr. Drury later withdrew in favor of Mr. McCarthy.

Unanimous For Ames.

Montreal, Aug. 10.—H. B. Ames, who has represented Saint Antoine division in the Federal House for the past seven years, was once again the unanimous choice of a Conservative convention when the party forces met to choose their candidate last night.

150 Witnesses Called.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 10.—The prosecution in the trial of the McNamaras, the alleged dynamiters, will summon, it is said, about 150 witnesses, and the defence fully as many. Detectives are to be sent to all parts of the country to summon persons wanted as witnesses.

Engineer Had Close Call.

Ottawa, Aug. 10.—Hugh Alexander had a narrow escape from death and a 13-ton road roller lies in eight feet of water in Hicker's Creek, a tributary of the Rideau, on the Nepean side, near Manotick, as the result of the collapse of a bridge.

CANNOT PROPHESY

Vote on Veto Bill in Lords Will be Close Affair

PEERS DISCUSS THE MEASURE

London, Aug. 10.—A counting of heads of the different factions in the Lords, the "Die Hards," the "Surrenderers," and the Ministerialists, has shown the possibility of a vote so surprisingly close that the prophets hesitate to say whether the Government will be defeated.

Should the bill be thrown out its next coming to the Upper Chamber will be in the company of a battalion of new barons strong enough to swamp any combination of Unionists.

The House was crowded.

It was the biggest muster of peers since the rejection of the Home Rule bill in 1893, and Lord Morley was supported by the largest force of radical peers gathered in the memory of the oldest members. A throng of eager members of the House of Commons crowded the steps around the throne. Peeresses in lightest summer costumes vigorously fanned themselves in a vain attempt to dissipate the overpowering heat.

Moving the consideration of the amendments of the House of Commons and the reasons for disagreeing with the Lords' amendments, Morley said that the Lansdowne amendment providing for the submission to a referendum of any grave issue before it received royal assent, had raised an inseparable barricade to an agreement between the Government and the Unionist majority in the Upper House.

Lord Salisbury asked Viscount Morley if the King gave assurances to the Government that he would create as many peers as they desired, without reference to the number required to pass the veto bill. Lord Morley declined to answer "such a very rash juvenile question." Lord Salisbury then said that the creating of new peers was a game both sides could play, and declared he was prepared to vote against the bill, whatever the consequences.

Viscount St. Aldwyn said he and his followers had been asked by the Earl of Halsbury to give such a vote as practically would compel the sovereign to create any number of peers. He declared he would never give a vote which would place the King in such a cruel position. He also denied he had tried to form a faction of Unionist peers to vote for the bill.

Lord Willoughby de Broke, the Duke of Bedford and the Duke of Marlborough supported the "no surrender policy." Lord de Broke declared that his friends never would throw up the sponge, no matter how many times the bill was sent to the country.

The debate was then adjourned until to-day.

In the lobbies of Parliament last night, the utmost uncertainty prevailed as to the result of the division in the House of Lords to-day on the veto bill. Mr. Balfour will start for Bad Gastein to take the waters, and this is held as a favorable sign that the bill will be passed, but there are so many peers who have not yet declared how they will vote that it is impossible to form an opinion as to the outcome, except that the division will be very close.

Executor's Sale of Valuable Business Premises and Real Estate in Campbellford.

In the matter of the estate of Sarah Isabella Hebden, deceased, there will be offered by the executors of the late Mrs. Sarah Isabella Hebden, at public sale at the Queen's Hotel, Campbellford, the real estate that belonged to the deceased, on Thursday, the 24th day of August, 1911, at twelve o'clock noon, consisting of:

PARCEL I. The "Queen's Hotel Block," a 3 storey brick building on Front street. The property extends along Front street a distance of 40 feet more or less. The ground floor consists of the hotel and a millinery store. The hotel, fitted with electric light, contains dining hall, vestibule, office, bar, parlours, 2 sitting rooms, 16 bedrooms, kitchen, lift, cellars and other accommodations.

PARCEL II. The "South Cockburn Block," a 3 storey brick building having a frontage of 42 feet, 6 inches, more or less, on Front street, and containing restaurant, tailor's and barber's shops with apartments above.

PARCEL III. The "North Cockburn Block," a 3 storey brick building having a frontage of 40 feet, 6 inches, more or less, on Front street, and containing grocer's and Baker's shops, with bake house attached and apartments above.

PARCEL IV. The "Queen's Hotel Stables," a brick building, with wooden drive shed, on Front street, at the corner of River street, and having a frontage on both streets.

PARCEL V. The following building lots (a) Lots 19 and 20 on the west side of Centre street. (b) Lot 21 on the east side of Centre street, and Lots 21 and 22 on the west side of Elmore street. (c) Lots 18 and 19 on the east side of King street. (d) Lots 11 and 12 on the west side of Elmore street.

Front street is the principal thoroughfare in the Town of Campbellford, and it is very seldom that such valuable blocks of business premises are offered for sale. The estate will be put up for sale in separate parcels as above mentioned, and the lots in Parcel 5 may be sold separately. There will be a reserved bid on each parcel and lot.

PAYMENTS: 10 per cent. down at time of sale, 30 days for the balance without interest. 50 per cent. of purchase money may be secured by mortgage on purchased property.

The executors reserve the right to sell any parcel by private sale.

BATTLE OF SOUTHPAWS AT RIVERSIDE PARK

Cresswell Had the Best of It Through Good Support---Antique Ball Tricks Worked on Visitors.

The game at Riverside Park yesterday afternoon between a local aggregation calling themselves the Leafs and a Frandford nine, who blew in with the excursionists and were spoiling for meeting with a Peterborough outfit, the age limit to be twenty years, proved to be a pitcher's battle between two southpaws, Cresswell for the locals and Clarke for the visitors. When the contest was finished the score stood 5 to 2 in favour of the home team. Cresswell secured eleven strike-outs, while Clarke was credited with eight. The umpire, who was a Frankford man, evidently partook too freely of the cup that cheers. It was almost necessary for a man to swing at a ball before he called it a strike. There were a couple of disputed decisions, but the locals did not kick very hard as the visitors were not a very dangerous nine when the bases were full.

The Cresswellites put over all the old stunts, such as hiding the ball and the Franks fell for it. "Doc' McFadden put one over on them which made a couple of would be scorers look as though they had just come off the plough. With one man down and a man on second and third, Simmons came to bat and drove one at Derocher, who threw him out to Phelan. Phelan threw to McFadden to stop LaPoint at third and "Doc" went through the motion of throwing to Sheehy and immediately began studying the landscape as though all was over with the Leafs, but the cheering Sheehy fell in with the joke and started to the outfield as if in search of the ball. The runner had visons of saving the piece if not the game and ran for the home platae amid the entusiastic cheering of the now thoroughly excited populace, who thought the predicted blow-up of the locals had at last come, to give them a victory. When McFadden persisted in blocking the way he waxed indignant and was going to protest. "You're out" from his umpa brought him to the cold fact that his glorious sprint had retired the side..

A regrettable thing occurred during the progress of the eighth innings. A couple of drunks started a row and everybody joined in to separate them or fan the flame, as was their nature. The ladies retired as did also many of the men, and the players were left to finish the grind without the encouragement of the fairer sex.

The locals played fairly good ball, but Clarke came nearly being the whole thing in the Frankford team. He handled all sorts of chances without a slip and won the respect of the local batters when they faced him a couple of times, only giving two singles during the performance. Cresswell was cool, and though he allowed four bingles, they were not bunched.

The two runs which the visitors got were on errors and were secured in the ninth innings, when Turley went to first on Phelan's fumble. Rose was passed and Turley went to second and to third when Cresswell hit Hubbell, and scoring when Clarke biffed to Callahan. McCauley striking out. Herman sent one at Derocher, who attempted to throw Rose out at the plate, buf was wild. LaPointe struck out and Law flew out to Phelan.

Following were the line-ups:

Frankford—Simmons, 2b.; Turley, 1b.; Rose, c.; Hubbell, 3b.; McCauley, s.s.; Clarke, p.; Herman, l.f.; LaPointe, r.f.; Law, c.f.

THREE BIG LEAGUES FIGURE IN TIGHT RACE FOR PENNANT

(By W. A. Hewitt)

There is a great race for the championship in all three leagues, and the baseball fans in many cities are worked up to fever heat.

Rochester, Toronto, and Baltimore are the contenders in the Eastern. The leaders are winning right along, so that good work by the other clubs remains unnoticed. The Leafs have a hard trip ahead of them, commencing Friday, with a single game at Baltimore, a double-header on Saturday, and a single game on Monday. Then they go to Providence for three games, and then back home for a long series, in which they expect to clinch a hold on first place. If the Orioles do not get to the top in the next two weeks they will have no chance for the pennant. Toronto fans must expect some reverses for the team—it wouldn't be baseball if it was all victories—and should give the team every encouragement in their hard battle for the pennant. Instead of looking cynical and asking their neighbour after a hard game has been lost: "What in the world is the matter with the ball team?"

Last week all New York was aroused over the good work of the Giants and the critics, one and all, led the fans to believe that they would clean up Pittsburg and Chicago as easily as they did St. Louis. They lost the series to the Pirates and the Cubs have won the only two games played from New York to the intense disappointment of Gotham rooters. Pittsburg is on the heels of Chicago and will be on top if the Cubs falter at all. Philadelphia and St. Louis are sliding down, though still close enough to be dangerous.

It is a two-horse race in the American League between the Athletics and the Tigers. The Philadelphia team has the same advantage over Detroit as Rochester has over Toronto.

It is interesting to note that both Rochester and Toronto have won more games than any of the teams in the big leagues.

McConnell's Twenty-second Victory.

George McConnell won his twenty-second game of the season for Rochester yesterday, when he beat Jersey City in the first game by 2 to 0. The champions got their two runs in the opening inning on a triple by Batch and singles by Foster and Ward. After that Jack Frill was as invincible as McConnell, but the damage had been done. The Skeeters couldn't score in the second game off Manser, as they only got four hits. Rochester got four runs in the opening inning on a pass to Meeller, a triple by Fister, and a single by Ward, and a home run by Simmons. Then Del Mason tightened up and held the champions runless and to three hits.

Montreal gave the Orioles quite an argument at Baltimore for six innings, but in the seventh the home team bunched four singles on "Lefty" Burchell, and made enough runs to win the game. Jimmy Dygert pitched good ball for the winners. Ray Demmitt made a home run.

"Fitz." as a Comedian.

Little Eddie Fitzgerald, who made the home run that won the game at the Island yesterday, also made one on Saturday at Jersey City with two men on bases. "Fits" is a rather unlucky batter. He hits the ball right on the nose but usually straight at somebody. "Fits" is the comedian of the team, and pulls many a good one on the other fellows. In the Sunday burlesque at Jersey City, when the Leafs looked like a bunch of corner-lotters, "Fitz." made a big kick to Umpire Kerin on a play at second, when Wheeler, in sliding is grabbed the ball and tucked it in his shirt, after Tony Smith had muffed Kocher's throw. Smith had a chance to get the man going to third, but he couldn't find the ball. Finally the Skeeters rolled up seven runs in the innings, and as Deininger—tried to steal second Fits took the throw and tagged the runner.

Umpire Kerin stood over the play, and throwing up his right arm, announced "He's out!"

"Fits" made an elaborate courtesy to the umpire, lifted his cap, and bowed obsequiously.

'Many thanks for those kind words' he said.

"Out of the game!" shouted the Umpire.

"Which way out?" asked Fits, innocently.

"Out of the grounds!" growled the Umpire.

"Fits." got out, of course, but his antics before he left had the crowd in an uproar. As he disappeared around the corner of the stand he gave the Umpire a parting salute that evoked roars of laughter.

The Defence That Failed.

Few of the 9,000 fans at the holiday afternoon game were aware of the plan of defence agreed on by Joe McGinnity and his Newark team after O'Hara had made his triple to right centre though many of the spectators puzzled themselves over the question. It will be remembered that O'Hara's long hit came with two men out, and McGinnity, after a consultation with his catcher and infield, commenced to pitch "wide" to Delahanty with the evident intention of walking him. He threw the second ball too wide, and it developed into a wild pitch. O'Hara scoring. The battle being over, the Newark players made no secret of the plan of defence. The intention was to pass both Delahanty and Jordan, with the chance of catching O'Hara napping off third or enticing him into a double steal, and if all that failed, to take a chance on Bradley with the bases full and four places to make a play.

It was good tactics, too. One run would beat them and the chance of an infield out was quadrupled with the bases full. The sad part of it all was when McGinnity spilled the beans himself with a wild pitch.

Umpire Guthrie "The Wop."

Captain George Smith and the Newark players are very much incensed at the new umpire, Mr. Guthrie, who, they claim, had not given them one close decision in the three games.

"That wop said that Agler did not catch that drive by Kocher, but picked it off the ground," complained Smith, "when it was plain to everybody on the field and in the stand that he caught it. The play Agler tried to make at third base showed that he caught the ball. No player would pull a 'bone' like that wop made Agler out as going, throwing the ball to a dead base, when he had an out right beside him. And that double steal at third, when McCarthy's throw to Louden had the runner sliding into the ball. If you don't get that kind you don't get any at all."

All the Newark players agreed with their captain that they got the worst of it.

Around First Base.

Tim Jordan is not only a graceful fielder around first base and a fine ground-coverer, but he saves many a wild throw by his shiftiness at the bag, his long reach, and his quickness in handling the ball. Once on the holiday and again yesterday he saved an error to Tony Smith by getting a throw off the bag and tagging a fast coming runner by swinging around on the right hand side to make the play. Joe Agler, who plays the bag for Newark, is a youngster of great promise, and will be tried out by Manager Chance of the Cubs next spring. He is a left-hand thrower, a fast fielder of bunts, shifty on his feet, and a fair hitter and baserunner. He plays the bag in a dashing, confident manner, and has a habit of grabbing the ball in close quarters with his gloved hand that helps him out a lot.

Well Known Umpire Retires

The dean of them all, as fas as the umpires are concerned, has called his last ball and strike in the American League. Jack Sheridan, who has been making decisions for over twenty years, has decided to quit the game to be a funeral director in California. Sheridan has quit twice before, but he states that this one goes.

Sheridan once said that when a ball player heard the crack of the bat out in the lots when he had told his owner that he was through with baseball, he would come back. "When I heard the mob shouting: 'You're blind,' and 'Kill the umpire,' it made me feel as though I would like to be on the diamond again."

It was not long ago that Sheridan's eyesight was so bad that he had to get out of the game. He was made chief of the umpires by Ban Johnson, his great friend. Sheridan's eyes got better and he went at his old work again.

Baseball players who have known Sheridan for twenty years or more, say that he was one of the best arbitrators in the business.

Labour Day Sports

The Trades and Labour Council held their regular meeting last evening, and the principal business transacted was the programme of sports to be carried out on Labour Day at Riverside Park. It has oft times been stated that no sports or games of any kind were held in our city on a public holiday to keep the people in the city. Labour Day, this year, will give every person who is fond of a good day's enjoyment a chance to have it without leaving the city. Besides the splendid programme of sports there will be a prize given that everybody who buys a ticket of admission will have a chance on. The management and employees of the Brinton Carpet Works have kindly donated a beautiful $25 rug, to be drawn for. There will be something for everybody at Riverside Park on Labour Day. The 57th Band will be in attendance and a refreshment booth will also be on the grounds. The Trades Council intend making this an annual affair. A big crowd should turn out to the games and help to make this day one to be remembered.

A baseball match between the fast Belleville team and the Peterborough team will be one of the main features of the afternoon.

Mr. Thompson, physical director of the Y.M.C.A., will have full charge of the different events and everything will be run off in a satisfactory manner.

TORONTO, AUG. 10. — Donald Sutherland, colonization agent for the Ontario Government to-day resigned his position to become a Conservative candidate in South Oxford.

Is A Marvel

The name of F. B. Butler, the new sculling marvel, is on every tongue of rowing enthusiasts. No other oarsman has duplicated the feat of this young Canadian, who won three titles in the annual fixture held by the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen of Saratoga Lake. Hitherto almost unknown, in winning three sculling races at one meeting, the association singles, champion single, quarter mile dash, famous rowing coaches were almost as enthusiastic as the competing oarsmen. Every one of these placed Butler in the front rank of scullers, the greatest since the time of Greer, he was universally acknowledged to be. Some went further and insisted that neither Greer nor the diamond sculls winner, F. M. Ten Eyck, compared with the new champion.

It is certain that Butler's long reach gives him an advantage over Ten Eyck. He is 6 feet tall and weighs 159 pounds. Only twenty-three years old, Butler has a great future in store. He has been rowing three years and won the intermediate singles at the 1909 national regatta in Detroit. Last year he was beaten at Washington in the association singles by S. F. Gordon, of Philadelphia, who finished far behind him on Friday. At the time Gordon beat him Butler was recovering from an illness.

Butler's entry was sent to Henley this year, but arrived a day too late. He is a bank clerk, so comes well within the Henley definition of an amateur. Butler rows when he feels like it in training and neither drinks nor smokes.

Fire In Carlton Hotel.

London, Aug. 10.—Fire broke out through the roof the Carlton Hotel, at the corner of the Haymarket and Pall Mall last evening. Many fire engines were quickly summoned. Intense excitement prevailed in the district, which witnessed many thrilling escapes.

The fire was confined to the two upper storeys, and so far as known no one was hurt. The fire started in the top of the rear part near his Majesty's Theatre, and where the kitchens are situated. All the occupants of the portion of the hotel involved escaped.

Persian Financial Crisis.

London, Aug. 10.—The Times' Teheran correspondent thinks that in the face of the British protest the treasury gendarmerie scheme is likely to be dropped. He says Mr. Shuster, the Treasurer-General, takes an extremely despondent view as to the possibility of a reorganization of Persian financial affairs

MURDER IN ORILLIA

Ross Ford is Dead and His Chum is at Large

CHARGED WITH MURDER

Orillia, Aug. 11.—A quarrel between chums is thought to have been the cause of one man murdering the other in South Orillia, three miles from here, on Wednesday night, when Arthur Sheridan, a young man, stabbed Ross Ford in the throat. Sheridan was at a party at the house of George Duff. Ford arrived at 11.30 p.m., and Sheridan went out and met him. They walked down the road together for quite a distance and Sheridan returned alone, saying that he was afraid he had "done for" Ford, and asked them to call a doctor.

The deed was apparently committed in cold blood. There did not seem to be any quarrel at the time of the stabbing and Sheridan did not seem to be very perturbed when he returned to the house.

Several members of the house party hurried with Sheridan down the road. They found Ford lying face downward in the ditch beside the road. There was a large wound close to the juncture of the neck and the body. Life was soon found to be extinct.

Sheridan remained at the scene for a few moments, talking with the others. Then he went off alone and has not yet been heard from. Searching parties are now out combing the district in an effort to locate him. It is felt that he cannot possibly escape owing to the well settled nature of that part of the country.

It is said that the two men had a disagreement at another party several nights before. It is thought that it was over two sisters with whom the two boy companions had been familiar.

Henry C. Frick Retires.

New York, Aug. 11.—The retirement of Henry C. Frick from the directorate of the Union Pacific Railway Co. was announced yesterday afternoon. Mr. Frick tendered his resignation some days ago, but for some reason nothing was said about his retirement until yesterday.

It is understood that he will retire from other large corporations with which he has been prominently identified for many years, including the United States Steel Corporation.

Czar's Boy Scouts.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 11.—Emperor Nicholas yesterday reviewed 6,000 boys of the play troops from all parts of the empire. The Cabinet Ministers were present, together with a brilliant representation of society. The play troops are an offshoot of Baden-Powell's boy scouts.

Fruit Will Be Light.

Hamilton, Aug. 11.—Inspector Lewis, who has investigated conditions in the Niagara fruit belt, says that, contrary to expectations, the fruit crop will be light this year as a result of the damage done by "yellow curl" and San Jose scale.

Great Weather for Crop.

Winnipeg, Aug. 11.—It is fair and hot all over the west to-day, and the farmers are elated. The harvest will be on in another week, generally, with this sort of weather.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Heinrich Von Poschinger, the noted political writer and author of many works on the life of Bismarck, died yesterday.

There is a serious outbreak of plague in Shanghai. Since Saturday there have been 14 cases inside and outside the foreign settlement.

David Wolffsohn, leader of the Zionist movement since the death of the founder, Theodore Hertal, has decided to retire, because of ill-health.

A general strike has been declared at Cadiz, Spain, and most of the shops and factories have been closed down. There has been no disorder thus far.

In the House of Lords yesterday the Lord Chancellor stated that a free pardon had been granted to the Earl of Russell in respect to the felony recorded against him in 1901.

Togo to Visit Montreal.

Montreal, Aug. 11.—Admiral Count Togo, the distinguished Japanese visitor to America, will be the guest of the Canadian Club on Monday, Aug. 21. His Excellency will arrive from Buffalo on Monday morning, and will be escorted to the Sailors' Institute, where the Canadian Club will tender him a luncheon. Monday evening, the distinguished foreigner will entrain for Vancouver with his suite. He will be accompanied to Montreal by Commander Taniguichi, and their secretaries and aides.

The imperial consul-general of Japan will come down from Ottawa to meet the admiral and will attend the luncheon. The consul, Hon. Nakamura, will speak at the luncheon. Count Togo, however, will not make a speech, as his knowledge of English, though fair, makes him hesitate to speak in public.

On Monday afternoon Count Togo will be the guest of the city of Montreal, and Ald. Dandurand is of the opinion that a drive around the city, with tea on the mountain observatory, will be the program of the city's reception.

Man Thrown Overboard.

Tacoma, Wash., Aug. 11.—Capt. E. McMullen of the British tug Bermuda, which arrived here yesterday from Texada Island, reported that at six o'clock Tuesday evening, in the vicinity of Active Pass, in the Straits of Juan de Fuca, there was a man thrown overboard from a tramp steamer flying a foreign flag, which was passing out to sea from Victoria or Vancouver.

"I was looking at the vessel through the binoculars," said Capt. McMullen, "when I observed a commotion on the forward deck, and from the struggling mass of sailors a man was seen hoisted over the bulwarks, with a rope around his neck. He was lowered to within a few feet of the water, and then the rope broke or was cut."

The Canadian authorities have been notified.

Coronation Scouts Return.

London, Aug. 11.—The coronation detachment of Canadian boy scouts is returning by the Royal George, and sent the following wireless message:

"Canadian scouts, homeward bound, send heartiest thanks for kindness extended us. We had a glorious time, and assembled on deck have just given three cheers for the King, Queen and Royal Family; also for chief scout, Capt. Grenfell."

$20,000,000 Station For Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Plans for a new union railway station for Chicago, to cost $20,000,000, and to be used by the Pennsylvania lines, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, were announced yesterday. Work on the new structure will, it is said, be begun January 1. It is expected the terminal will be ready for use January 1, 1913.

GRIRO HAS SURRENDERED

Italian Murderer Walks into Toronto Police Station

REVELATIONS PROMISED

Toronto, Aug. 11.—Because he would rather die than live, hounded as he was by daily terror was Frank Griro's reason for shooting Frank Tarro, at the corner of Church and Front streets, on Sunday, July 30 last. Then, haunted by the dread of vengeance at the hands of the brother of the man, whom he killed, Gax Griro kept his promise to the police and gave himself up at the Agnes street station last night at 9.55. He had posted this letter from Detroit, on August 5.

"Dear Chief I will come soon to have mine sentence. I am Frank Griro."

This note was received at the Agnes street station on the 6th and Griro made good last night. He declared that no trouble regarding Rosa Brunet had anything to do with the shooting of Tarro.

Being kept informed of the movements of the Italians in Toronto, he had heard that the dead man's brother had left in pursuit of him under a vow to seek him to the end of the earth and cut him to pieces. Hearing this, even after he had written the letter, he fled wildly and aimlessly from Detroit to Chicago, to St. Louis, from which place he returned equally desperate to seek shelter in the hands of the police.

"I'm Frank," he said, on entering the station. "I'm the man who shot Tarro. I told you I was coming and here I am; come for sentence."

He was a member of the Black Hand Society and that organization tormented him day and night demanding $5 and $10 at a time to keep quiet.

Griro said he had over a hundred dollars at the time he left Toronto and last night had only $21.10 left. The rest was used to keep the society quiet and in railway fares.

"I've got a lot to tell about the Black Hand," he went on. "There's a lot of them who should be arrested."

After being searched, he was taken to Inspector Duncan's office, where he was cross-examined for three hours. He is stated to have made revelations regarding Black Hand bands in Toronto and elsewhere, which will doubtless prove of great worth to the police.

Just when Griro intended to return was unknown to the police. In his letter he merely stated that he would return and give himself up at the place he did. He arrived at the Union Station and went to Agnes street in a hack, for which he paid before entering the station.

Sergt. Snyder of Agnes street station said last evening that the prisoner walked quietly into the station. He told who he was and put up his hands as if to swear to his identity and also that the officers might search him.

Griro did not live at the York street restaurant, but at 175 Jarvis street, where Rosa Brunet was taken into custody as a material witness.

Interesting to Motorists.

Ottawa, Aug. 11.—E. H. Dale, of Brampton, Ont., whose automobile struck and seriously injured Mrs. Jos. McCracken on a street crossing here, was before the magistrate in the Police Court yesterday morning. The case was adjourned pending the outcome of Mrs. McCracken's injuries, which are reported serious.

The prosecution is based on section seven of the Ontario regulations respecting motor traffic. This section makes it an offence to recklessly or negligently drive a motor car at a speed dangerous to the public, having regard to all circumstances and the condition and use of the highway. The accident occurred as the woman was alighting from a street car.

British Press Association.

Ottawa, Aug. 11.—The Dominion immigration branch was notified yesterday of the arrival of the members of the British Press Association at Bimouski. They will spend two months in Canada as guests of the Government and under the guidance of J. Obed Smith, assistant superintendent of immigration for Canada in London. All the provinces will be visited. They will be in the Maritime Provinces until the 19th, Quebec until the 22nd, Ottawa the 23rd and 24th, and thence go to Toronto and Western Ontario, being due in Winnipeg September 3rd. A month will be spent in the West and they will sail from Quebec on October 7th.

Alleged Wrecker Arrested.

Buffalo, Aug. 11.—Frank Winiecki, a dockworker, alleged to be one of the bandits who held up a train at Wintergreen Gulch, near Erie, Pa., on the night of June 30, was brought before U. S. Commissioner Keating here yesterday, and in default of $5,000 bail, was held for the October term of the United States Court at Pittsburg.

Wireless Men Go to Jail.

New York, Aug. 11.—The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday denied the appeals of Christopher Columbus Wilson, president of the United Wireless Telegraph Co., Francis Ed. Butler, counsel and director, and W. W. Tompkins, head of the agency which disposed of the United Wireless stock, and confirmed their sentences.

Borden and Crosby Nominated.

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 11.—The Conservatives convention for Halifax City and County met yesterday afternoon and nominated R. L. Borden and A. B. Crosby, the late members. Senator Mackeen made the motion that Borden and Crosby be the candidates, which was unanimously adopted.

The Conservatives of Hants County yesterday afternoon nominated H. D. Tremain of Windsor.

In Yarmouth, B. B. Law, the late member, was nominated by the Liberals and in Cape Breton North, the Conservatives nominated John Mac Cormick.

Wright Nominated.

Bracebridge, Aug. 11.—At the Conservative convention held here yesterday, William Wright of Huntsville and Thomas E. Godson, K.C., were candidates. Mr. Wright was the choice of the convention.

Logan Accepts.

Amherst, N.S., Aug. 11.—H. J. Logan will be the candidate of the Liberal party in the approaching Dominion election.

In Megantic.

In Stormont.

In Sherbrooke.

Sherbrooke, Que., Aug. 11.—The Conservative convention for Sherbrooke County yesterday afternoon nominated Chas. D. White, lawyer, as party candidate.

Ayres' Cliff, Que., Aug. 11.—Geo. W. Paige was nominated candidate by the Conservative convention, to oppose C. H. Lovell, the Liberal choice.

Cholera Ravages Italy.

Chiasso, Switzerland, Aug. 11.—Official statistics regarding the cholera situation in Italy show that from August 1st to August 5th, inclusive, there were throughout the Kingdom of Italy 1,039 cases and 380 deaths from the disease.

The Italian Government's report shows that in the town of Naples there were 83 cases and 36 deaths, while in the province of Naples there were 308 cases and 58 deaths. In Genoa there were 43 cases and 18 deaths, and in Palermo 167 cases and 56 deaths.

Aerial Railway Plans Thwarted.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 11.—A step to build an aerial railway over the falls was thwarted yesterday when the Niagara reservation committee refused the promoters permission to build the American station in Prospect Park.

It was announced yesterday that Admiral Togo, the Japanese naval hero, would visit this city Aug. 19.

Hamilton was selected as the next convention city by the Ontario Grand Lodge of Oddfellows, which closed its annual session here last night.

John W. Gates' Will.

New York, Aug. 11.—The will of John W. Gates, who died Wednesday in Paris, will be probated in Port Arthur, Texas, where the financier made his residence. This much was ascertained yesterday at the offices of Byrne and Cutchheon, lawyers, which firm has custody of the last will and testament made by Mr. Gates. It is understood that the bulk of the property will go to "Charley" Gates, his son. The fortune is estimated at between $40,000,000 and $60,000,000.

Want Reduced Fire Rates.

Montreal, Aug. 11.—Members of the Board of Control intend to request the underwriters to reduce the fire insurance rates in the city. This action will be based upon the fact that since the controllers took hold of the city's management two and a half millions have been expended in laying water conduits, purchasing fire apparatus and increasing the efficiency of the fire department.

VETO BILL PASSED

They Swallow the Bitter Pill by a Majority of 17

BISHOPS VOTE WITH LIBERALS

London, Aug. 11.—Premier Asquith's Government, which claims to represent the democracy of Great Britain, last night enforced its will upon the peerage by the narrow vote of 131 to 114. By this vote the House of Lords decided to accept what the Liberals contend is the will of the people, and adopted Viscount Morley's motion not to insist upon the Lords' amendments to the Parliamentary bill, which practically limits the power of the House of Lords to a two years' suspensory veto and vastly increases the prerogatives of the House of Commons.

The great constitutional struggle, which began when the House of Lords nearly two years ago rejected the budget of David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is ended for a time at least, with the greatest change to Great Britain's working constitution since the passing of the reform bill.

The process of voting consumed nearly an hour and the result trembled in the balance until the last moment. The "die hards" mustered greater strength than the prophets had anticipated, and the Government owes its victory to the votes of between twenty and thirty Conservatives who threw in their lot with the Liberals to save their own caste from loss of prestige by a great increase in its numbers and the King from the necessity of the exercise of the royal prerogative, from which everyone believes he was most anxious to be saved.

The Archbishops of Canterbury and York and nine bishops lined up with the Government, although the ecclesiastical lords generally keep aloof from party questions. The Bishops of Bangor and Worcester went with the Balfouryites, "the last ditchers."

It was noticeable that the highest ranks of the nobility furnished the fewest supporters of the Government. The Dukes of Norfolk, Leeds, Marlborough, Newcastle, Northumberland, Somerset and Westminster voted with the Opposition, while the remainder abstained from voting.

"Drinking the hemlock" had become an historic phrase in past months, and the gathering in the ancient chamber last night to witness this memorable humiliation was worthy of the occasion. Peeresses, ambassadors and commoners packed the galleries, and a group of private counsellors, exercising the prerogatives of their position, sat upon the steps of the throne. The benches, aisles and floor were crowded.

Lt.-Col Arthur Lee, in speaking in the House of Commons yesterday, said this would be a black day in England's history if the House of Lords accepted the veto bill and the House of Commons cut adrift from the traditions of centuries to bestow salaries upon its members. Apparently the sentiment of the peers was in full accord with this description of the occasion. Lords frequently forgot the oppressive dignity which customarily marks the proceedings in the Upper Chamber, and fought for a hearing with the strenuousness of an American Congressman who has cherished a public building bill and sees the last hours of the session slipping past.

The Earl of Halsbury once went so far as to make a formal motion that one of his supporter be heard in preference to one peer who favored the Government.

When the voting began, Lord Lansdowne withdrew to a position behind the throne, but his followers watched the issue eagerly. The bishops on both sides walked through the tellers first. A thrill of excitement marked the appearance of each notable, but none was greater than when Lord Rosebery appeared as a supporter of the Government.

As soon as the result was known, several members of the House of Commons rushed from the galleries and into their own chamber and whispered the news to the members. A great cheer followed the announcement of the Government's victory.

The question of the hour is what effect last night's decision will have upon the future fortunes of the Conservative party. Viscount Morley's definite announcement that enough peers would be created permanently to swamp the Upper House if the Government did not prevail, apparently swayed a few waverers and decided the issue.

Fire Loss $200,000.

London, Aug. 11.—After a careful examination, the management of the Carlton Hotel yesterday estimated the loss caused by the fire and water at between $200,000 and $300,000. The loss is completely covered by insurance, which also includes the belongings of guests.

King George yesterday telegraphed the managers of the Carlton expressing his sympathy.

TWO THOUSAND PER.

British Commoners Vote Themselves Salary.

London, Aug. 11.—A resolution to pay members of the House of Commons $2,000 annually for their services was carried by a vote of 156 to 109.

The resolution was moved by Chancellor David Lloyd-George, in the House of Commons yesterday. The Chancellor said that Great Britain was the only country in the world that did not pay members for their work in Parliament, which nowadays was so strenuous that the members had little time to attend to anything else.

The Unionists opposed the payment plan on the ground that it would be a violation of the principle of gratuitous public service as well as improper for members to vote themselves salaries. Arthur Hamilton Lee, Unionist member for the Fareham division of Hants, who moved the official Unionist amendment against salaries, argued that the effect of the Chancellor's bill would be to keep out the best types and fill Parliament with professional politicians.

James Ramsay MacDonald, Labor leader, denied that the measure would cause corruption, and said that it would "tend to help the tide of purity which is flowing over American politics."

Died From Burns.

Montreal, Aug. 11.—Corinne Dugault, a domestic who was badly burned in the explosion of a methylated spirit lamp at Riviere Des Prairies Wednesday night, when C. E. Beaudry, aged 9, was burned to death, succumbed to her injuries yesterday. The girl suffered excruciating agony before the end came.

Edwards For Frontenac.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 11.—The Liberal and Conservative conventions for Frontenac were held in opposite rooms in the court house yesterday afternoon. Dr. J. W. Edwards is the Conservative candidate, and Robert E. Fair, Kingston Township, is the Liberal selected to oppose him.

Real Estate Man Killed.

Montreal, Aug. 11.—Wm. Stewart, a real estate agent, was killed and several people were injured yesterday afternoon when a St. Catharine street car crashed into a crowded terminal car on the Bout de L'Ile line at the corner of St. Catherine street and La Salle avenue.

Sir John French Chosen.

Kryptok Lenses

The NEW INVISIBLE double vision lens. On the market but a few years, more than 200,000 ARE BEING WORN.

EVERY TIME—
You wipe "cemented on" bifocal lenses you run the risk of ruining their efficiency and making yourself expense by wiping off the wafers of this "cemented on" glass.

EVERY TIME—
You wipe Kryptok double vision lenses you make them brighter and better. You cannot—mind, you cannot—wipe off a wafer because there is no wafer to wipe off.

EVERY TIME—
You see a person wearing "cemented on" bifocal lenses, the lines say "Over forty if a day." The absence of lines in Kryptoks makes you think the wearer under forty.

EVERY TIME—
Someone looks at you they'll think the same. With our complete line of up-to-date Finger Mounts and Spectacles we can make your glasses look well and your eyes see well.

"ADVENTURE"

By JACK LONDON

The boy was sitting down and groaning, his arms clasped his bent knees, his head drooped forward and rolling painfully back and forth. For fear of poison, Sheldon had immediately scarified the wound and injected permanganate of potash; but in spite of the precaution, the shoulder was swelling rapidly.

"We'll take him on to where Tudor is lying," Joan said. "The walking will help to keep up his circulation and scatter the poison. Adamu Adam, you take hold that boy. Maybe he will want to sleep. Shake him up. If he sleep, he die."

The advance was more rapid now, for Binu Charley placed the captive bushman in front of him and made him clear the runway of traps. Once, at a sharp turn where a man's shoulder would unavoidably brush against a screen of leaves, the bushman displayed great caution as he spread the leaves aside and exposed the head of a sharp-pointed spear, so set that the casual passer-by would receive at the least a nasty scratch.

"My word," said Binu Charley, "that fella spear allee same devil-devil."

He took the spear and was examining it, when suddenly he made as if to stick it into the bushman. It was a bit of simulated playfulness, but the bushman sprang back in evident fright. Poisoned the weapon was beyond any doubt, and thereafter Binu Charley carried it threateningly at the prisoner's back.

The sun, sinking behind a lofty western peak, brought on an early but lingering twilight, and the expedition plodded on through the evil forest—the place of mystery and fear, of death swift and silent and horrible, of brutish appetite and degraded instinct, of human life that still wallowed in the primeval slime, of savagery degenerate and abysmal. No slightest breezes blew in the gloomy silence, and the air was stale and humid and suffocating. The sweat poured unceasingly from their bodies, and in their nostrils was the heavy smell of rotting vegetation and of black earth that was a-crawl with fecund life.

They turned aside from the runway at a place indicated by Binu Charley, and, sometimes crawling on hands and knees through the damp black muck, at other times creeping and climbing through the tangled undergrowth a dozen feet from the ground, they came to an immense banyan tree, half an acre in extent, that made in the innermost heart of the jungle a denser jungle of its own. From out of its black depths came the voice of a man singing in a cracked eerie voice.

"My word, that big fella marster he no die!"

The singing stopped, and the voice, faint and weak, called out a hello. Joan answered, and then the voice explained.

"I'm not wandering. I was just singing to keep my spirits up. Have you got anything to eat?"

A few minutes saw the rescued man lying among blankets, while fires were building, water was being carried, Joan's tent was going up, and Lalaperu was overhauling the packs and opening tins of provisions. Tudor, having pulled through the fever and started to mend, was still frightfully weak and very much starved. So badly swollen was he from mosquito bites that his face was unrecognizable, and the acceptance of his identity was largely a matter of faith. Joan had her own ointments along, and she prefaced their application by fomenting his swollen features with hot cloths.

TO Get Poisons From the Blood

You Have to Depend on the Filtering Process of the Liver and Kidneys.

These Organs Alone Can Purify the Blood, and They Do Their Work Well When Helped by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

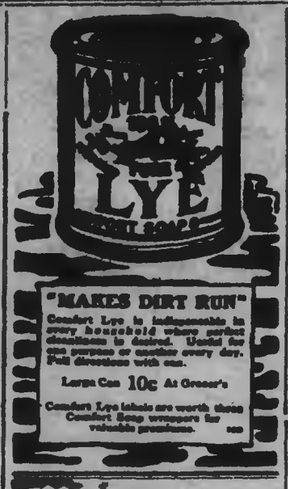
No medical treatment can possibly purify the blood except as it sets in healthy working order the kidneys, liver and bowels.

To these organs is assigned the duty of filtering from the blood the poisonous waste matter which is left over when the nutritious elements are extracted from the food you eat. If they are not overcrowded or slow and sluggish in action they keep the blood pure and healthy.

For this reason Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are the most satisfactory treatment you can possibly obtain to purify the blood.

Their effects are prompt, definite and certain. The liver action is quickened, the kidneys are invigorated, the regular movement of the bowels is assured. It is only a matter of a few hours until you begin to feel the benefit of this great medicine. Further use, as often as is necessary to keep these organs active, will cleanse and purify the blood and enable the digestive system to properly do its work.

Backache, headache and bodily pains will disappear, and the fatigue which is an accompaniment of poisons in the system will give way to new vigour and energy. One pill a dose. 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.



CHAPTER XXV
THE HEAD-HUNTERS

The morning's action had been settled the night before. Tudor was to stay behind in his banyan refuge and gather strength while the expedition proceeded. On the far chance that they might rescue even one solitary survivor of Tudor's party, Joan was fixed in her determination to push on; and neither Sheldon nor Tudor could persuade her to remain quietly at the banyan tree while Sheldon went on and searched. With Tudor, Adamu Adam and Arahu were to stop as guards, the latter Tahitian being selected to remain because of a bad foot which had been brought about by stepping on one of the thorns concealed by the bushmen. It was evidently a slow poison, and not too strong, that the bushmen used, for the wounded Poonga-Poonga man was still alive, and though his swollen shoulder was enormous, the inflammation had already begun to go down. He, too, remained with Tudor.

Binu Charley led the way, by proxy, however, for, by means of the poisoned spear, he drove the captive bushman ahead. The runway still ran through the dank and rotten jungle, and they knew no villages would be encountered till rising ground was gained. They plodded on, panting and sweating in the humid, stagnant air. They were immersed in a sea of wanton, prodigal vegetation. All about them the huge-rooted trees blocked their footing, while coiled and knotted climbers, of the girth of a man's arm, were thrown from lofty branch to lofty branch or hung in tangled masses like so many monstrous snares. Lush-stalked plants, larger-leaved than the body of a man, exuded a sweaty moisture from all their surfaces. Here and there, banyan trees, like rocky islands, shouldered aside the streaming riot of vegetation, between their crowded columns showing portals and passages wherein all daylight was lost and only midnight gloom remained. Tree-ferns and mosses and a myriad other parasitic forms jostled with gay-colored fungoid growths for room to live, and the very atmosphere itself seemed to afford clinging space to airy fairy creepers, light and delicate as gem-dust, tremulous with microscopic blooms. Pale-golden and vermilion orchids flaunted their unhealthy blossoms in the golden, dripping sunshine that filtered through the matted roof. It was the mysterious, evil forest, a charnel house of silence, wherein naught moved save strange tiny birds—the strangeness of them making the mystery more profound, for they flitted on noiseless wings, emitting neither song nor chirp, and they were mottled with morbid colors, having all the seeming of orchids, flying blossoms of sickness and decay.

He was caught by surprise, fifteen feet in the air above the path, in the forks of a many-branched tree. All saw him as he dropped like a shadow, naked as on his natal morn, landing springily on his bent knees and like a shadow leaping along the runway. It was hard for them to realise that it was a man, for he seemed a weird jungle sprite, a goblin of the forest. Only Binu Charley was not perturbed. He flung his poisoned spear over the head of the captive, at the fitting form. It was a mighty cast, well-intended, but the shadow, leaping, received the spear harmlessly between the legs, and, tripping upon it, was flung sprawling. Before he could get away, Binu Charley was upon him, clutching him by his snow-white hair. He was only a young man, and a dandy at that, his face blackened with charcoal, his hair whitened with wood-ashes, with the freshly severed tail of a wild pig thrust through his perforated nose and two more thrust through his ears. His only other ornament was a necklace of human finger-bones. At sight of their other prisoner he chattered in a high querulous falsetto, with puckered brows and troubled, wild-animal eyes. He was disposed of along the middle of the line, one of the Poonga-Poonga men leading him at the end of a length of bark rope.

The trail began to rise out of the jungle, dipping at times into festering hollows of unwholesome vegetation, but rising more and more over swelling, unseen hill-slopes or climbing steep hog-backs and rocky hummocks where the forest thinned and blue patches of sky appeared overhead.

"Close up he stop," Binu Charley warned them in a whisper.

Even as he spoke, from high overhead came the deep resonant boom of a village drum. But the beat was slow, there was no panic in the sound. They were directly beneath the village and they could hear the crowing of roosters, two women's voices raised in brief dispute, and, once, the crying of a child. The runway now became a deeply worn path, rising so steeply that several times the party paused for breath. The path never widened, and in places the feet and the rains of generations had scoured it till it was sunken twenty feet beneath the surface.

"One man with a rifle could hold it against a thousand," Sheldon whispered to Joan. "And twenty men could hold it with spears and arrows."

They came out on the village, situated on a small, upland plateau, grass-covered and with only occasional trees. There was a wild chorus of warning cries from the women, who scurried out of the grass houses and like frightened quail dived over the opposite edge of the clearing, gathering up their babies and children as they ran. At the same time spears and arrows began to fall among the invaders. At Sheldon's command, the Tahitians and Poonga-Poonga men got into action with their rifles. The spears and arrows ceased, the last bushmen disappeared, and the fight was over almost as soon as it had begun. On their own side no one had been hurt, while half a dozen bushmen had been killed. These alone remained, the wounded having been carried off. The Tahitians and Poonga-Poonga men had warmed up and were for pursuit, but this Sheldon would not permit. To his pleased surprise, Joan backed him up in the decision; for, glancing at her once, during the firing, he had seen her white face, like a glittering sword in its fighting intensity, the nostrils dilated, the eyes bright and steady and shining.

"Poor brutes," she said. "They act only according to their natures. To eat their kind and take heads is good morality for them."

"But they should be taught not to take white men's heads," Sheldon argued.

She nodded approval, and said, "If we find one head, we'll burn the village. Hey, you, Charley! What fella place head he stop?"

"S'pose he stop along devil-devil house," was the answer. "That big fella house, he devil-devil."

It was the largest house in the village, ambitiously ornamented with fancy-plaited mats and king-posts carved into obscene and monstrous forms half-human and half-animal. Into it they went, in the obscure light stumbling across the sleeping-logs of the village bachelors and knocking their heads against strings of weird votive offerings, dried and shrivelled, that hung from the roof-beams. On either side were rude gods, some grotesquely carved, others no more than shapeless logs swathed in rotten and indescribably filthy matting. The air was mouldy and heavy with decay, while strings of fish-tails and of half-cleaned dogs and crocodile skulls did not add to the wholesomeness of the place.

In the centre, crouched before a slow smoking fire, in the littered ashes of a thousand fires, was an old man who blinked apathetically at the invaders. He was extremely old—so old that his withered skin hung about him in loose folds and did not look like skin. His hands were bony claws, his emaciated face a sheer death's-head. His task, it seemed, was to tend the fire, and while he blinked at them he added to it a handful of dead and mouldy wood. And hung in the smoke they found the object of their search. Joan turned and stumbled out hastily, deathly sick, reeling into the sunshine and clutching at the air for support.

"See if all are there," she called back faintly, and tottered aimlessly on for a few steps, breathing the air in great draughts and trying to forget the sight she had seen.

Upon Sheldon fell the unpleasant task of tallying the heads. They were all there, nine of them, white men's heads, the faces of which he had been familiar with when their owners had camped in Berande compound and set up the poling-boats. Binu Charley, hugely interested, lent a hand, turning the heads around for identification, noting the hatchet-strokes, and remarking the distorted expressions. The Poonga-Poonga men gloated as usual, and as usual the Tahitians were shocked and angry, several of them cursing and muttering in undertones. So angry was Matapuu, that he strode suddenly over to the fire-tender and kicked him in the ribs, whereupon the old savage emitted an appalling squeal, piglike in its wild-animal fear, and fell face downward in the ashes and lay quivering in momentary expectation of death.

Other heads, thoroughly sun-dried and smoke-cured, were found in abundance, but, with two exceptions, they were the heads of blacks. So this was the manner of hunting that went on in the dark and evil forest, Sheldon thought, as he regarded them. The atmosphere of the place was sickening, yet he could not forbear to pause before one of Binu Charley's finds.

"Me savvee black Mary, me savvee white Mary," quoth Binu Charley. "Me no savvee that fella Mary. What name belong him?"

Sheldon looked. Ancient and withered, blackened by many years of the smoke of the devil-devil house, nevertheless the shrunken, mummy-like face was unmistakably Chinese. How it had come there was the mystery. It was a woman's head, and he had never heard of a Chinese woman in the history of the Solomons. From the ears hung two-inch long ear-rings, and at Sheldon's direction, the Binu man rubbed away the accretions of smoke and dirt and from under his fingers appeared the polished green of jade, the sheen of pearl, and the warm red of Oriental gold. The other head, equally ancient, was a white man's, as the heavy blond mustache, twisted and askew on the shrivelled upper lip, gave sufficient advertisement; and Sheldon wondered what forgotten beche-de-mer fisherman or sandalwood trader had gone to furnish that ghastly trophy.

Telling Binu Charley to remove the ear-rings, and directing the Poonga-Poonga men to carry out the old fire-tender, Sheldon cleared the devil-devil house and set fire to it. Soon every house was blazing merrily, while the ancient fire-tender sat upright in the sunshine blinking at the destruction of his village. From the heights above, where were evidently other villages, came the booming of drums and a wild blowing of war-conches but Sheldon had dared all he cared to with his small following. Besides, his mission was accomplished. Every member of Tudor's expedition was accounted for; and it was a long, dark way out of the head-hunters' country. Releasing their two prisoners, who leaped away like startled deer, they plunged down the steep path into the steaming jungle.

Joan, still shocked by what she had seen, walked on in front of Sheldon subdued and silent. At the end of half an hour she turned to him with a wan smile and said:

"I don't think I care to visit the head-hunters any more. It's adventure, I know; but there is such a thing as having too much of a good thing. Riding around the plantation will henceforth be good enough for me, or perhaps salving another Martha; but the bushmen of Guadalcanar need never worry for fear that I shall visit them again. I shall have nightmares for months to come, I know I shall. Ugh!—the horrid beasts!"

That night found them back in camp with Tudor, who, while improving, would still have to be carried down on a stretcher. The swelling of the Poonga-Poonga man's shoulder was going down slowly, but Arahu still limped on his thorn-poisoned foot.

Two days later they rejoined the boats at Carli; and at high noon of the third day, travelling with the current and shooting the rapids, the expedition arrived at Berande. Joan with a sigh, unbuckled her revolver-belt and hung it on the nail in the living-room, while Sheldon, who had been lurking about for the sheer joy of seeing her perform that particular home-coming act, sighed, too, with satisfaction. But the home-coming was not all joy to him, for Joan set about nursing Tudor, and spent much time on the veranda when he lay in the hammock under the mosquito netting.

CHAPTER XXVI
BURNING DAYLIGHT

The ten days of Tudor's convalescence that followed were peaceful days on Berande. The work of the plantation went on like clockwork. With the crushing of the premature outbreak of Gogoomy and his following, all insubordination seemed to have vanished. Twenty more of the old time boys, their term of service up, were carried away by the Martha and the fresh stock of labor, treated fairly, was proving of excellent quality. As Sheldon rode about the plantation, acknowledging to himself the comfort and convenience of a horse and wondering why he had not thought of getting one himself, he pondered the various improvements for which Joan was responsible—the splendid Poonga-Poonga recruits; the fruits and vegetables; the Martha herself, snatched from the sea for a song and earning money hand over fist despite old Kinross' slow and safe method of running her; and Berande, once more financially secure, approaching each day nearer the dividend-paying time and growing each day as the black toilers cleared the bush, cut the cane-grass, and planted more cocoanut palms.

In these and a thousand ways Sheldon was made aware of how much he was indebted for material prosperity to Joan—to the slender, level-browed girl with romance shining out of her gray eyes and adventure shouting from the long-barrelled Colt's on her hip, who had landed on the beach that piping gale, along with her stalwart Tahitian crew, and who had entered his bungalow to hang with boy's hands her revolver-belt and Baden-Powell hat on the nail by the billiard-table. He forgot all the early exasperations, remembering only her charms and sweetnesses and glorying much in the traits he at first had disliked most—her boyishness and adventurousness, her delight to swim and risk the sharks, her desire to go recruiting, her love of the sea and ships, her sharp authoritative words when she launched the whale-boat and with fire-stick in one hand and dynamite stick in the other departed with her picturesque crew to shoot fish in the Bale-aana,, her super-innocent disdain for the commonest conventions, her juvenile joy in argument, her fluttering, wild-bird love of freedom and mad passion for independence. All this he now loved, and he no longer desired to tame and hold her, though the paradox was the winning of her without the taming and the holding.

There were times when he was dizzy with thought of her and love of her, when he would stop his horse and with closed eyes picture her as he had seen her that first day, in the sternsheets of the whale-boat, dashing madly in to shore and marching belligerently along his veranda to remark that it was pretty hospitality, this letting strangers sink or swim in his front yard. And as he opened his eyes and urged his horse onward, he would ponder for the ten thousandth time how possibly he was ever to hold her when she was so wild and birdlike that she was bound to flutter out and away from under his hand.

It was patent to Sheldon that Tudor had become interested in Joan. That convalescent visitor practically lived on the veranda, although, while preposterously weak and shaky in the legs, he had for some time insisted on coming in to join them at the table at meals. The first warning Sheldon had of the other's growing interest in the girl was when Tudor eased down and finally ceased pricking him with his habitual sharpness of quip and speech. This cessation of verbal sparring was like the breaking off of diplomatic relations between countries at the beginning of war, and, once Sheldon's suspicions were aroused, he was not long in finding other confirmations. Tudor too obviously joyed in Joan's presence, too obviously laid himself out to amuse and fascinate her with his own glorious and adventurous personality. Often, after his morning ride over the plantation, or coming in from the store or from inspection of the copra-drying, Sheldon found the pair of them together on the veranda, Joan listening, intent and excited, and Tudor deep in some recital of personal adventure at the ends of the earth.

Sheldon noticed, too, the way Tudor looked at her and followed her about with his eyes, and in those eyes he noted a certain hungry look, and on the face a certain wistful expression; and he wondered if on his own face he carried a similar involuntary advertisement. He was sure of several things: first, that Tudor was not the right man for Joan and could not possibly make her permanently happy; next, that Joan was too sensible a girl really to fall in love with a man of such superficial stamp; and, finally, that Tudor would blunder his love-making somehow. And at the same time, with true lover's anxiety, Sheldon feared that the other might somehow fail to blunder, and win the girl with purely fortuitous and successful meretricious show. But of the one thing Sheldon was sure: Tudor had no intimate knowledge of her and was unaware of how vital in her was her wildness and love of independence. That was where he would blunder—in the catching and the holding of her. And then, in spite of all his certitude, Sheldon could not forbear wondering if his theories of Joan might not be wrong, and if Tudor was not going the right way about after all.

The situation was very unsatisfactory and perplexing. Sheldon played the difficult part of waiting and looking on, while his rival devoted himself energetically to reaching out and grasping at the fluttering prize. Then again Tudor had such an irritating way about him. It had become quite elusive and intangible, now that he had tacitly severed diplomatic relations; but Sheldon sensed what he deemed a growing antagonism and promptly magnified it through the jealous lenses of his own lover's eyes. The other was an interloper. He did not belong to Berande, and now that he was well and strong again, it was time for him to go. Instead of which, and despite the calling in of the mail steamer bound for Sydney, Tudor had settled himself down comfortably, resumed swimming, went dynamiting fish with Joan, spent hours with her hunting pigeons, trapping crocodiles, and at target practice with rifle and revolver.

But there were certain traditions of hospitality that prevented Sheldon from breathing a hint that it was time for his guest to take himself off. And in similar fashion, feeling that it was not playing the game, he fought down the temptation to warn Joan. Had he known anything not too serious, to Tudor's detriment, he would have been unable to utter it; but the worst of it was that he knew nothing at all against the man. That was the confounded part of it, and sometimes he was so baffled and overwrought by his feelings that he assumed a superjudicial calm and assured himself that his dislike of Tudor was a matter of unsubstantial prejudice and jealousy.

Outwardly, he maintained a calm and smiling aspect. The work of the plantation went on. The Martha and the Flibberty-Gibbet came and went, as did all the miscellany of coasting craft that dropped in to wait for a breeze and have a gossip, a drink or two, and a game of billiards. Satan kept the compound free of niggers. Boucher came down regularly in his whale-boat to pass Sunday. Twice a day, at breakfast and dinner, Joan and Sheldon and Tudor met amicably at table, and the evenings were as amicably spent on the veranda.

And then it happened. Tudor made his blunder. Never divining Joan's fluttering wildness, her blind hatred of restraint and compulsion, her abhorrence of mystery by another, and mistaking the warmth and enthusiasm in her eyes (aroused by his latest tale) for something tender and acquiescent, he drew her to him, laid a forcible detaining arm about her waist, and misapprehended her frantic revolt for an exhibition of maidenly reluctance. It occurred on the veranda, after breakfast, and Sheldon, within, pondering a Sydney wholesaler's catalogue and making up his orders for next steamer-day, heard the sharp exclamation of Joan, followed by the equally sharp impact of an open hand against a cheek. Jerking free from the arm that was all distasteful compulsion, Joan had slapped Tudor's face resoundingly and with far more vim and weight than when she had cuffed Gogoomy.

Sheldon had half started up, then controlled himself and sunk back in his chair, so that by the time Joan entered the door, his composure was recovered. Her right forearm was clutched tightly in her left hand, while the white cheeks, centred with the spots of flaming red, reminded him of the time he had first seen her angry.

"He hurt my arm," she blurted out, in reply to his look of inquiry.

He smiled involuntarily. It was so like her, so like the boy she was, to come running to complain of the physical hurt which had been done her. She was certainly not a woman versed in the ways of man and in the ways of handling man. The resounding slap she had given Tudor seemed still echoing in Sheldon's ears, and as he looked at the girl before him crying out that her arm was hurt, his smile grew broader.

It was the smile that did it, convicting Joan in her own eyes of the silliness of her cry and sending over her face the most amazing blush he had ever seen. Throat, cheeks, and forehead flamed with the rush of the shamed blood.

"He—he—" she attempted to vindicate her deeper indignation, then whirled abruptly away and passed out the rear door and down the steps.

Sheldon sat and mused. He was a trifle angry, and the more he dwelt upon the happening, the angrier he grew. If it had been any woman except Joan, it would have been amusing. But Joan was the last woman in the world to attempt to kiss forcibly. The thing smacked of the backstairs anyway — a sordid little comedy perhaps, but to have tried it on Joan was nothing less than sacrilege. The man should have had better sense. Then, too, Sheldon was personally aggrieved. He had been filched of something that he felt was almost his, and his lover's jealousy was rampant at thought of this forced familiarity.

It was while in this mood that the screen door banged loudly behind the heels of Tudor, who strode into the room and paused before him. Sheldon was unprepared, though it was very apparent that the other was furious.

"Well?" Tudor demanded defiantly.

And on the instant speech rushed to Sheldon's lips.

"I hope you won't attempt anything like it again, that's all—except that I shall be only too happy any time to extend to you the courtesy of my whale-boat. It will land you in Tulagi in a few hours."

"As if that would settle it," was the retort.

"I don't understand," Sheldon said simply.

"Then it is because you don't wish to understand."

"Still I don't understand," Sheldon said in steady level tones. "All that is clear to me is that you are exaggerating your own blunder into something serious."

Tudor grinned maliciously and replied:

"It would seem that you are doing the exaggerating, inviting me to leave in your whale-boat. It is telling me that Berande is not big enough for the pair of us. Now let me tell you that the Solomon Islands are not big enough for the pair of us. This thing's got to be settled between us, and it may as well be settled right here and now."

"I can understand your fire-eating manners as being natural to you," Sheldon went on wearily, "but why you should try them on me is what I can't comprehend. You surely don't want to quarrel with me."

"I certainly do."

"But what in heaven's name for?"

Tudor surveyed him with withering disgust.

"You haven't the soul of a louse. I suppose any man could make love to your wife—"

"But I have no wife," Sheldon interrupted.

"Then you ought to have. The situation is outrageous. You might at least marry her as I am honourably willing to do."

For the first time Sheldon's rising anger boiled over.

"You—" he began violently, then abruptly caught control of himself and went on soothingly, "you'd better take a drink and think it over. That's my advice to you. Of course, when you do get cool, after talking to me in this fashion, you won't want to stay on any longer, so while you're getting that drink I'll call the boat's crew and launch a boat. You'll be in Tulagi by eight this evening."

He turned toward the door, as if to put his words into execution, but the other caught him by the shoulder and twirled him around.

"Look here, Sheldon, I told you the Solomons were too small for the pair of us, and I meant it."

"Is that an offer to buy Berande, lock, stock, and barrel?" Sheldon queried.

"No it isn't. It's an invitation to fight."

"But what the devil do you want to fight with me for?" Sheldon's irritation was growing at the other's persistence. "I've no quarrel with you. And what quarrel can you have with me? I have never interfered with you. You were my guest. Miss Lackland is my partner. If you saw fit to make love to her, and somehow failed to succeed, why should you want to fight with me? This is the twentieth century, my dear fellow, and duelling went out of fashion before you and I were born."

"You began the row," Tudor doggedly asserted. "You gave me to understand that it was time for me to go. You fired me out of your house, in short. And then you have the cheek to want to know why I am starting the row. It won't do, I tell you. You started it, and I am going to see it through."

Sheldon smiled tolerantly and proceeded to light a cigarette. But Tudor was not to be turned aside.

"There isn't any row. It takes two to make a row, and I, for one, refuse to have anything to do with such tomfoolery."

"You started it, I say, and I'll tell you why you started it."

"I fancy you've been drinking," Sheldon interposed. "It's the only explanation I can find for your unreasonableness."

"And I'll tell you why you started it. It wasn't silliness on your part to exaggerate this little trifle of love-making into something serious. I was poaching on your preserves, and you wanted to get rid of me. It was all very nice and snug here, you and the girl, until I came along. And now you're jealous—that's it, jealousy — and want me out of it. But I won't go."

"Then stay on by all means. I won't quarrel with you about it. Make yourself comfortable. Stay for a year, if you wish."

"She's not your wife," Tudor continued, as though the other had not spoken. "A fellow has the right to make love to her unless she's your—well, perhaps it was an error after all, due to ignorance, perfectly excusable, on my part. I might have seen it with half an eye if I'd listened to the gossip on the beach. All Guvutu and Tulagi were laughing about it. I was a fool, and I certainly made the mistake of taking the situation on its assumed innocent face-value."

So angry was Sheldon becoming that the face and form of the other seemed to vibrate and oscillate before his eyes. Yet outwardly Sheldon was calm and apparently weary of the discussion.

"Please keep her out of the conversation," he said

TOLD MAXIMILIAN HOW HE COULD SAVE HIMSELF

FULL Story, Told for the First Time, of How Jo Shelby's Plan Was Frustrated by General Sheridan—Details of an Historical Interview

MAJOR-GENERAL JO SHELBY. COLONEL JOHN C. MOORE

GENERAL SHERIDAN and General Jo Shelby met in Washington several years after the civil war. Shelby had recovered from his stubborn determination to surrender never, and his plan to assist in establishing an empire in Mexico had come to naught.

"I was very anxious to go over into Mexico after you," said Sheridan to his guest. "In fact," continued the hero of Winchester, "if my request had been granted you would not have got into Mexico. While I was waiting for orders you slipped in. The orders to go after you never came, and it was one of my bitterest disappointments."

"I wish you had got them, for we found it mighty lonesome over there," replied Shelby as he lifted his glass.

"Shelby," said Sheridan with his characteristic graciousness, "I believe that every man who went through our war felt lonesome for two or three years after it was over."

If Sheridan had received the orders he wished this story would not have been written. If Shelby had been able to persuade Maximilian to adopt his plans maybe, and it is quite likely, there would have been no Diaz and no Madero.

BY FRANK H. BROOKS.

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

THERE was a time when the United States was mightily concerned over conditions in Mexico. The people of the country did not realize the situation. The civil war had just ended. The ink on the peace pact of Appomattox was hardly dry. Reconstruction had yet to be tried. Except for inexorable demands upon it business was in a state of impotency. The country was waiting, and a doubtful wait it was.

An ugly problem had been gathering for two years before Lee's surrender. This was the menace in Mexico, the attempt to found an empire there by a Continental power—the possibility of foreign complications. What was to be the ultimate of the scheme of France by which Maximilian was in Mexico supported by French arms under the command of an intrepid hero of the Crimea—Marshal Bazaine?

A curious thing occurred at that moment. An American soldier with the dust and the wear and tear of the ride and the camp upon his uniform, pregnant with initiative and with a passion for daring, with a following of men of intellectual force and soldiers used to powder, shell, shrapnel and the clash and dash of sabres, went to the palace in Mexico City and in plain, blunt words, honestly put, told Maximilian how he could save himself.

It was a curious thing, for the man who did this was General Jo Shelby. It was not what he went into Mexico to do. It is singular that facts are often concealed nothing. When Shelby found that he could not accomplish his first plans he undertook the very opposite. That he failed in his original plans was due to General Sheridan.

Strange, but true, Shelby never knew why the succor he offered to the Mexicans who were seeking to overthrow Maximilian was declined. That is what Shelby went to Mexico to do, and that was why he had the following he presented later to the court in Mexico City. The reason for Shelby's expedition to Mexico was to escape from the dominion of the United States, which had become odious to that part of the defeated Confederate army. There was no intention of making conquest in Mexico. It was the hope of Shelby and his followers that a colony might be established beyond the Rio Grande where the people of the South might go and rehabilitate their fortunes.

When the expedition started there were but four hundred in line. This force was augumented until it numbered eight hundred. At that time there were sixty thousand Confederate soldiers in camp in Texas. They were in hunger and rags and hesitating which way to go. They were disheartened at the repeated failure of their leaders and afraid to go home. The details of the condition of these men are given in official records at Washington. Stripped of their red tape these details form the key of a dramatic story. They tell how men to whom war had become a habit and almost a necessity sought in vain to persuade starving, defeated and emaciated men to seek new fields.

While trying to decide many were stricken and died. Some committed suicide, some wandered back to deserted homes, and of that camp of sixty thousand nothing was left at the last. It simply disappeared. Some of those who were in that camp followed Shelby. Others who went with him were from other commands, many of whom had never seen Shelby; but all had heard of him, for no man in the Southern cause was more widely known.

It was a motley aggregation that went over to Mexican soil. There were the hardened and embittered remnants of Quantrell, and men who had been in strange places and done some work that they would not talk about under the orders of "Bill" Anderson. There were men of rank, major generals, colonels and others. Later this following was enlarged by Judah P. Benjamin, who had held three posts in Jefferson Davis' Cabinet; John C. Breckinridge, before the war Vice President of the United States when Buchanan was President, and in 1860 candidate for President of the Southern section of the Democratic party, Kirby Smith, not particularly well known, Magruder, Price, Wheat and Harris—men important factors in the cause now lost. The expedition took with it fourteen pieces of artillery, which were given to the Mexicans in their fight against imperialism.

Sheridan, who had been sent South to prevent Shelby from crossing the Rio Grande, never believed that Shelby was honest in what he proclaimed, that he was going over to help the Mexicans. He lost no time in warning the Mexicans against Shelby. In a letter to Grant, Sheridan explained that he had headed off Shelby in his intentions. The advice of Sheridan caused Shelby the surprise of his life. When he arrived in Nuevo Leon he reported to the Governor of the State, who immediately placed Shelby and his company under arrest, disarmed them and informed them that their assistance was not needed in Mexico. The Governor then released Shelby and his company and told them they were at liberty to go where they pleased. It was this that caused Shelby to proceed to Mexico City, where he offered, later, his services and his men to the cause of Maximilian.

Sheridan was happy over his efforts in preventing Shelby from making terms with the Mexicans. But he was perturbed at the failure of the War Department in Washington for not giving him orders to "go after Shelby" and prevent him from getting beyond the borders. Some of the correspondence between Sheridan and Grant on this indifference and red tape of the department, on file in Washington, would, it is believed, cause a rise in the temperature of the national capital on the coldest day in midwinter if the correspondence were exposed.

The story of the withdrawal of the French troops from Mexico is an old one, and every school boy of intelligence knows that it was brought about by the imperative stand taken by this government. Shelby foresaw that the time was near at hand when Maximilian would be left alone with his crown. The Missouri Confederate would have been as shrewd in statecraft as he was bold in battle if his work had been along diplomatic lines. Believing, as he did, that Maximilian would be deserted, he conceived a scheme which he believed would benefit the unfortunate Emperor and at the same time help his own forlorn men who had followed him.

An interview between the Emperor and Shelby was arranged by Commodore Maury and General Magruder. The story of that interview was never reported in the newspapers, but it was seen and heard by Colonel John C. Moore, of Shelby's staff, who, with newspaper instinct, locked it away, and years after he told it. It will be new to this generation, and it is almost certain that few, if any, who were there are now living.

Maximilian met Shelby without ceremony, but with evident interest and sincerity. Accustomed as he had been to court councils, the conference with a plain American who told the truth as he saw it, and

As the Emperor Spoke He Detached the Golden Cross of the Order of Guadalupe from His Breast and Gave It Into the Hands of Shelby.

The Emperor spoke to his interpreter. "His Majesty desires General Shelby to proceed," said the interpreter.

Shelby, bowing, continued:—"The matter whereof I have spoken to you is perfectly feasible. I have authority for saying that the American government would not be averse to the enlistment of as many soldiers in your army as might wish to take service, and the number need be limited only by the exigencies of the Empire. Thrown upon your own resources, you would find no difficulty, I think, in establishing the most friendly relations with the United States. In order to put yourself in a position to do this, and in order to sustain yourself sufficiently long to consolidate your occupation of Mexico and make your government a strong one, I think it absolutely necessary that you should have a corps of foreign soldiers devoted to you personally, and reliable in any emergency."

Shelby, turning to the interpreter, told him to say to His Majesty that any representations he had made would be corroborated by those who had come with him. Thereupon Commodore Maury and General Magruder sustained Shelby's statements. The Emperor asked Shelby to proceed.

"I have one thousand tried men under my command at this moment," continued Shelby. "They are experienced soldiers. All have seen severe and actual service, and all are anxious to enlist in the cause of Your Majesty. With your permission, and authorized in your name to increase my forces, in a few months all the promises given here can be made good."

No sovereign in Europe ever had a situation put to him as plainly and bluntly as this. After Shelby had spoken Maximilian rose up, beckoned his interpreter to follow him, and, bowing to Shelby, passed out. A short time after, the interpreter returned and said to Shelby:—

"It's no use. His Majesty is firm on the point of diplomacy. He means to try negotiations and correspondence with the United States. He thinks Mr. Seward is favorably disposed toward him, and that the spirit of the dominant party will not be adverse to his experiment with the Mexicans. He believes he can give the Mexican people a good government and develop the country with an army of native troops."

While the interview was in progress Shelby's leaders waited at the barracks in groups, talking over the affairs of my country is at an end. The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, will insist on the rigorous enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine. France does not desire a conflict with the United States. It would be neither popular nor profitable. I left behind me a million men in arms, not one of whom has yet been discharged from the service. The nation is sore over this occupation, and the presence of the French is a perpetual irritance. I hope Your Majesty will pardon me, but it is necessary to speak plainly."

"Bazaine, Your Majesty," he said, "the war between the States of my country is at an end. The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, will insist on the rigorous enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine. France does not desire a conflict with the United States. It would be neither popular nor profitable. I left behind me a million men in arms, not one of whom has yet been discharged from the service. The nation is sore over this occupation, and the presence of the French is a perpetual irritance. I hope Your Majesty will pardon me, but it is necessary to speak plainly."

"We are not wanted, and perhaps it is best so. Those who have fought as you have for a principle have nothing more to gain. Our necessities are grievous and there is no work for us in the line of our profession, but to-day as on the day when I took command of you, I stand ready to abide your decision in the matter of our destiny. You will refuse to march to the headquarters of Juarez, because you are all imperialists at heart. So am I. There will be no war between this country and France. Napoleon has slept too long. The only foreigner who ever understood our war, who ever looked across the ocean with anything of a prophet's vision, who ever said yes when he meant yes, and no when he meant no, was Palmerston, and he was an abolitionist per se. Bah!"

Here Shelby checked himself. He was forgetting his profession. Turning to those nearest him he said in his old soldierly way, "I find myself quoting Latin, and at my time. I do not even understand Spanish. How many of you knew enough Spanish to get you a Spanish wife, with an acre of bread fruit, twenty-five tobacco plants and a handful of corn? We cannot starve, boys."

Then began the disintegration of the old followers. Each went his way. Some got plantations an' remained and lived. Some went on farther West, and a few even crossed the Pacific. Many a man who had been a Governor or who had led a thousand men in battle settled down to cultivating coffee, and some grew wealthy at it.

Meanwhile the lines were drawing closer and tighter about the unfortunate and misguided Emperor. After his consort had gone back to plead at St. Peter's with the Pope to intercede with the courts to help the cause of her spouse Maximilian sent one day in haste for Shelby. The death sweat was already gathering on the brow of Maximilian. When Shelby reported to him he asked:—

"How many Americans are yet in Mexico?"

Not enough for a corporal's guard," replied the old soldier, "and these few cannot be utilized. I do not know of two hundred effective men that I could rally."

"I need twenty thousand," said the Emperor, dejectedly.

"No," said Shelby, earnestly, "you need that many and twenty thousand more. Time is not an imperial regiment in your service that you can rely on. Meanwhile, Your Majesty, pardon me for saying frankly that while you cannot get the soldiers you want and that you need, let those you do have about you be such as you can rely upon."

For a moment the Emperor was silent. Forgetting his position, and stepping from the throne to that of the man, he said in a pitiful way:—

"It is so refreshing to hear the truth, and I feel that you have told it to me as one who neither fears nor flatters. Take this at parting, and remember that circumstances never render impossible the right to die for a great principle."

As the Emperor spoke he detached the golden cross of the Order of Guadalupe from his breast and gave it into the hands of Shelby. The two never met again.

The end of the empire in Mexico was theatrical with Queretaro. The European end is a sad house.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

A MOST CHARMING gift for an exile came to my attention the other day.

About a year ago I suggested to you a friendship calendar made up of daily quotations written or typewritten on little slips, for a Christmas gift.

This is much along the same line. The difference is that this friendship calendar is to be gotten up by many friends instead of one, and is to be madeup, not wholly of quotations, but also of little original greetings, jokes, nonsense rhymes, pictures and sketches.

This calendar which came to my attention was being gotten up by a jolly young crowd in a country town for one of their number who had been sent away to somther climate to fight the white plague.

The pad used was about five by eight inches. The date was written at the top. Then the leaves were distributed among the girl's friends—one or two of her more casual friends had three or four to those who had been nearest her.

Some of the young people pasted snapshots of themselves, the crowd, or familiar spots on the leaves. Others, who were clever at jingles, wrote nonsense rhymes. The artistic ones did little pencil or water colour sketches. Some simply contributed cheery quotations or wrote letters telling the girl how much they loved her and missed her.

The plucky little exile received the calendar Christmas. I don't know her at all personally, but I like to think about her and think what a factor in the fight for courage that friendship calendar must be. I like to think how she will try to decide whether to take this daily bit of excitement at breakfast, at twilight, or just before she goes to bed, and how much the thought of all this friendliness will sometimes mean to her when she is in the homesick or the what's-the-use-anyway mood.

If you know anyone for whom you think you would like to get up a similar calendar for, may I make one or two suggestions?

In the first place, don't wait until just a month before Christmas, or even two or three months before. Such an undertaking, if it is to be well carried through, needs much time. The winter months are a bad time to ask people to do anything like this. The summer months are much better. And don't think this is too early to sow the seed of your undertaking. The chances are that you will be still gathering in your sheaves in November and December.

In the second place, in order to get other people to share the responsibility with you, why not follow some what the scheme I once suggested for the money collection? Get a dozen of the girl's nearest friends to act as months. That will mean that they will contribute four or five days themselves and be responsible for the balance of the days in the months. They in turn can appoint weeks, who will have to be responsible to them for the seven days within their province.

To anyone who attempts this scheme. I wish the very best of luck. If you care to, send to me and I'll be proud to contribute a leaf.

SOME GOOD RECIPES

From Farm and Dairy.

GOOD ENGLISH DOUGHNUTS

Two cupfuls of warm mashed potatoes, two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of butter, five level teaspoons of baking powder, one teaspoonful of vanilla. Flour to make soft dough. Roll out half an inch thick. Fry in hot grease. The potatoes keep the doughnuts soft and they keep fresh much longer than those made with eggs.

CORN-BREAD

Two and one half cupfuls of sifted meal, one teaspoonful of salt, one level teaspoonful soda. Mix together dry, then add enough sour milk to make medium batter. Grease bread-pan. Then melt a tablespoonful of lard in it, and pour in the corn-bread. Bake in quick oven.

Flour Prices Go Up.

Winnipeg, Aug. 11.—All prominent milling companies have raised the price of flour 10 cents per sack of 100 pounds, and 20 cents a barrel of 196 pounds. The new price went into effect Wednesday at noon, but all of Wednesday's billings were made at the old rate. The increase is due to the rise in the price of wheat, October option being particularly responsible.

Drowned In the Congo.

Brussels, Aug. 11.—Advices received from the Congo Free State, say that two Americans, Messrs. Delforge and Black, managers of the American Boma Co., were accidentally drowned while traveling on the River Boch off Lispa. Their bodies were not recovered.

Dynamite Checked Flames.

Homer City, Pa., Aug. 11.—Fire yesterday burned the plant of the Prairie State Incubator Co., and for a time threatened the destruction of the entire town. A number of buildings were dynamited to check the spread of the flames. Loss $150,000.

Congo In Revolt.

Brussels, Aug. 11.—The entire oriental province of the Congo Free State, according to despatches received here yesterday, is in revolt. The natives are said to have carried off a Belgian magistrate and are holding him as hostage.

Five Men Drown.

Hope, B.C., Aug. 11.—Five men, names at present unknown, were drowned Wednesday in the Fraser River, at Saddle Rock, the first flag station above Yale. They were part of a gang attempting to place a cable across the river.

A Witty Retort.

As is generally the case with people who have nothing to say worth hearing, a conceited drummer talked a great deal, to the evident disgust of a number of his commercial friends who were dining at a country hotel. When cheese was served it was of a decided "lively" brand, much to the delight of the irrepressible. He attacked it with great gusto, remarking, "I'm like Samson—slaying them by the thousand!"

"Yes," replied a quick-witted diner at the end of the table, "and with the same weapon too!"

Partly Prepared.

"Did you succeed in getting that manager to engage you?"

"Yes. He is going to let me play the part of a walking gentleman."

"Well, you can walk all right, so you'll merely have to learn the other part."

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE

Sick Headache and relieves all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

SICK

Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured

HEAD

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Quick grabbing at profits on the part of wheat owners offset altogether to-day the bullish effect of the government crop report, and overcame in addition the results of a liberal demand for cargoes to go to Europe. The close was steady, a shade lower to ¼c to ⅜c higher than last night. Corn wound up with ⅜c to ⅝c advance; oats off a shade to ¼c to ⅜c, and provisions down 2½c to 50c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day 1½d higher on wheat and ¼d on corn. Berlin wheat was ¾c higher and Buda Pesth ⅝c higher. Antwerp closed 1⅞c higher.

Believed Them True Stories.

When Dante published his "Inferno" the simplicity of the age accepted it as a true narrative of his descent into hell.

When the "Utopia" of Sir Thomas Moore was first published it occasioned a pleasant mistake. This political romance represents a perfect but visionary republic in an island supposed to have been newly discovered in America. "As this was the age of discovery," says Granger, "the learned Budaeus and others took it for a genuine history and considered it as highly expedient that missionaries should be sent thither in order to convert so wise a nation to Christianity."

It was a long while after publication that many readers were convinced that Gulliver's travels were fictitious.

Blackbird Days.

Jan. 30 and 31 and Feb. 1 are famous at Constantinople, Brescia and along the Danube and the Rhine as the "blackbird days." A curious legend says that originally all species of grackles (blackbirds) were white and that they became black because during one year in the middle ages the three days mentioned above were so cold that all the birds in Europe took refuge in the chimneys. At Brescia the three days are celebrated with a feast called "I giorni della merla," or "the feast of the transformation of the bird."

PETERBOROUGH FRIDAY AUGUST 11 1911

STRIKE SITUATION HAS IMPROVED

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, AUG. 11.—The strike situation has considerably improved today as a result of the settlement with the car men. Rioting is less frequent and an order for militia from Aldershot was countermanded, although they are in readiness for instant action. It is hoped the normal progress of the city will be resumed by Monday. There are very few autos on the streets, owing to the shortness of petrol, and many stores have shut down owing to the lack of provisions. Newspapers have been forced to restrict pages owin gto lack of paper.

LIVERPOL, AUG. 11.—A number of factories were forced to close down through lack of coal, due to the dockmen's strike. The cavalry maintain order.

GRAPPLED WITH BURGLAR

Special to The Examiner:

CHATHAM, ONT., AUG. 11.—John Pleasance, the proprietor of the Rankin House, caught a burglar at the cash register in the bar this morning and held him on the floor for nearly two hours until the police arrived.

Committed Suicide With Piece Of Wire

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, Q., AUG. 11.—George Constantinokos, who was held on a charge of killing a fellow countryman with a beer bottle a month ago, committed suicide in the police cell last night by plunging a piece of wire, which he had found, into his throat and abdomen, after sharpening it on the bars of his cell. He died in terrible agony.

MOTINEERS EXECUTED

Special to The Examiner.

BARCELONA, AUG. 11.—The execution of mutineers on the battleship Numancia led to serious rioting last night. There was much shooting and many injured. The troops were called out to restore order.

Bomb Kills Two

Special to The Examiner

ST. LOUIS, MO., AUG. 11. — A Black Hand bomb exploded in the Italian quarters here last night, killing two and injuring fourteen, completely wrecking the building.

DON'T BE BALD

Nearly Anyone May Secure a Splendid Growth of Hair

We have a remedy that has a record of growing hair and curing baldness in 93 out of very 100 cases where used according to directions for a reasonable length of time. That may seem like a strong statement—it is, and we mean it to be, and no one should doubt it until they have put our claims to a test.

We are so certain Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will cure dandruff, prevent baldness, stimulate the scalp and hair roots, stop falling hair and grow new hair, that we personally give our positive guarantee to refund every penny paid us for it in every case where it does not give entire satisfaction to the user.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is as pleasant to use as clear spring water. It is delightfully perfumed, and does not grease or gum the hair. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. With our guarantee back of it, you certainly take no risk. Sold only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

MORE MINUTE DISSECTION OF MR. BURNHAM'S ADDRESS

Or a Few Brands From His Burning Appeal to the Electors Quietly Extinguished With the Water of Cold Reason and Force.

In further notice of Mr. J. H. Burnham's election address, the following paragraphs are taken for consideration:

"That we should see to the instant abolition of all privileges whereby money-sharks in defiance of legitimate business and the rules of common honesty, are enabled, by lax laws, to plunder the people, who are then required to prosecute the criminals practically at their own expense. Our laws are an ignominious failure in this respect."

Agreed. Most of these laws are the concern of the provinces. Mr. Burnham should take up this matter with Sir James Whitney, whose government is responsible for a clean Ontario. How successful Sir James has been in defending the rights of the people, may be seen in the weak-kneed performances of the Ontario Railway Board, which even Conservative newspapers are forever contrasting with the strong, common sense and popular justice of the Dominion Railway Commission. The Ontario Railway Board is Sir James Whitney's creation; the Dominion Railway Commission is Sir Wilfrid Laurier's. By their works, ye shall know them. Sir James Whitney is going to make speeches in an election campaign, which is no particular business of his, instead of staying at home and teaching his Ontario Railway Board how to hand out a square deal.

"I am against bonused immigration and the importation of Orientals brought in to depress the labour market, and in reckless disregard of the claims of our own races. In a word, we should stand firm against the sacrifice of the general good of our own people to the interests of any class."

Hear! hear! We too! "Keep the yellow man out by pouring the white man in," says Rudyard Kipling, who is an even better empire weaver than J. H. Burnham. The Liberal immigration policy is bringing a lot of good white men in, who don't need any bonusing, except a hundred and sixty acres of free land, and a chance to make good. What's more, we have about got the yellow man where we want him. No Chinaman comes in without paying a $500 poll tax; No Hindu enters without being able to show $50 in his pocket; a limited and decreasing number of Japanese are admitted each year to carry out the terms of a treaty. The Hindu claims entrance as a British subject, but fifty dollars does a great deal to stop him. Japan is Great Britain's ally, and we have to stretch a point to help the Mother Country. This is just one of those cases that J. H. Burnham mentions, in which we "stand firm against the sacrifice of the general good to the interests of any class." The Pacific West has pretty well decided that the dwindling influx of yellow men does not depress the labour market. Their wages are determined on the ground of labour efficiency. If it takes three yellow men to do what one white man can do for the same money, the white man is going to get the job.

Sawing Off His Beliefs.

"I believe that the happiness of the people and the safety of the State lie in the improvement of the condition of the masses. This, then, will be a secure basis of legitimate industry by reason both of self interest and of the interest taken in public affairs—

I believe that private and vested interests should be as jealously guarded as public or general interests, since it cannot be argued that a man's home, his family, and business, are not his, or on, the other hand, that the King's highway is not open to all alike."

From this guarded, not to say vague and mysterious utterance, we infer that J. H. Burnham believes in six of the one and a half dozen of the other.

In fact, J. H. Burnham could be happy with either, were t'other dear charmer away, or equally happy with both, if both are present at the same time. This is a convenient confused frame of mind for a political candidate.

Put in plain words, it probably means that J. H. Burnham believes in the highest possible protection for the manufacturer and that the people may have whatever happiness is left.

J. H. Burnham believes that private and vested rights should be jealously guarded with a high tariff—Mr. Borden calls it "adequatae protection"—but he does not believe in a measure of free trade for the consumer.

J. H .Burnham does not believe in the reciprocity that Sir John Macdonald, Sir John Thompson and Sir Charles Tupper believed in, before him.

J. H. Burnham doesn't believe in any tariff mending that will give the farmer his turn. He doesn't believe in giving the farmer cheaper farm implements or a larger market.

Does J. H. Burnham know just what he DOES believe in? Or does he believe in anything and everything that sounds well without conveying any definite meaning to anybody's mind? That king's highway being open to all, is a good touch. It gives his lack of precise ideas, a fine road to travel on. It lends, as Pooh Bah says, an artistic verisimilitude to an otherwise bold and unconvincing narrative.

Barking Up the Wrong Tree.

"I *believe in the state pension sys*tem for the old, as recently introduced into Britain, and as established in Germany, where it has exceeded all expectations in producing general happiness and thrift. Germany owes her present greatness to her care of her toilers in their old age, etc., etc."

So do we all believe. It may be news for Mr. Burnham, that the Liberal belief in old age pensions has been translated into practice. The Government Old Age Annuities system has been in operation over two years. Sir Richard Cartwright, fathered the scheme, which takes the essential idea of the British plan and adapts it to our better Canadian conditions. It encourages thrift, but steers clear of pauperizing the workers. Mr. Burnham can obtain further particulars any time at the Examiner office, or by writing to Ottawa to Mr. Bastedo, who has this department in charge, or applying at the post office for old age annuities literature. Then he would find out that what "I believe in" in this respect has already been accomplished by a government that does things, and does not, like Mr. Burnham, idly dream in theories, which he has no power nor chance, with no prospect, and no possibility of ever putting into practice, if he should ever change his nature and try to do something besides dream and talk.

MR. TOVEY REMEMBERED BY C.G.E. STAFF

Mr. Ernie Tovey, who, with Mr. Alex. McGregor, is leaving for the west to-morrow evening, was the recipient of an address and presentation from the other members of the staff of the Canadian General Electric Company on Wednesday evening. Mr. Tovey has, for the past few years, been an efficient and popular employee of that institution and his presence will be sadly missed by his associates. He has also been a member of the Belmont Club of this city, and took a prominent part in the social administration and enterprise of that body.

Mr. D. Stone presented Mr. Tovey with a handsome suit case in the course of the following address read by Mr. S. Shaughnessey:

Greeley once said: "Go West young man," and the young men have appreciated his advice to the extent of going West, ever since, and we of the East are beginning to feel that the West owes us considerable for the way it has depopulated our territories of our eligible young men, and incidentally our eligible young women.

Our staff has been particularly unfortunate, as regards this westward fever, and we are again called upon to sever old ties of friendship in saying farewell to one of our staff, who has been with us since the time we first began to regard "mibs" and "leap-the-frog" as things suitable only for "kids," and started in to cut our wisdom teeth on the office files.

While we regret that half a continent will divide us, perhaps many of us until the end of life's chapter, we sincerely trust that your venture into the far and woolly West will be benficial both to your purse and heart, and that you will cast many a backward glance over the miles between here and there, and think kindly of those you have left behind you. As a token of our appreciation of the many social pipes we have enjoyed together, and of the friendship which we trust absence and time will only cement the closer, we ask you to accept from us this gift, with the sincere hope that you may indeed find the new world a Golden West, and that when you again have occasion to use our gift the compass may swing to the East.

(Signed) The Office Staff.

TORRENCE, ONT., AUG. 11.—Joseph Liscomb, aged seventy-nine, one of the oldest residents of the town, was killed by a Canadian Northern train yesterday.

Were Captured

Examiner Special:

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., AUG. 11.—A runaway couple, John Geraghey, a chauffeur and wife, who was formerly Estelle French, were located here at the theatre after a two days' search.

WHOLESALE MURDER

Examiner Special:

BENTON, ILL., AUG. 11.—Martin S. Owen last night shot Justice Mermon, the marshall, and the deputy marshall and stabbed the second deputy in attempting to avoid an order which would put him in jail.

All Locks To Be Lighted

It is estimated that fully 4,000 people witnessed the lighting of the Lift Lock last night. The lights, which are similar to those that have been placed on the Kirkfield Lift Lock, are of the Tungsten type. There are 115 lights in all, with a lighting capacity of 50,000 candle power. The wires are all under cover, having been placed in conduits. The work, which was done by day labour, was under the supervision of Alexander & Miller.

Power is supplied by a special transmission wire by the Peterborough Light and Power Company.

It is the intention of the Department to light in a similar manner all of the locks lying between Peterborough and Lakefield which, when completed, will create one of the finest moonlight drives on the Douro side of the river ,that is to be found in the province.

LUCKY MISTAKE

Grocer Sent Pkg. of Postum and Opened the Eyes of the Family

A lady writes from Brookline, Mass.: "A package of Postum was sent me one day by mistake.

"I notified the grocer, but finding that there was no tea or coffee for breakfast next morning, I prepared some of the Postum, following the directions very carefully.

"It was an immediate success in my family, and from that day we have used it constantly, parents and children, too—for my three rosy youngsters are allowed to drink it freely at breakfast and luncheon. They think it delicious, and I would have a mutiny on my hands should I omit the beloved beverage.

"My husband used to have a very delicate stomach while we were using tea and coffee, but to our surprise his stomach has grown strong and entirely well since we quit tea and coffee and have been on Postum.

"Nothing the good effects in my family. I wrote to my sister, who was a coffee toper, and after much persuasion got her to try Postum.

"She was prejudiced against it at first, but when she presently found that all the ailments that coffee gave her left and she got well quickly, she became and remains a thorough and enthusiastic Postum convert.

"Her nerves, which had become shattered by the use of coffee have grown healthy again, and to-day she is a new woman, thanks to Postum." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ontario, and the "cause why" will be found in the great little book, "The Way to Wellville," which comes in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE Outing of the Season is always the one run by The Printers, and the one this year will be no exception. Take it in—if you don't you'll miss a good thing.

IN THE INTEREST OF THEMSELVES AT THE EXPENSE OF PRODUCERS AND CONSUMERS

The Globe has received a copy of the prospectus to investors issued in Britain by the National Land, Fruit & Packing Company, Limited. This concern is capitalized at £250,000 sterling (approximately $1,250,000), and has its offices located in London, England, and Toronto, Canada.

The directors of the company include, in addition to five prominent financiers, the names of "Hon. G. E. Foster, M.P., Ottawa, Canada, former Minister of Finance for the Dominion of Canada," and "William M. German, K.C., Welland, Ontario, Canada, member of Dominion Parliament."

A careful reading of the prospectus of this company is illuminative of the opposition of its two Parliamentary directors to tariff relief through reciprocity.

The company apparently aims to control the apple market. The prospectus points out that the Province of Ontario produces 75 p. c. of all fruits grown in Canada, and declares that "the company was formed in 1910, chiefly for the purpose of producing and marketing apples grown in Ontario, and for this purpose acquired established orchards containing over 140,000 trees, constituting what is believed to be the largest apple-producing property in the world."

The Company will be a powerful competitor of the farm orchard. Under the heading of "Profits," its prospectus emphasizes the fact that "the supply of high-class apples in British, European and American markets never equals the demand." Yet two of the directors are not willing to allow the Canadian farmer a chance to get the benefit of the demand from his next door neighbour, which they frankly admit is never equalled.

The prospectus further sets forth that the demand in the prairie Provinces of Canada will be so great that for many years Canadian orchards will be unable to supply it. Yet the gentlemen named are not willing to let the great body of consumers in the Canadian west get the advantage of the cheaper fruit which, in that part of the country, they may be able to obtain from the United States.

The official figures in the special report of the Department of Labour, tabled during the recent session of Parliament, giving the actual quotations of Canadian and United States markets, bring out the fact that, in the case of meat products and fruits, the prices are lower to the Canadian producers than are the prices in American markets to the American producers, whereas the prices that these pork-packers and fruit-packerse secure through their work as middlemen make the price higher to the Canadian consumer.

As Hon. George P. Graham put it at Brockville: "Did you ever hear of the removal of taxation on food increasing the cost of living?"

The reciprocity agreement saves the people from those who would monopolize their food supply.

There is a further feature in the prospectus of this company of interest and significance to Canadian workingmen. Under the heading, "Labour," attention is drawn to the fact the company will secure its largest staff of employees after the Ontario harvest is over, when men will be available "at substantially lower rates" than are regularly paid for harvest work.

The company promises large profits, but the Parliamentary directors are not willing to allow the Canadian producer to have the benefit of the demand they state is never equalled; they are not willing to allow the Canadian consumer, who, they state, can not be adequately served for years, to have the benefit of cheaper and more plentiful supply; and they are not willing to allow Canadian labour the full value for the services which it renders.

This fruit-packing company would seem to parallel in the fruit industry hog-packing in the pork and bacon industry. It seeks to cut down prices to the producer and labourer, and raise prices to the consumer.

Is it any wonder that the producer, the labourer and the consumer are united for Laurier and larger markets?

Large Gathering Of Boy Scouts At The Exhibition

Scouts Will be the Guests of the Canadian National Exhibition Authorities—Will Have Special Privileges—A Grand Review By His Excellency.

That the Boy Scouts are now a national institution no one will attempt to deny. They are doing a great work—giving an educational value to the amusements of the boys of Canada. They have come to stay and they are coming to the Canadian National Exhibition in their uniforms and in thousands.

To put it in a nutshell the Canadian National Exhibition will this year have the greatest gathering of Boy Scouts ever brought together in Canada or anywhere else. A feature of the second day's ceremony will be the grand review by his Excellency the Governor-General, in which Boy Scouts from all parts of Canada will take part. There will also be competitions in the various branches of their work.

The Boy Scouts will occupy the Model Military Camp the first three days of the Exhibition, and it is estimated that five thousand of them will live under canvas on the grounds.

The Boy Scouts will be the guests of the Canadian National Exhibition authorities, having free access to the grounds, tent accommodation and all meals will be provided. This will be a banner three days in the history of the movement and it is requested that all Scouts throughout the Province endeavour to be present.

For further information apply to H. G. Hammond, Provincial Secretary, Toronto.

The Electric-Lighted Lift Lock Placed In Commission Last Night

The lighting of the Lift Lock, the beginning of a system of lighting of the Trent Canal from Rice Lake to Lake Simcoe, is an accomplished fact; and the lift lock lighting system was successfully inaugurated last night, in the presence of a large assemblage of interested and well-pleased citizens. The "Stoney Lake" and the "Bessie Butler" were locked through after dark, but in the presence of strong and effective artificial light.

Mr. Stratton, the energetic representative of West Peterborough, has for some time been impressing upon the Department and Government the necessity of lighting the Lift Lock, which was, otherwise, practically useless between dark and dawn, as no boats could be passd up or down.

Representations were made to the Government by Mr. Stratton, Mr. Fowke of Oshawa and Mr. McColl of Northumberland, and Mr. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, sent up an engineer of his department to examine and report, not only upon the lighting of the lift lock, but upon a system of electric lighting for the whole canal, from Rice Lake to Lake Simcoe.

The engineer's report was made, approved of by the Department, and the work begun at the Lift Lock, where it is completed and was put into operation last night.

The plans adopted propose the lighting by electricity of the canal, its whole completed length north of Rice Lake; and the work will include a more effective system of buoys to mark the channel in the interests of safe and speedier navigation. The lighting system will place the Trent on the same level as the Welland Canal, which is splendidly lighted—as safe for traffic by night as by day—from Port Dalhousie and Port Colborne. The St. Lawrence Canals are similarly lighted.

Last night, at the Lift Lock the switch was turned and a flood of white light illuminated like sunlight the Lift Lock and the adjacent grounds. The lighting system is complete and effective, there being a light on each tower, and others elsewhere, where needed, to give effective light for locking operations.

Last night the steamer "Stoney Lake" and the "Bessie Butler" were locked up and down with as much facility and success as they would have been in the brightest daylight.

The lighting of the Lift Lock and the Canal is another evidence of the fact that the Government takes the Trent Canal seriously, not only in the matter of pushing it through to completion from Bay to Lake, but in the matter of making it as effective as possible for navigation purposes, and providing the incidental conveniences like wharves, landings, etc., to make it of the greatest possible use of the public.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In many cases the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

COBALT SPECIAL LEFT THE TRACK

Special to The Examiner.

NORTH BAY, ONT., AUG. 11.—The Cobalt special from Toronto left the track, all but the rear sleeper, last night. The cars slid down the embankment, turning over. It is remarkable that none were killed. The train was running slowly and only few injuries were sustained.

PAST AND PRESENT.

At Saturday's Conservative meeting in Toronto Hon. George E. Foster asked where Ontario and Canada would be to-day if the United Empire Loyalists and the patriots of 1812 and 1866 had held back and gauged their loyalty by the price of a few peas or beans.

Mr. Foster is quite right. This country would have had no existence if the patriots of old had held back and gauged their loyalty by the price of peas and beans. Why, then, do Mr. Foster and his friends to-day tell us that our loyalty depends on the maintenance of taxes on peas and beans?—Toronto Star.

WHAT WE WORK ON.

A calculation of the value of the four principal grain crops of the West for this year places the farmers' contribution of NEW WEALTH, in the prairie provinces, at $254,000,000.

One way to look at it is to say that if the farmer has all that money he has enough, and needs no looking after. But if there are a million people out there it means, to the farmer who creates the new wealth, an average of only $250 per head.

But to the rest of us what does all this NEW WEALTH mean? It means bread and butter for those who work on freight trains, in railway yards, in harbours, in ships, in offices, as the grain goes from the farm to its destination. Then it means more as what the farmer gets in exchange for the grain finds its way back to him. It means imports of merchandise, it means cargoes in ships, it means work in the harbour. it means business for wholesale and retail houses, it means a market for the product of factories, it means employment for tens of thousands of people, it means the building of new homes for them, and it means busy times in the shops which supply the wants of all these people.

That is what the farmers' creation of new wealth means to the rest of us. There is very, very little of it left over from year to year. If we wanted to know how to value it we would have to go a year or two without it. The last time it suffered a serious reduction there was almost a panic, and our strongest houses were near to failure. Our soldiest manufacturing establishments nearly closed, and tens of thousands of working men were nearly out of a job.

The time never was when the average farmer lived in opulence. After his crop has served to keep steam in so many boilers the fires in his own burn low. If we can help him we should. If we can help him to double the creation of new wealth it is in our own interest to do it.—Montreal Herald.

WASTED PITY.

The Montreal Gazette, a good, hard shell Conservative newspaper, consumes nearly a column of its space in quoting and commenting on the increase of Dominion revenue, only the Gazette puts it in another way. the increase of the burden of taxation, and blames the Liberal Government for this burden. Bless your heart it is no burden at all. The Canadian only pays as much taxes as he can stand. He can limit the "taxes" he pays at his pleasure. The revenue of the Dominion is derived chiefly from customs duties; custom duties are levied on goods imported by wholesale merchants to be sold to retail merchants to be sold to, and to be bought by, the people. The people, of course, have to pay the duty, though perhaps they do not know it; it is wrapped up with the goods they buy. it is added to the price along with other charges, for shipping, rent of premises, wages of employees, etc. The citizen pays taxes only to the extent of what he buys; if he is hard up, and has little money, he buys little; if he is prosperous, he buys accordingly. In the early nineties the people were hard up, and had little money to buy goods and, therefore, contributed little to the revenue, which was comparatively small, something like 28 or 34 million from year to year.

Then in the early nineties something happened or, rather, the people did something — they returned the Liberal Government to power. The minute these pestilent Grits got office the taxes began to grow, that is the revenue increased—the people began to prosper, manufacturing and commerce began to thrive; every line of activity straightened out for a swifter pace. And this activity meant more employment; it all meant more business, more employment, more wages, more money in the people's pockets; and that meant more money to buy goods; that meant more duties paid, and that meant more revenue. In other words the people paid more taxes and they were glad to do it for they paid the taxes by buying what they wanted, and they were glad to do it because they had the money to buy with.

In 1896 we imported only 118 million dollars worth of goods because the people hadn't money enough to pay for any more, and the people could only afford to tax themselves 36 million dollars. By contrast, in 1911 we imported 472 million dollars worth of goods. That is, the people had money to buy that much; of course they taxed themselves accordingly ,and the revenue was in proportion, 117 million dollars. But the people paid this cheerfully, and far more easily—they had more money than in 1896, and they felt the payment less.

The progress of Canada has been so great under the Liberal Government the past fourteen years that the people's possesion of money, their ability to pay and their willingness to pay has increased in the ratio of 36 millions to 117 millions, the respective revenue figures of fourteen years ago and of to-day. The taxation of the people has not increased in the past fourteen years; instead. rather the rate of customs is generally less than in 1896, but the people have paid more taxes, that is. customs duties; they have had more money, and have bought more goods. While the population has increased in the ratio of 5½ million to 7¾ millions, the revenue — which is the measure of the ability of the people to buy things—has increased in the ration of 36 millions to 117 millions. The pity of the Gazette is wasted on a thoughtless and reckless people. who rejoice in having money enough to pay a revenue of 117 million dollars. with less strain than they paid 36 millions fifteen years ago.

MISCHIEF-MAKING.

Our evening contemporary blackens the top of its front page with big type to assert a few, for the most part meaningless, statements. Look at this to begin with:

"Borden stands for British connection."

Well, what about it? There's nothing in that. "Borden stands for British connection"; so do seven million nine hundred ad ninetey-nine other Canadians, and just as earnestly and honestly as Br. Borden, whose fealty to British connection nobody doubts. any more than that of other Canadians upon whom the Review casts a reflection by singling out Mr. Borden.

Mr. Borden and the party for whom he stands have never done anything conspicous, except talk loudly, as if by necessity of convincing themselves and others, to show their fealty to British connection.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, supported by the Liberal party, showed his and their loyalty to Britain and their belief in British connection by giving, in 1897, a preference to Great Britain—to promote trade between Great Britain and Canada, trade being a large ingredient in cementing connection between Britain and Canada.

What was the attitude of Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative party. since 1891, on this action? If he and his followers did not oppose, he led his followers in denouncing the British preference, as a concrete evidence of Canadian loyalty and fidelity to British connection.

He denounced, or listened with approval to his followers denounce as traitors to Canadian interests, Sir Wilfrid and the Liberal Government because they did not make Canada's tribute of loyalty to the mother country a matter of huckstering and bargaining—because Sir Wilfrid did not exact the pound of flesh tariff impost for tariff reduction.

But Sir Wilfrid did not want Great Britain to tax the poor man's loaf in the interests of Canada. He gave the British Preference as an act of duty and loyalty with a business eye to the advantage Canada would derive from increased trade intercourse with Great Britain. The preference immensely increased our trade with the mother country. and has brought the two together in closer bonds of connection than have existed in any period of past history; and has made Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as premier of Canada honoured by the British as the highest type of colonial statesmanship.

"Mr. Borden stands for British connection, "but he and his followers who are telling the world that Sir Wilfrid Laurier in a traitor and false to British connection, are the same men who denounced Sir Wilfrid for giving a British Preference. Mr. Borden, and his political friends, are fond of talking Imperially, but Sir Wilfrid and his followers act Imperially without doing much talking.

It was the Mail and Empire, (which supports Mr. Borden) when the Conservatives, who built a discriminating tariff wall against Great Britain, were told that they were thereby endangering British connection—it was the Mail and Empire that said in reply: "so much the worse for British connection"; said in effect: "Let British connection go hang; we will stand by a policy which we believe will keep the Conservatives in office.

"Mr. Borden stands for British connection"—so do all Canadians; and it is idle and mischief-working for any party to arrogate to itself all loyalty, and denounce its equally loyal opponents as traitors. Loyalty is something that should be little talked about, but much lived and practised.

What would be thought of a woman who would shout from the house-tops and street corners, and placard in the newspapers, the boast that she was virtuous and chaste, and that her lady friends were no better than they should be. One would at once doubt the virtue that needed to be so self assertive.

There is no necessity to put Mr Borden on a pedestal as the sole possessor of British connection sentiment. Are there any doubts about it?

PROMINENT MANUFACTURER IN PORT HOPE FOR RECIPROCITY

President of Standard Ideal Co., Employing 600 Men, Speaks in its Favour at Liberal Convention—T. A. Kelly Nominated—Speeches on the Subject of the Day

(Special to The Examiner.)

ORONO, AUG. 10.— No man could possibly be made the candidate of any political party with greater unanimity and enthusiasm than marked the choice of T. Alexander Kelly of Kenmare, Cavan township, to-day at a great Liberal convention in the Town Hall here. For no political convention in Durham county has been better attended, nor has a standard bearer before been unanimously chosen since Confederation. Mr. Kelly's speech accepting nomination was a model of modesty and appreciation. After the convention was organized it was decided to openly nominate a candidate, when Thomas Baker, Solina, moved and Dr. L. B. Powers, Port Hope, seconded in capital, optimistic speeches T. A. Kelly, Cavan, Warden of the united counties of Northumberland and Durham, and the nomination was enthusiastically confirmed by every delegate rising to his feet and cheering. W. M. Bragg, Darlington, President of the Durham County Liberal Association, tendered Mr. Kelly the nomination in a very congratulatory speech.

He Works to Win.

Mr. Kelly remarked that he never sought public office, but when he became a candidate he worked to win. He had received wonderful encouragement from men of both political parties in Millbrook and Cavan since his name has been before the public, for the feeling in favour of reciprocity down in East Durham is very strong. He had never seen a better political meeting in Millbrook than last week's gathering for appointing delegates. Reciprocity, he said, is purely a business proposition, appealing mainly to farmers, and they should properly look well after their own interests.

Outlook is Bright.

A public meeting was then organized, President Bragg presiding. He said that he saw in the crowded building and the unparrelleled enthusiasm and importance of the issue to the farmers a bright omen of success for the Liberal candidate. The outlook is exceedingly promising for Mr. Kelly.

Many Conservatives Favour It.

Arthur A. Powers, Provincial candidate for West Durham, was well received and made a brilliant speech. He found many Conservatives favouring reciprocity and who will vote for the reciprocity candidate. He entreated everybody having the agricultural interests of the Dominion at heart to support the agreement that gives additional markets.

Manufacturer's Fair Reasoning.

H. T. Bush, President of the Standard Ideal Co., Port Hope, an employer of six hundred men ,said: "I appear as a manufacturer in favour of reciprocity." He had thought the matter over, and concluded that if the manufacturers are entitled to protection and the Government gives them reasonable protection, they in turn, to be fair, should help to give the farmers what they believe will be in their best interest, for whatever is for the farmers' benefit is likewise for the manufacturers' interest. The manufacturers cannot succeed unless the farmers are doing well. He counselled all present to have courage to step out and declare in favour of reciprocity, regardless of former political affiliations. He assured Mr. Kelly of such support as he can give personally, and he was confident a goodly number of the Ideal Company's employees are in favour of reciprocity. Mr. Bush's address aroused very great applause, coming from the President and Manager of the largest industrial concern in Durham county.

Where Opposition Originated.

J. B. McColl, late M.P. for West Northumberland, said when the agreement was announced in the House of Commons it was applauded by both parties. A great many doubted if it would be ratified by the United States authorities, but everyone felt that it would be gladly taken up by Canada. Free trade in natural products, he said, does not adversely affect manufacturers. The general tariff may still be increased or lowered at will. the British preference likewise. No markets will be interfered with; we shall have all we now have, with the United States with ninety million people added. It will still be optional with Canadians where they sell. The agreement does not bind for all time, and if not found satisfactory it can be terminated any time. The Conservatives had not instituted the opposition to reciprocity, but the farmers should take thoughtful notice that it was the moneyed interests, the mergers, combines and financial corporations. Even the famous eighteen Liberals in Toronto who opposed it were connected with monetary institutions. Farmers are justified in soliciting a measure that will be beneficial, as they cannot have too many markets. A nation's wealth comes from the land; all benefit by the farmers reciprocity. The trusts want higher tariffs, the farmers want reciprocity in natural products.

The Horse Industry.

He spoke at length on the horse industry. All remembered, he said, what a splendid market the United States was prior to the McKinley tariff, when buyers from Rochester and other big American cities paid Canadian farmers high prices for horses. He had conversed with the noted horseman, A. Yeager, Simcoe, within a few days, and he said the Americans will buy more Canadian horses in one year under reciprocity than they do now in ten. Canadian horses are better than those raised in the United States. Our farmers need have no fear of the American farmers, for ours can beat them. Large horses are bought chiefly for the big cities, and the big cities of the United States will want our heavy horses and will buy them first hand from our farmers as formerly. Toronto dealers will not make a commission on them.

Election a Referendum.

"Elect a reciprocity candidate and give the pact a fair trial," he urged He was sure that if once in operation it would be so popular that it would continue. This election is not a political contest, it's a referendum. The question for decision is a straight business one: Are you in favour of reciprocity or against reciprocity? In concluding, Mr. McColl said Durham had selected a splendid candidate, who has been successful in all his public career. The election to the Wardenship in the Counties Council, which is largely Conservative, indicates his personal popularity.

"Canada is Our Politics."

F. L. Fowke, late M.P. for South Ontario and for nine years Mayor of Oshawa, received a hearty reception. He congratulated the delegates on the great number present, on their grand choice of a candidate, and on the good cause they were ready to advocate and to support at the polls. He was glad to help along reciprocity because it will greatly benefit Canada ,and "Canada is our politics" Referring to Durham's representative in the Commons, he declared that C. Jonas Thornton was anti-reciprocity, for he spoke against it in the House. He was sure Mr. Thornton misrepresents his constituency if he might judge by this representative farmers' gathering. The Liberals' policy is one of expansion. A prominent railway man, a Conservative in politics, assured him that reciprocity will make a far greater and better trade expansion of every industrial enterprise. All the people knew it would be better for Canadians to have enlarged markets.

What All Have Desired.

Sir John Macdonald died in the expectation that Canada one day would enter into the desired larger expansion of trade over this North American continent. All the great Canadian politicians are on record for securing reciprocial trade and every newspaper and magazine published in Canada in the interests of agriculture is advocating reciprocity, except one small one. The National Policy in the sixth article of the act covered reciprocity in natural products. The policy of every Finance Minister Canada ever had favoured reciprocity in natural products. Hon. George E. Foster in a great speech in 1895 emphatically declared for reciprocity in natural products.

Why Vote Was Burked.

Mr. Fowke dealt severely with the disloyalty bogey, and declared with emphasis, "There is not a man here who believes reciprocity will weaken our loyalty to the mother country." He told why Mr. Borden would not allow a vote to be taken in the House. Many Conservatives knew their constituencies were in favour of reciprocity, and a vote against reciprocity would wreck their chances for re-election. Mr. Fowke spoke for nearly one hour with the closest attention of his hearers, who applauded his remarks frequently. The feeling is exceedingly hopeful that reciprocity will win in Durham.

ADDRESS OF MR. STRATTON TO THE ELECTORATE

Electors of the West Riding of Peterborough

GENTLEMEN,—

At a largely attended mass meeting of the electors, on Saturday, I was selected as candidate to contest the representation of the Riding in the House of Commons. I accepted the responsibility of the position and hereby respectfully solicit the favour of your votes and support.

I am well known to you all, for during a representative service of West Peterborough, practically extending over a period of twenty-five years, I have many times come into contact, directly and indirectly, with every elector of the Riding.

In the past I have been honoured with your confidence, and I have earnestly striven to deserve it. In the discharge of my parliamentary and, especially of my representative duties, I have tried to consistently recognize and live up to the fact that I was the representative of the whole people, and in duty bound to serve the interests of all collectively and individually, whether their support had assisted, or their opposition had resisted, my election.

I need not refer to my record to specify what I have been privileged to do in the promotion of the material, moral and social welfare of West Peterborough. My work in this regard, be it little or great, is known to you all. You all know whether or not I have been a faithful servant of the people, whether the Riding is better, and in what respects, from my having been your representative.

I need not be at much pains to define my position in this contest. Everybody knows where I stand—where I am to be found. Such as I have been in the endeavour to advance your interests, I still am, and shall continue to be, if you honour me with re-election.

Apart from the consideration of local—city and county—interests, the national question chiefly involved in this contest is "Reciprocity," or free mutual exchange of natural, mainly farm, products, with the United States. I believe that reciprocity of this kind will be of benefit to the farmers of the country, and through their prosperity to all other interests—manufacturing, financial and commercial, as well as to those of the mechanic and workingman.

The round of benefit is natural. Good crops and good markets mean money for the farmer, which spent with the merchants of all kinds, means increased orders for the manufacturer and increased employment to their workmen. Thus Reciprocity, by affording wider and better markets, promises to be a benefit to the whole country and an injury to no class or interest; and is worth trying, especially as the agreement, not being a treaty, can, if unsatisfactory, be cancelled on reasonable notice.

If I thought for a moment that it would hurt any important interest, especially the manufacturing interest, I would oppose it. I am neither an extreme free trader, nor an extreme protectionist. I believe in a reasonable amount of both. High tariff in the United States has lost to Canada ninety million dollars in barley alone. The British Preference as it affects our manufacturers goes as far as desirable in the direction of free trade and I am opposed to, and will oppose, any increase of it. I myself am a manufacturer or interested in manufactures, in a modest way, but, at the same time, to an extent, important to myself and my associates, and I feel that our industries and working men could not stand the keen manufacturing competition of either Britain or the United States.

In this regard, I am in accord with the assurance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking for the Government, when he gave this pledge, "WE HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURERS AND WILL NOT HURT THEM," and I applaud the stand of Mr. Fielding in negotiating the Reciprocity Agreement, in refusing to even discuss reciprocity in manufactured articles with the United States.

If you approve, gentlemen, of what I consider the reasonable stand I take in relation to national interests; if you believe, judging from my past record of service to the Riding, that I have the business capacity, the business and parliamentary experience to continue to give you good service, and justify the confidence I now ask you to again place in me, I presume to claim your support.

This is probably the last appeal I shall make to you; for I think I have done my share of service to this Riding and have thereby earned the opportunity to give the necessary attention to my private affairs. I should have persisted in my desire to be relieved had I not felt in duty bound to defer to the earnest solicitation of the friends who have stood by me in the past, and also of a great many of my former opponents, and consented to be a candidate.

Another reason that influenced my acceptance, was, that being of a business turn, I naturally desired to complete work I have initiated, and for which I am in some degree, if the opportunity is given me, responsible. I should like to see the completion of the large new docks for the City of Peterborough; of the retaining wall on our river front in Peterborough; also a new concrete dam at Nassau erected, and a Rifle Range provided for this important military centre.

Trusting that I may be favoured with your effective support, I have the honour to remain, gentlemen, as I have been for the past twenty-five years,

Your Obedient Servant,

J. P. Stratton

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRICS CONFIDENT OF WINNING THE SEMI-FINAL CHAMPIONSHIP

Baraccas Coming Strong To-morrow---Four of Them Played Against Coriathians---To Be Elimination Contest

The first game for the semi-final championship will be played at Riverside Park to-morrow afternion, starting at 2.15, sharp. The coming together of these football teams will eliminate one from the championship race, so that it will be a battle from start to finish.

Some idea of the strength of the visitors can be had when it is known that four of these played against the touring Corinthians, namely, Curran, Bingham, Gillespie, and Hardy, when the Toronto District team defeated the visitors 3-1. Bingham, who plays centre-half, was reported to be the best man on the field on that occasion. "Billy" Milburn says that every man is ready to go the limit and expects a victory although it is the biggest bite that the local team ever attempted to masticate. The game will be handled by Mr. P. D. Fitzgerald, and a return game will be played in Toronto on August 19. The Electrics will line up as follows:

Goal—W. Jones.
Backs—W. Hull, R. Evans.
Halves—Allan, Padgett (Capt.), Hooper.
Forwards — Corless, W. Dawson, Miller, French, E. Dawson.
Spares—Simonite, Monks, Braun.

The collector at the gate will tax adults 25 cents and ladies 15 cents.

Peterborough Well Represented In The Cobourg Horse Show

Mr. Stratton's Horses Will be There---Entries in Many Classes

The Cobourg Horse Show takes place in Cobourg on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the 15th, 16th and 17th of August. The Horse Show of our sister town is always a good one and lovers of the horse will find that they can spend a pleasant afternoon on any or all of these days.

Hon. Mr. Stratton's horses have been entered in the following classes:

Class 10.—Mare or gelding over 15.2, "Perfect Dream."
Class 2.—Mare or gelding, 15.2 and over, "My Pride."
Class 13.—Pair of mares or geldings over 15.2, "Latest News," "Lochryan Princess."
Class 14.—Champion high stepper, "My Pride."
Class 15.—Tandem, open to all horses, "Perfect Dream," "My Pride"
Class 16.—Unicorn.
Class 17.—Four-in-hand.
Class 35.—Best mare, any age, "Shawhill Princess."
Class 38.—Mare or gelding, 15.2 and under, "None Nicer."
Class 39.—Mare or gelding, over 14-1, to be ridden by a lady, "None Nicer."
Class 60.—Cob Class, mare or gelding in harness, over 14.1, "Latest News."
Class 61.—Runabout class, "Midget."
Class 63. — Combination class. "None Nicer."
Class 69—Ladies single outfit. "Perfect Dream."
Class 72.—Pair of mares or geldings "My Pride," "Premier."

WILL SEPTEMBER CONTESTS MAKE NEW CHAMPIONS?

Three Tit-Bits Which Will Affect Three Champions---The Wrestling Bout Looks the Best

Next month will be a most important one for championship holders, as the two major leagues present the three of the best struggles for the year are billed to take place. In the first case, Morris, the fighting railroader, otherwise known as the Sapulpa Giant, will endeavour to clinch another round by eliminating Jim Flynn.

Morris is to go against Jim Flynn somewhere in New York on Labor Day (September 4), and by that event he will stand or fall. If he loses to Flynn he will be a joke, for Flynn is a pronounced second rater, with but one fairly bright spot on his side, namely, his victory over Al Kaufman.

The Hackenschmidt-Gotch world's championship wrestling match which is to be decided in Chicago on September 4, is of vast importance.

Even though Gotch won from the "Russian Lion" a couple of years ago, and has enjoyed ever since the prestige that attaches to the premiership, it has always been felt that the circumstances attending the first struggle call for another.

Huckenschmidt has moved heaven and earth to secure a return meeting and has publicly challenged Gotch with being afraid to wrestle again. In everything Hackenschmidt has done he has displayed a spirit of defiance and supreme confidence, and the public has watched the slow progress of the match-making with much of the interest that was manifested while Jeffries was still undecided about tackling Jack Johnson.

There will be excitement galore, though probably not of the suppressed kind, when Gotch and "Hack" approach each other with stooping shoulders and begin to claw for the first hold. The result—providing the contest is fairly wrestled and fairly won—will be a glorious triumph for one man and a bitter disappointment for the other.

Then there is the Packey McFarland-Ad. Wolgast affair at Milwaukee later in September. The outcome of this will mean "all the world and more besides" to the one who vanquishes.

WILL LONGBOAT WIN?

This Longboat-Shrubb twelve-mile race at the Island Stadium Saturday night has the running experts all up in the air. A month ago every one who pretends to know the game would have called Shrubb to win, but Longboat's prolonged training stunts and his evident sincerity, due doubtless to the fact that he had been negotiating for the purchase of his own contract for some time, has caused a switch, and now the experts are equally divided. Tom Flanagan says he never saw the Indian in better shape, and that Shrubb or no other living man is his equal at 12 miles.

Shrubb is known to be ready, and is betting on himself. It looks like a race and so does the five-mile preliminary.

Charlie Heffernan, the South African, who led the Olympic Marathon pack for 26 miles, has entered the five-mile event and will gallop against Jack Roe, Percy Sellen, Fred Meadows, A. C. Wood and others. The preliminary race starts at 8.45 and the big race at 9.15.

The officials selected are as follows: Referee, Mayor Geary; associate referee, Ald. Maguire; chief judge, Geo Bethal of Manchester, England; judges, P. J. Mulqueen, T. F. Ryan, Peter Small; starter, Tom C. Flanagan; scorers, W. J. Long, H. F. Darrell, Harry Rosenthal; timers, Ed Bailey, Harry Babb; physicians, Dr. A. Buck for Longboat, Dr. Crawford for Shrubb.

SPORTING ITEMS

The Pirates will play the Leafs at the Island Stadium on August 31. It is not improbable that both clubs will be leading their respective leagues at that time.

"Lefty" McDonald, the Toronto pitcher, who has been in New Bedford since the spring, was in town yesterday on his way to Hamilton, where he will play for the balance of the season. McDonald secured his release from New Bedford.

The Chemong Park Baseball Club would like to arrange games with any Peterborough teams wishing to make the trip out there. Any picnic parties who can bring a scrub nine to the Park can make arrangements for a game by calling up the Chemong Park Hotel.

A HAIR'S BREADTH ESCAPE

A Short Story

By C. F. Gordon-Cumming, author of "At Home in Fiji," "On Board a French Man-of-War," etc.

I have been asked to narrate the most thrilling experience of my twelve years of travel in the far East, and I have little hesitation in naming a certain lovely midsummer night when, on board a small Danish brig, the wind failed us while we were endeavoring to sail past the picturesque but dangerous Goto Isles which lie between Corea and Japan. There we lay in the glorious moonlight, helplessly becalmed, with a strong current carrying us right on to the cruel rocks, where a few months previously a fine English brig had in like manner been drifted, and dashed to pieces by the awful force of the breakers, twenty-two out of thirty-three persons on board being drowned.

I was returning from Peking to Japan, and at Tientsin had embarked on the luxurious steamer which would have carried me back to Shanghai, there to re-embark on another large steamer, bound for Japan. But having already steamed four times up and down the hideous yellow waters of the Woo Sung river. I did not wish for a fifth and sixth experience, and having a vivid recollection of my delightful six weeks' cruise from Tahiti to San Francisco in a small schooner (240 tons) I decided if possible to eschew the luxurious but circuitous regular route, hoping that at Chefoo I might be able to secure a direct passage to Nagasaki in some sailing ship.

REAL TRAVEL

Besides the satisfaction of taking a short cut, one has far more the feeling of real travel in such a vessel than is possible in a large well-appointed steamer, and passengers know no more of the real working of the ship than if they are in London. (I cannot recommend such a course to any other lady, for besides all the discomforts to be faced, there is far greater risk of finding one's self in close quarters with very undesirable companions. In both respects I was quite exceptionally fortunate.)

So at Chefoo, hearing that there were two vessels in harbour about to sail direct for Nagasaki, I rashly forsook my comfortable steamer, and only after she had sailed, ascertained that both refused to carry any passengers. However, a personal interview with the Danish agent of the brig "Thorkild" worked wonders, for when he realised that the applicant was a lady who had sailed in many waters, and knew how to make light of difficulties, he agreed to make arrangements for my reception, and the kind captain promised to do all in his power to make my journey comfortable, and well he kept his promise. He was a blue-eyed, fair-haired Dane, just the man one would expect to own the Thorkild—delightful name, secouring of old Norse mythology and adventure! and a dear little vessel, beautifully clean and well appointed. She weighed only 155 tons, but experience had taught me that the Goliaths of the ocean are not always the safest. The crew consisted of half a dozen Danish lads, brought by the captain from his own home, Yansen, the boatswain, wearing ear-rings after the manner of sailors. The mate was Gernan, with a strong dash of Californis. No born gentleman could have been more courteous and considerate than these proved, one and all. It was pleasant to hear them talk of their simple home life, and the natural way in which all seemed to centre round the village church and its festivals. The cook and steward were Chinamen, and the food good and abundant.

BECALMED

With favouring gales we might have reached Nagasaki in three days, but had to count on the probability of this

THOMAS A. EDISON VISITS HOUSE OF COMMONS

New York, Aug. 11.—A London cable says: On reaching London by motor Tuesday evening, Thomas A. Edison was met by his European agent, Sir Croydon Marks, M.P., who after dinner escorted him to the House of Commons. By the special order of Speaker Lowther Mr. Edison occupied a place in the distinguished strangers' gallery, where he witnessed the scene, but could not hear the speeches made on the floor. Sir Croydon told the correspondent that the great inventor was intensely curious about the personalities of the leaders on both sides. He declared that Arthur Balfour, the Unionist leader, Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George and Home Secretary Churchill all have strikingly intellectual heads. He said the whole fight between the two houses is inexplicable to him, and he thought it strange that some sort of arbitration committee or board could not be appointed to settle it. Evidently Mr. Edison is not much of a politician.

A STUPID SYSTEM

He felt the heat greatly in the House, and expressed surprise that some cooling invention has not been applied so that the members may work in comfort. When the cooling system in use was explained—sprays of ice water are played outside the windows, and iced air is forced up through the matting on the floor—Mr. Edison opened his eyes in amazement, exclaiming incredulously: "Well, do you tell me so? I could not have believed anything so stupid."

He was taken on the terrace, where were several Ministers and others seeking the refreshing night air and enjoyed it hugely. There he met, among many other big men of Great Britain, Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George, who wished Mr. Edison would invent some plan for getting bills quickly through Parliament.

LIKE A FARMER

T. P. O'Connor was one of those who met Mr. Edison and afterward said: "He is like a big unsophisticated farmer taking almost boyish interest in things familiar to ordinary men of the world. Indeed, he is like a great schoolboy asking questions and looking delighted with the most commonplace answers. The simplicity of genius was never before so remarkably illustrated in my experience."

Mr. Edison held on the Terrace a regular reception when the House arose. He was presented with a copy of the Parliament (Lords' Veto) Bill, signed by Prime Minister Asquith, Lloyd-George, John Redmond, John Burns, T. P. O'Connor and others. He saw both divisions on the bill, and was profoundly interested.

Yesterday Mr. Edison left in a motor for Folkestone, and from there crossed to Boulogne to meet his wife. He now will go on a motor tour through France, avoiding Paris and the large towns. He expects to return to London in six weeks.

Mr. E. L. Houduce, the local representative of the Anciens Etablissement Houedry Fils of Dol de Bretagne, France, dealers in fancy peas, called at the Examiner office this morning to express his satisfaction with the service rendered him by the local building firm of Finny & Gordon. After the late fire, which destroyed the building Messrs. Houedry occupied on Dalhousie street, new premises were repaired as quickly as possible. Mr. Houduce arranged with Mr. Gordon of the above firm of builders on July 18th, and in just three weeks from that time the large new warehouse, 48x200 feet, was delivered to Messrs. Houedry, ready for the installation of cleaning machinery, and the reception of the expected shipments of peas soon to arrive from France. Mr. Houduce is so well pleased with the quick service that he expresses his appreciation publicly in this way.

Orrine Destroys Desire For Drink

The man who drinks to excess needs treatment for his condition. The Orrine treatment can be used with absolute confidence. It destroys all desire for whiskey, beer, and other intoxicants. It is a simple treatment, it is given in the home—no sanitarium expense—no loss of time from work. It is an inexpensive treatment. Many men spend more in a day for whiskey and beer for their friends and themselves than would pay for the treatment.

We are so sure that Orrine will benefit you that we say to you that if after a trial you fail to get any benefit from its use, we will give your money back.

ORRINE is prepared in two forms. No. 1, secret treatment, a powder, absolutely tasteless and odourless, given secretly in food or drink. ORRINE No. 2, in pill form, is for those who desire to take voluntary treatment. ORRINE costs only $1.00 a box. Write for free ORRINE Booklet. (mailed in plain sealed envelope) to ORRINE CO., Orrine Building. Washington, D. C. ORRINE is recommended and is for sale in this city, by Wm. Maddill.

EVERYTHING IS IN READINESS FOR PRINTERS' BIG PICNIC

Executive Reports Arrangements Complete for Banner Outing of the Year---Boat Leaves Wolfe St. Wharf at Eight O'clock.

Monday looks like one big day to the local branch of the Typographical Union, and the only thing necessary to make the day a huge success is good weather. The newspaper offices are filled with picnic talk and the type-setters are going through all the manoeuvres known to modern athletics to get into shape for the various events. There is even a couple of girls in this office who claim that they can stop any candidate that ever sunk his molars into the crust of a blue-berry pie, and that event has, of course, more entries than any other. Mr. Dinnie Dobbin tried hard to get a lacrosse game on, and failing in his efforts will put on a lacrosse monologue, entitled, "Scientific slugging and other slugging."

Lady (Ernest) Bartlett starting the ball a-rolling at the great Printers' Picnic, Civic Holiday.

Mr. M. Pappas has very kindly donated a box of cigars as a prize for the Printers' picnic, since the programme has been printed.

Mr. Sammy Jamieson has been detailed to look after the young ladies. He will wear a prominent badge on his manly chest, by which he may be identified.

Mr. Arthur Rogers has asked the committee to hand over the prize for the fat man's race already, so sure is he of annexing it. He has taken off, in the past two weeks, four and a half ounces, and expects to make the weight by three o'clock Monday afternoon.

Bob. Brown has been given permission to render a few old melodies on the cornet. An interpreter will make megaphonic announcement of the tunes he is playing, so there will be no difficulty. He has promised to render no more than three tunes.

Longboat Myland has been doing gymnastic work preparatory to entering the dashes. He has been practising a few of his famous "contortion stunts" and will give an afternoon and evening performance, weather and committee permitting.

The latest entrant in the married mens race is Leo. Shannon. Although only a benedict two weeks, it is said his sprinting has improved wonderfully. It's wonderful what a man can do when he is chased.

It has been definitely decided to bar Charlie Curtis and Josh Craig from the feature event, the pie-mangling struggle. The ladies who made these tasty blue-berry pies entered a big kick against these candidates, claiming that in the interests of true sport, professionals should be barred. Mr. E. Sharrard should have a chance now, as we was last year's runner-up. This decision of the executive will be final as Mr. Sharrard is part of that body.

Mr. George Johnson, who pounds linotype No. 4 when the boss is present, promises exactly four home runs in the ball game. George is no novice at the game either. His official average for the past season is as follows:

Games seen this year—Five.
No. paid for—None.
No. swiped in—Five.
No. times caught swiping in—once (nearly.)
No. ladies he took to games—None.
No. foul balls pinched—Four.
Average—.8004.

Johnson leads the "Irrational League."

Proofreader Spence says the suspense in finding out his recompense will not be at his expense as he has donated thruppence and will land the ball over the fence for he has great confidence in his predominence at pie-eating and what he cannot hold in his chest will go behind the fence.

"Baldy" Barringer will look after the baskets both on and off the boat.

'Dinny' Dobbin 'nose' where he is going on Civic Holiday—of course to "Idle Wild".

"Jimmy" Brown has consented to sing in his usual fine style on the way down the river "Mother May I Go in to Swim," "The Camels are Comin'" and "Home Sweet Home."

Mr. 'Prunes' Abraham will delight the audience by his thrilling story of his trip around the world in a metal pot and how he and Dr. Cook distributed peanuts to the Eskimos in an aeroplane.

As the boat glides smoothly along the beautiful rives Brother Herridge will demonstrate to the crowd the many ways he has of landing the minnows that grow to be five-pounders as they are being brought home.

Longboat Myland consulting his physician in regard to refitting for the Printers' Picnic on Monday, Civic Holiday, to Idyl Wyld.

and will show the different spots along the river where he dreamt he had been landin' 'em.

"Lou" Dillon has kindly consented to give an exhibition of "fast" pacing.

"Scotty" Galbraith will look after the wants of all on board to see that nobody goes dry.

Captain Colwes will see that nobody is "bound" in the ties of matrimony.

STANDS SCOTLAND, WHERE SHE DID?

—x—

Lines composed in view of the coming Caledonian Gathering to be held next month in Knox Church:—

Stands Scotland where she did?
Oh, print these words in letters large;
Step forth, with bow and quiver,
Proclaim the glories of a land
Whose fame shall live for ever—
The land where Bruce and Wallace led
Brave Scots to deeds of daring,
Whose blood the heather oft has dyed
To keep the Standard waving.
May we as Scots, in foreign land,
Foolish though it may seem,
Step forth, though few, a gallant band,
To keep their memory green.
How true the words one poet said—
"Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land?"
Then let us burn with patriotic fire,
Brave sons of still more gallant sires;
Macgregor's cry, "The heather's on fire!"
Be the slogan of our loyal band,
The fiery cross we know so well,
That used to fly o'er hill and dell,
That seemed to, with its magic spell,
Make all our foemen quiver—
This time, in peace, it sallies forth,
And travels south, east, west, and north,
Entwin'd with the Lion, St. Andrew's Cross,
The words, "Scotland for Ever!"
Then spread the tidings far and near,
Command all Scotsmen to appear,
Their tartan badge and heather dear
Their noble breasts adorning.
No sword or claymore in the game:
We'll sing the songs of Scotland's fame,
Her bonnie lassies, her honest men,
From night until the morning.
And if, perchance, as on you pass,
Should you but hear this question asked,
"Stands Scotland where she did?"
Then right about, expand your chest
Avaunt the words—yap, shure, I guess,
And loudly, bravely answer—YES!

—"PIBROCH."

BAND CONCERT TO-NIGHT

The following well appointed programme has been arranged for the band concert, to be given in Victoria Park to-night by the 57th Regimental Band:

March—British Flag.
Overture—Guy Mannering
Georgia Sunset.
Cornet Solo—Killarney — Sergt. Hughes.
Selection from the comic opera, "Yankee Consul."
March—Tipperary.
Selection—Ermine.
Reminiscences of the plantation.

SHE GAINED 35 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy, had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 18 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 35 pounds in weight."

MORE SPORTS FOR CIVIC HOLIDAY

The Treasures Seekers Adult Bible Class of St. James' Church are holding an outing to Chemong Park by auto 'bus on Civic Holiday, the committee that have this outing in charge are the Social Committee and they are doing their best to make the trip an enjoyable one. They have arranged for a large number of sports, for the children and the older ones, and they intend taking along some ice cream to have for sale amongst the class. Every one bring along their baskets. The 'buses will leave the church at 8 o'clock, and continue running until all are out at the Park. Arrangements have been made to have all the baskets taken by one load. Mr. Kitney and Mr. Kent have offered to take them all out, and an enjoyable trip is assured.

Death Of A Former Resident

Mrs. Frank Chembo passed away yesterday at her home in Watertown, New York, after a brief illness.

The late Mrs. Chembo, who was in her 27th year, was formerly a resident of this city. She was born in Otonabee in 1886 and was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Smiley.

Deceased was of a bright and amiable disposition and was highly respected by a wide circle of friends. She was a prominent member of the Episcopal church and Epworth League.

She leaves 2 children, aged two and one year respectively to mourn her loss, also one brother, Thomas Smiley of California.

The remains will be brought here for interment to-morrow via G. T. R. at 5.30 o'clock and the funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon from the residence of Mr Charles Chembo, 95 Rubidge street to Little Lake cemetery.

Found A Bottle With Note Enclosed

While Drs. Beyell and Farrell were hooking a few 20 pound 'lunge down at the Otonabee this week they found a bottle floating. They picked it up and upon examining the contents found a piece of paper (apparently the only available paper,) as it resembled a label that might be used around a bottle of 'Old Scotch.' The following is the list of names inscribed thereon: Josh Gamble, Harry Cann, Stanley Taylor, Geo. Butchard, O. Given, Walter Patterson. Dated Peterborough, Aug. 6, 1911. The bottle was found just out from Smithson's Landing. We hope no accident happened the party. — Millbrook Mirror.

TWO HORSE THIEVES ARRESTED HERE

A man named Wm. Kinberger was arrested here last night, charged with stealing a horse and buggy at Campbellford yesterday, on the strength of a telephone message to the local police department from the police at Campbellford. It was learned that he had tried to sell the horse also on the way up. Kinberger, alias Wm. Hassall, alias Jacobs, was arrested here some years ago, charged with breaking into the C. P. R. station, and was convicted. Since then he had not been heard of here. He was taken to Campbellford this morning.

Another man named Albert Harrod performed a like stunt, only his location of action was Lindsay. He hired a horse from a Lindsay liveryman, and never paid for it, and did not apparently intend to return with it, as he tried to sell it on the way here, and did his best to sell it here yesterday. He was arrested last night and Chief Chilton took him back this morning. He gave his home as Ottawa and passed as a chauffeur.

It was rather strange that both men should make for Peterborough, but this little experience will teach them how efficient the police department is in this city and neighbouring towns.

Italian Fined $23.30 For Interfering With Policeman

Tony Rose, the Italian who was arrested last Sunday for interfering with a policeman, was this morning found guilty of the offence and fined $10, with $13.30 costs, $23.30 in all.

Mr. Thos. Minnicolo acted as interpreter, and the following witnesses were called: P. C. Brown, Detective Newhall, a little girl who picked up the razor that had been thrown, Angelo Cimulomare and Donato Carcio, the last two having been eye witnesses of the trouble.

The only plea the defence offered was drunkenness. He said he would not have interfered if he had been sober. He denied throwing the razor. He said, when he saw he was going to be arrested, he threw the razor away.

Det. Newhall stated that the prisoner told him that he drank twenty-three glasses of beer during the afternoon.

The magistrate said that drunkenness was no excuse, and anyhow, when he had sense enough to throw the razor away he must have realized that he was doing wrong.

Wm. Burton and John Jackson were each fined $2.00 for being drunk in a public place.

Louis Mayne was remanded for a week on the same charge.

Local Man Badly Injured In Accident Out West

Word has been received from Calgary to-day to the effect that Math. Breckenridge, formerly of this city, had met with a somewhat serious accident, having been kicked in the jaw by a horse.

He was taken to the Holy Cross Hospital, Calgary, where it was found that his jaw had been broken in two places.

Mr. Breckenbridge, who was well known in the city, went West some time ago and became engaged in construction work as foreman.

His many friends in this city will hope for his speedy recovery.

REPORT UNTRUE

HALIFAX, N.S., AUG. 11.—Commander Martin states that the report that Commander McDonald had surrendered his sword was absolutely untrue.

THE VETERANS OF 1866 EXPRESS THEIR GRATITUDE

At a representative meeting of the Veterans of 1866, held at the Armouries, on Tuesday evening, August 1, 1911, it was unanimously carried that the thanks of the Veterans be tendered to Mr. Middlebro, and the other friends, for their kindly interest in trying to secure for them some recognition of their services to their country in the dark days of 1866, and hope that our friends in the House may continue to press upon the Government the justice of the prayer of our petition.

The men of 1866 gave up their employment and all they held dear, sacrificing their time willingly for their country, and now, one by one, they are answering the last call, and we veterans think it would be a graceful thing for the Government to do something for the few that are left of the old Guard of 1866.

The New $ Bill

A farmer out in Kansas
About five years ago
Went into town one day to spend
Some of his hard-earned "dough"
And in a merry jest and just
To show his printing skill,
He printed his initials on

He spent that dollar that same day
Down at the village store
He thought 'twas gone for ever then
And he'd see it no more.
But long before the year rolled by
One day he went to fill
A neighbor's order, and received
That same one d.o.l.l.a.r b.i.l.l.

Once more he spent that dollar bill
In his own neighborhood,
Where it would do himself and friends
The most amount of good.
Four times in two years it came back
As some bad pennies will,
And each time he'd go out and spend
This marked one d.o.l.l.a.r b.i.l.l.

Had he been wise that dollar might
Be in his town to-day,
But just about two years ago
He sent it far away.
The people who received it then
I know have got it still,
For 'twas to a mail-order house
He sent his d.o.l.l.a.r b.i.l.l.

No more will that marked dollar come
Into the farmer's hands,
And nevermore will it help pay
The taxes on his land.
He put it where it never can
Its work in life fulfil;
He brought about the living death
Of that one d.o.l.l.a.r b.i.l.l.

Being extended to a week. Light head winds, however, made our progress slow indeed, and sometimes cold mists blotted out all the wondrous ultramarine blue of the sea which we call "Yellow."

Thus a week slipped by, during which we sighted not one sail, but when the mist was most dense, and a brooding silence which we could almost feel, seemed to rest upon the waters, a large skeleton junk floated noiselessly close past us, its great black ribs looking weird and ghostly, like one of Gustave Dore's strange fancies. There could be little doubt that all her crew had perished. Had we struck her in the night, we should inevitably have foundered, so we realised that our good angels had been faithful watchers. Ten days passed, and the poor captain was losing money by every hour's delay. We coasted two of the Corean Isles and lay becalmed for a night dangerously near many rocky islets. We could distinguish several villages, but could not have ventured to land, as the "Hermit Nation" was still antagonistic to all strangers.

At last we sighted the beautiful Goto Isles and here the Yellow Sea became bluer than ever—deep intense ultramarine, but clear as crystal. I sat on deck till midnight, and watched the golden moon slowly sink into the Corean Straits. All the next day we were coasting Fukuye, the largest isle of the group, with high volcanic mountains and very varied islets, some richly wooded, some grassy, others precipitous, covered with the picturesque old fir trees, which form so striking a feature in all parts of Japan. It was sorely tantalising to know that we were only fifty miles from Nagasaki—"the haven where we desired to be"—but not only was the breeze light and variable, but whichever way we tacked, it seemed to turn and head us. Evening drew on while we were endeavouring to pass between Aka and Ki, two very dangerous groups of jagged rocky isles. The sun set in living glory, bathing the rocks and mountains of the Isle Kuro in hues of lilac and green and gold, when the breeze failed altogether. Though the sea was in one sense calm, it was running inshore in mighty rollers, dashing with resistless fury on the outlying rocks, and we were at their mercy, for the depth of the water was unfathomable and we could not anchor—unless we could keep just in the middle we must inevitably be dashed to pieces on the right hand or the left.

IN IMMINENT PERIL

Never since the night when we lay in the Hindoo off the Eddystone rocks in a howling tempest, with our rudder gear gone, and the water within seven inches of our upper fire, had I been in such imminent peril as in that most peaceful calm—the good little ship in perfect order, with every sail set, looking so white and pretty in the brilliant light of a full moon, helplessly and apparently hopelessly drifting straight on to the cruel rocks, carried in by the huge oily rollers which form the dreaded breakers, the roar of which sounded in our ears, and we could already distinguish the flash of their white spray.

Just at sunset a little breath of wind encouraged us to steer seawards, but the great rollers came on with such resistless force that the brig could make no way at all. The full moon shone gloriously, and the white sails gleamed as if inviting the breeze that would not come, and all the time we were drifting nearer and nearer to inevitable destruction. My recollection of the appalling force of the breakers on Fijian coral-reefs, and of wholesale clearance of wrecked canoes by sharks, had impressed me with a very wholesome reverence for breakers in general, especially such as we knew to be in shark-haunted waters!

It was a most lovely night—I had almost said "clear as day," only that moonlight makes it impossible to judge accurately of distance. But one thing was evident, namely, that we were apparently within a few minutes of certain wreck, each moment drifting us nearer and nearer to the rocks, while the thunderous roar of the breakers became more deafening, and their gleaming white light more vivid. It was evidently a mere question of minutes, so the captain decided that the moment had come when he must abandon his ship, as there was nothing to be gained by waiting till she struck—on the contrary, it would be running very unnecessary danger.

"MAN'S EXTREMITY"

So he gave orders for the one little boat to be made ready, while we rapidly stowed our most precious goods into the smallest possible space, the captain and his Chinese boy cramming ship's papers, clothes and dollars into a canvas bag, while I collected the most valuable small treasures from the depths of my carefully packed boxes, and thought with dire regret of the many pleasant associations of far-distant lands interwoven with the heterogeneous piles of every conceivable article, which lay scattered around—so soon to become the sport of the waves. Most sadly did I grieve for the large cases containing the precious portfolios of water-colour paintings in dream-like South Sea Isles, China and Japan. But there was no time to bemoan the inevitable, and we were now ready to face the worst, so rejoined our companions on deck. It must have been trying indeed to those hardy Norsemen, who would have been in their element battling with a storm, to have to sit on this beautiful calm summer night, utterly helpless, watching their good ship drift to her inevitable doom. In the few moments we had been in the cabin we had sensibly approached the land, which now loomed high before us, and the dull roar of the breakers sounded more ominous than ever—not a continuous sound like the raging of a tempest, but an intermittent booming, like rolling thunder, with momentary intervals of almost stillness, which seemed to accentuate the roar and crash that followed.

The order to lower the little boat was given and in another moment we should have been on board of her. But as the old saying goes, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," and at the very last moment, when we had drifted so close to the white crests of the huge curling green waves that it seemed as if nothing could save the vessel from being dashed on the ramparts of pitiless black rocks, and when the awful tumult and crash of falling, breaking billows sounded full in our deafened ears, suddenly, when all possibility of salvation appeared to be over, a faint little puff of wind caught the sails, then another and another, and a blessed breeze sprang up, wafting us away from the beautiful, treacherous shore. In less than an hour we were clear of the group, and thankfully watched the receding Goto Isles as we sat on deck in the soft, lovely moonlight, enjoying the hot coffee which was rapidly produced by the cool and collected Chinese cook, and rejoicing that we had not ended our voyage so disastrously as lately seemed inevitable.

THROUGH MANY DANGERS

I was much gratified by the hearty and honest manner in which my comrades expressed their gratification at the coolness with which I had faced our prospects. They had evidently imagined that women under such circumstances must necessarily be helpless encumbrances, so it was pleasant to have helped to dispel that illusion. I am thankful to say that that sort of physical fear in respect of visible danger is a sensation which I have never experienced—on the contrary, I have always felt that it was "all fish that came to the net," and that it was easier to be cool than to get fussed.

After all, my hardy Norseman did have a chance of distinguishing themselves in a real tearing gale. The following morning was a dream of calm loveliness. The beautiful isles of Southern Japan lay all round us, and we hoped ere sunset to be safely anchored in Nagasaki Harbour, when suddenly, down swept a white squall hiding all the isles. Another moment and we were enfolded in cold eerie mist, and the sea, which had been the most exquisite blue, became dreary and grey—the barometer falling fast. Nothing could we see but stormy, grey sky, and a weary expanse of grey waves. It rose to the dignity of a severe gale, and all night our good little ship rolled and tossed like a nutshell. Sometimes lying over at such an angle that it seemed impossible she could right again. Towards morning, the storm abated, but grey sheets of rain poured pitilessly, and we could not tell how far we might have drifted in the night.

Suddenly there came a break in the mist, revealing the island of Tagoshima, and the smoke and shafts of its coal mines, while to the left lay the lighthouse which marks the entrance of Nagasaki harbour—a long narrow bay with grand rocky headlands, and still, clear inlets; isles of infinitely varied form, displaying every shade of exquisite green terraced fields, with rich crops of millet and maize, and the vivid green of the young rice; dark clumps of most picturesque old fir trees, or groves of delicate airy bamboo with feathery foliage, and tidy little Japanese villages and graves, dotted about in every direction. Never had this most beautiful soil seemed to me so lovely as then in contrast with the dreary scene of the previous day. A light breeze blew us cheerily up the harbour, and our brave little vessel flew to her anchorage in such gallant style as to win special commendation from the officers of an English man o' war which lay hard by. An hour later found me warmly welcomed back to the pleasant British Consulate whence I looked from a wealth of gay garden blossoms to the blue harbour far below, where lay the little Thorkild, which had brought me so safely through many dangers, back to that green paradise,

KIT'S COLUMN

When the best politician of them all, the Dowager Duchess of Devonshire, passed away, England lost the greatest of her great ladies. Her life was one long series of triumphs. She had wit, beauty, wealth and a position second only to that of the Queen. Her bronze hair and violet eyes were sung by poets. Her perfect complexion was the despair of other women. And her life, so brilliant and varied, was crowned by Love. Time was her only enemy and with him she parried swords to the last. Lord Hartington remained single for her sake till he was fifty-nine, when the duchess' first husband, the Duke of Manchester, died, and two years afterwards this faithful lover led the woman of his heart to the altar. Her second marriage was perhaps the most brilliant a woman could make. It placed her at the head of that exclusive society which no parvenu of mere nouveau riche may hope to enter. The politics of the empire she had at her finger tips, this literally, for she made and doubtless unmade many a parliamentarian. She knew secrets of state long before the world got wind of them. She was socially and politically the most powerful woman in England.

With all this she had also what is termed the sporting instinct which endeared her to all who loved a good game at cards or a horse race. She was persona grata to King Edward and his court, and no doubt, she would have held her place in the court of King George. She could talk music with the Kaiser, play bridge with King Edward, lead the cotillion with an emperor's son, give a prime minister a political clue worth a king's ransom, break the fashion of the hour by exploiting a fresh one, talk thoroughbreds with a jockey, modernity with Father Vaughan, and spiritualism with Mr. Stead, and to all these qualities she added the excellent one of thorough womanliness. She was, in fact, the most wonderful woman of her century, and it was once the fortune of the writer to see her at comparatively close quarters.

The occasion was that of the greatest social event of the last fifty years of the last century, the historic fancy dress ball of the Diamond Jubilee in 1897. Nothing quite so splendid has occurred since, not even during the recent coronation festivities. There was only one woman of her century who could entertain in this lavish and imperial manner. Wealth, even allied to station, could not produce anything so redolent of old-world grandeur and stateliness. The most brilliant assemblage England had known since the time of the Georges was gathered at Devonshire House. When you passed under the illuminated crown over the great entrance, you stepped into an Arabian night's entertainment, to Fairyland if the conception pleases you better. The perfume, the lights—a myriad—the flowers, the famous white marble stairway with its crystal balusters caught with silver bands, the kings, the queens, the princesses and great ladies and knights of dead-gone days in their magnificent dresses and jewels confused one. The gardens through which the guests streamed did not look as if they were of earthly creation, so beautiful were the trees softly lit with Venetian lanterns, the flower-beds set with little electric suns, which made the roses glow with deeper bloom—the musicians stringing their melodies in dimly-lighted arbors, and coming and going, the glittering throng of Indian princes, foreign diplomats and court ladies.

The edict of the great lady, the Duchess of Devonshire, was that no guest should appear in attire later than 1820. She herself appeared as Zenobia, the splendid Queen of Palmyra. It was a role that suited her great beauty and statelimess. She received her guests at the top of the famous staircase attired in tissue of silver, sewn all over with jewels, with an overdress of sheer golden gauze, likewise woven with gems, diamond, pearl and flashing ruby. From the bandeau of gold about her perfect brows hung chains of pearls and turquoises. She seemed to gather and hold and radiate light. I have never seen anyone so beautiful, so stately, so splendid. She did not seem a creature made of the same clay as a woman with a pinched face whom later I saw outside in the crowd being "moved on" like Joe in Tom-all-Alones by the baton of a busy policeman. Such are the high and low lights of great London.

The appetite for sensational feats which endanger life seems to grow rather than abate. If Leach, the man who went over the Falls in a barrel, found no one to take interest and put up money in his venture he wouldn't have done it. If we didn't patronise sensational features they would soon lose their place on the program. People who paid seventy-five cents to see a man risk his life in a flying machine grumbled when the state of the weather prohibited an exhibition. Rather than disappoint such persons McCurdy went up at Donlands the other day, rising from an unfinished runway and it was by mere chance that he escaped alive and uninjured. The crowd always thrills with the thought "something may happen." It is this which holds us tense and silent when the car with the woman in it is somersaulted into space, or when the high diver shoots down into shallow water. If we didn't look for sensational feats; if we refused to go where they were presented they would soon be eliminated from amusement features. The great Ontario exhibition is at hand and we will all be flocking into Toronto to see what is best and greatest in Canadian manufacture and agriculture. Let us hope that those in authority will present a bill of entertainment which shall be free from anything which might lead to injury or death. Public opinion is the biggest voice in the world. Were it raised in full volume to suppress dangerous amusement features and remove at least this touch of barbarity from present-day civilization, it would prove a powerful factor in procuring pleasant and happy entertainments in which there would be risk to neither life or limb.

I came across an article on Sarah Bernhardt, written in most derisive vein, the other day. The author ridiculed the actress in appearance, manner, voice, and assailed even her art. She "tottered" on to the stage. She "ranted." Her "golden" voice was now the hoarse croak of the raven. Her "figure" was no more. She was fat, unwieldy—absurd. No doubt he never saw Sarah in her prime. Few of us have, for in her rosy days the great tragedienne did not cross the water. She was fifty when I first met her, and as lithe and slender then as a girl of twenty. But I saw her within the past twelve months and her art has not changed, her voix d'or is as "golden" as ever, and as ranque as ever — when emotion stirs her either with love or hate. She is not as slender as in the old days, but she has lost no whit of her grace or her magnetism. The long eastern eyes may have aged but they can flash with fires that show no sign of diminishing. So far from being "absurd" (a word which ought never to be applied to her), she still has power to stir the soul of the young girl as of the world-worn woman, by her magnificent art, her gestures, voice, whole manner of acting. On the stage Sarah Bernhardt will never appear old. Of it, well, that is a story with which the public has no concern. But our critic is not to be suppressed. In his shallow way tinged with much vulgarity, he descants flippantly on the appearance of the greatest actress of a century. He forgets—or is ignorant of all that she has done; the joy she has given; the emotions and longings she has stirred; the song she left singing in the heart, the rapture her genius has brought to soul and mind, the unalloyed pleasure she has given to millions everywhere. Time may jest with Bernhardt as he jests with all who live long enough. He may rob her long eyes of their beauty, her form of its slender grace, her voice of its exquisite tenderness, but he cannot take from us our remembrance of her genius, nor make us forget her delicious art, her supreme and subtle fascination.

Talking of Bernhardt, I was reading a week or so since an account of the famous Parisian beauty Mlle. Lantelme, likewise an actress. The article descanted at length on her beauty, her magnificent hair, her "divine" eyes, her wondrous complexion. It told of her bed of solid gold, her bath of Parisian marble, her dress, her drives in the Bois, and her performance in La Gamine at the Theater Renaissance, which had all Paris laughing. She had just married M. Edouard, the proprietor of the Matin, a man who adored her. She had everything the world has to offer to a woman—beauty, wit, wealth, Love, and the adoration of Paris.

Very different from Bernhardt as our critic presents her, "old, tottering, all but forgotten—a woman who has lived too long in the public eye."

Well, taking up a French journal but that day arrived, I read the tragedy which ended for all time the role of the pretty Lantelme. A holiday, a yachting trip with a number of friends, a cruise up the Rhine, a supper party. Love and song and roses. Beauty and youth and happiness. And—the forbidden and unseen guest at the feast.

After supper Mlle. Lantelme was seized with mal de mer as she was preparing to retire. She leaned from the window—the boat was of the house order with windows instead of portholes—and a lurch of the vessel caused her to lose her balance. She fell into the water and was quickly carried away by the current. Her husband caught a glimpse of a white arm, heard a cry, and followed her. With difficulty he was saved—but the young and lovely woman was swept away for ever.

Well, what would you? Death while yet at the height of fame, while in the very arms of Love, or life till withering age comes with its blight, and some brainless mannikin flings the first stone at what once was so lovely and so tender. It is not much, after all, this life lived in the public eye.

NOTE THE FEATURES THAT MAKE FOR CONVENIENCE:

Water Pan Openings conveniently placed on either side of ash door.

Large Firing Door for wood or large shovels of coal.

Four Separate Grates to clean out ashes without using poker.

Common Sense Ash Pan fitting perfectly and catching all the ashes.

Large Door Handle which drops into place and locks the door securely.

More than furnace that is easy to attend—
One you can clean out without using the poker.
¶ The ashes at the side of the pot can be shaken down without losing good coals in the centre. The four separate grate bars do that.
¶ The water pan, so essential to good heating, is placed where it can be easily filled and not so likely to be overlooked.

"Hecla" Furnace

Six tons of coal instead of seven.

And this furnace which is so easy to run will save you one ton of coal in every seven.
¶ It will give you pure air without gas or dust.
¶ When you shake it down no ash dust can escape either in the basement or in the living rooms.
Sound interesting?
Why not investigate?

Get this Booklet.

It will be sent free, and it will tell you things you ought to know about heating. Write for it to-day.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

Where is the stream of life so dark and unpropitious that the sunshine of a happy face falling on the turbid tide will not awaken an answering gleam?

* * *

Parents often say "I live for my children." They should do more than that—they should live with their children, letting their boys and girls feel that their interests are their parents' interests also.

* * *

What is needed most of all in bringing up children is example. What they see and hear and take in by absorption in their young years will, in most cases ,become the ruling traits of their lives.

* * *

A room without a couch of some sort is half furnished. Life is full of ups and downs and all that saves the sanity of the mentally jaded and physically exhausted fortune-fighter is the periodical "good cry," and momentary loss of consciousness in the upstairs lounge or sofa in the sitting-room.

* * *

There are times when so many of the things that distract us could be straightened out ,and the way made clear, if one only had a long, comfortable couch on whose soft bosom he could throw himself, boots and brains, stretch his weary frame, unmindful of tidies and tapestry, close his tired eyes, relax the tension of his muscles and give his harnessed mind a chance.

* * *

Woman equips man for the voyage of life. She is seldom a leader in any project ,but meets her peculiar and best attitudes as a helper. Though man executes a project, she fits him for it, beginning in his childhood. A man discovered America, but a woman equipped the voyage; so everywhere man executes the performance, but woman trains the man.

* * *

Shovel your saloon money, theatre money, shooting gallery money, rink money, tobacco money, into the bank, and gather something to beautify and render more pleasant the sweetest place on earth—home.

People wonder why the boys want to leave the farm and try their fortunes in the city. There is little wonder when the matter is looked into. Too little effort is made to makes the homes from which the boys want to run away attractive. The almighty dollar too often gets in the way. Boys are not wild animals; they do not need pounding because they do not do their work as well as older persons.

* * *

Henry Ward Beecher once said: "I think I am more grateful to God for mother and sisters of the substantial integrity, purity and nobility of womanhood ,than for almost anything else in this world. After a long life I can say that I have not lost faith in women. The longer I live the more chivalric is my regard for them. I should look upon it as a fatal canker in my soul if I ,fell from my confidence in the general trustworthiness, honesty, honour, and charity of womanhood. Therefore, when I hear young men, or men in middle life, or old men, cast aspersions on the character of women, I feel as if I were in a den of hissing serpents.

* * *

Home life is the sure test of home character. Let the husand grow cross and surly, and the wife grow cold and unamiable. The children grow cross and savage as young bears. The father becomes callous, peevish, hard, kind of a two-legged brute with clothes on. The wife bristles in self-defence. They develop an unnatural growth and sharpness of teeth and the house is haunted by ugliness and domestic brawls. This is not what the family circle should be. If one must be rude to any, let it be to some one he does not love—not his wife, brother ,or parents.

* * *

Labour is honourable, and the ignoble are those who will not work. Get you a home. Fence a field and plow it and plant it, and gather around you the comforts of home. And when you have made a character for energy and thrift, ask some young lady to share your home with you. We would say to every young lady, mark these men who are lounging around attempting to live by their wits, or on the interest of their debts;

Chop enough cucumbers to make two cupfuls, and cold boiled potatoes for three cupfuls, and marinate the latter with three tablespoonfuls of French dressing; chill. When ready to serve, mix lightly together with a small quantity of shredded lettuce and two tablespoonfuls of minced parsley; pour over all a dressing made of one cupful of rich cream, which has been whipped, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of Tarragon vinegar, a tablespoonful of salt, a little white pepper, and a small onion grated. Serve at once.

BUTTERMILK CORN BREAD

One pint of buttermilk, one teaspoonful each of soda and salt, one well-beaten egg, one heaping pint of cornmeal. One heaping tablespoonful of sugar may be added if liked. Bake in a dripping pan or gem pans in a quick oven.

A HEALTH HINT

When you open the milk bottle be sure that you first wash off the top and mouth. Even when the milkman is late, do not say, "Well, for this once it won't hurt," for just at that one time the milkman might have driven through a street where dust might have been raised and a portion settled on the tops of the milk bottles.

Pour a little water on the lid of a closed bottle to-morrow morning, and reflect it under the gaslight, and you will find that the tiny lake will not need a microscope to tell its tale of dust lying there.

TASTY SUMMER SALADS

Every housewife knows of the trouble experienced in providing variety of salads and sandwiches for the ordinary household in the good old summer time. The staple ham and tongue sandwiches and chicken salad seem anything but tempting in the dog days.

Here are some tried recipes for housewives in all parts of the country; they are easily prepared and equally suitable for the picnic basket or the home luncheon:

MOCK CRAB SALAD

A quarter of a cupful of grated cheese, a quarter of a teaspoonful each of salt, paprika and mustard, a teaspoonful of anchovy paste, a tablespoonful of chopped olives, teaspoonful of lemon juice and two tablespoonfuls of creamed butter. Serve in balls on crisp lettuce leaves.

WALNUT AND WATERCRESS SALAD

Lay the kernels of thirty English walnuts on a layer of sliced oranges. Squeeze lemon juice over them and let them stand for twenty-four hours. Use California lemons and oranges in order to secure the necessary amount of citric acid to impregnate the walnuts. When the salad is needed wash and pick over a pint of cress or chop a bunch of celery and add to the walnuts. Pour over all a rich French dressing.

COMBINATION SALAD

As tasty a salad as one would find in a day's march was recently served by a young housewife. It combined cress, cucumber, apple, green peppers, radishes, young onions and tomatoes in about equal parts. All the vegetables were cut into small cubes or thin slices and the mixture, served on cress, was dressed with oil and vinegar seasoned with salt and paprika.

SPANISH PEPPER SALAD

When there are string beans left from the dinner they may be used for a salad with the sweet Spanish red peppers. If the beans are scanty in amount, add a green pepper or two.

and when they ask you to share the lot of an aimless life, pass them on, for you cannot afford to marry a man without prosperity or business habits, unless you wish to sell yourself for a mess of pottage.

* * *

How many hungry hearts there are in the world, hungering for recognition, for a word of praise! The hungriest heart in this world is an unpraised woman whose husband never gives her a word of praise.

The home influence is either a blessing or a curse, either for good or for evil. It cannot be neutral. In either case it is mighty, commencing with our birth; going with us through life, clinging to us in death, and reaching into the eternal world. The specific influences of husband and wife, of parent and child, of brother and sister, of teacher and pupil united and harmoniously blended, constitute the home influence. Like the calm, deep stream ,it moves on in silent but overwhelming power. It strikes its roots deep into the human heart ,and spreads its branches wide over our whole being. Like the lily that braves the tempest and "the Alpine flower that leans its cheek on the bosom of eternal snow," it is exerted amid the wildest storms of life and breathes a softening spell in our bosom even when a heartless world is freezing up the fountains of sympathy and love.

SUMMER MONTHS FATAL TO SMALL CHILDREN

The summer months are the hardest of the year on small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and stomach troubles are all common at this time and many a precious life is snuffed out after only a few hours' illness. As a safeguard mothers should keep Baby's Own Tablets in the house. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes on suddenly will bring the little ones through safely. Mrs. Larry DeGrace, Mizonette, N. B., writes: "Last summer my baby suffered greatly from her stomach and bowels and nothing helped her till I began giving her Baby's Own Tablets. They regulated her bowels sweetened her stomach, and now she is a big healthy, happy child. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SHE GOT WHAT SHE WANTED

This Woman Had to Insist Strongly, but it Paid

Chicago, Ill.—"I suffered from a female weakness and stomach trouble, and I went to the store to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but the clerk did not want to let me have it—he said it was no good and wanted me to try something else, but knowing all about it I insisted and finally got it, and I am so glad I did, for it has cured me.

"I know of so many cases where women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I can say to every suffering woman if that medicine does not help her, there is nothing that will."—Mrs. JANETSKI, 2008 Arch St., Chicago, Ill.

This is the age of substitution, and women who want a cure should insist upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound just as this woman did, and not accept something else on which the druggist can make a little more profit.

Women who are passing through this critical period or who are suffering from any of those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of the fact that for thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills. In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

By JACK LONDON

"But why should I?" was the demand. "The pair of you trapped me into making a fool of myself. How was I to know that everything was not all right? You and she acted as if everything were on the square. But my eyes are open now. Why, she played the outraged wife to perfection, slapped the transgressor and fled to you. Pretty good proof of what all the beach has been saying. Partners, eh?—a business partnership? Gammon my eye, that's what it is."

Then it was that Sheldon struck out, coolly and deliberately, with all the strength of his arm, and Tudor, caught on the jaw, fell sideways, crumpling as he did so and crushing a chair to kindling wood beneath the weight of his falling body. He pulled himself slowly to his feet, but did not offer to rush.

"Now will you fight?" Tudor asked grimly.

Sheldon laughed, and for the first time with true spontaneity. The intrinsic ridiculousness of the situation was too much for his sense of humour. He made as if to repeat the blow, but Tudor, white of face, with arms hanging resistlessly at his sides, offered no defence.

"I don't mean a fight with fists," he said slowly. "I mean to a finish, to the death. You're a good shot with revolver and rifle. So am I. That's the way we'll settle it."

"You have gone clean mad. You are a lunatic."

"No I'm not," Tudor retorted. "I'm a man in love. And once again I ask you to go outside and settle it, with any weapons you choose."

Sheldon regarded him for the first time with genuine seriousness, wondering what strange maggots could be gnawing in his brain to drive him to such unusual conduct.

"But men don't act this way in real life," Sheldon remarked.

"You'll find I'm pretty real before you're done with me. I'm going to kill you to-day."

"Bosh and nonsense, man." This time Sheldon had lost his temper over the superficial aspects of the situation. "Bosh and nonsense, that's all it is. Men don't fight duels in the twentieth century. It's—it's antediluvian, I tell you."

"Speaking of Joan—"

"Please keep her name out of it," Sheldon warned him.

"I will, if you'll fight."

Sheldon threw up his arms despairingly.

"Speaking of Joan—"

"Look out," Sheldon warned again. "Oh, go ahead, knock me down. But that won't close my mouth. You can knock me down all day, but as fast as I get to my feet I'll speak of Joan again. Now will you fight?"

"Listen to me, Tudor," Sheldon began, with an effort at decisiveness. "I am not used to taking from men a tithe of what I've already taken from you."

"You'll take a lot more before the day's out," was the answer. "I tell you you simply must fight. I'll give you a fair chance to kill me, but I'll kill you before the day's out. This isn't civilization. It's the Solomon Islands, and a pretty primitive proposition for all that. King Edward and law and order are represented by the Commissioner at Tulagi and an occasional visiting gunboat. And two men and one woman is an equally primitive proposition. We'll settle it in the good old primitive way."

As Sheldon looked at him, the thought came to his mind that after all there might be something in the other's wild adventures over the earth. It required a man of that calibre, a man capable of obtruding a duel into orderly twentieth century life, to had such wild adventures.

"There's only one way to stop me," Tudor went on. "I can't insult you directly, I know. You are too easy-going, or cowardly, or both, for that. But I can narrate for you the talk of the beach — ah, that grinds you, doesn't it? I can tell you what the beach has to say about you and this young girl running a plantation under a business partnership?"

"Stop!" Sheldon cried; for the other was beginning again to vibrate and oscillate before his eyes. "You want a duel. I'll give it to you." Then his common-sense and his dislike for the ridiculous asserted themselves, and he added, "But it is absurd, impossible."

"Joan and David—partners, eh? Joan and David—partners," Tudor began to iterate and reiterate in a malicious and scornful chant.

"For heaven's sake keep quiet, and I'll let you have your way," Sheldon cried. "I never saw a fool so bent on his folly. What kind of a duel shall it be? There are no seconds. What weapons shall we use?"

Immediately Tudor's monkeylike impishness left him and he was once more the cool, self-possessed man of the world.

"I've often thought that the ideal duel should be somewhat different from the conventional one," he said.

"I've fought several of that sort, you know—"

"French ones," Sheldon interrupted.

"Call them that. But speaking of this ideal duel, here it is: No seconds, of course, and no onlookers. The two principals alone are necessary. They may use any weapons they please, from revolvers and rifles to machine-guns and pompoms. They start a mile apart, and advance on each other, taking advantage of cover, retreating, circling, feinting — anything and everything permissible. In short, the principals shall hunt each other—"

"Like a couple of wild Indians?"

"Precisely!" cried Tudor, delighted. "You've got the idea. And Berande is just the place, and this is just the right time. Miss Lackland will be taking her siesta, and she'll think we are. We've got two hours for it before she wakes. So hurry up and come on. You start out from the Balesuna and I start from the Berande. Those two rivers are the boundaries of the plantation, aren't they? Very well. The field of the duel will be the plantation. Neither principal must go outside its boundaries. Are you satisfied?"

"Quite. But have you any objections if I leave some orders?"

"Not at all," Tudor acquiesced, the pink of courtesy now that his wish has been granted.

Sheldon clapped his hands, and the running house-boy hurried away to bring back Adamu Adam and Noa Noah.

"Listen," Sheldon said to them; "this man and me we have one big fight to-day. Maybe he die. Maybe I die. If he die, all right. If I die, you two look after Missie Lackalanna. You take rifles and you look after her day-time and night-time. If she want to talk with Mr. Tudor, all right. If she not want to talk, you make him keep away. Savvee?"

They grunted and nodded. They had had much to do with white men, and had learned never to question the strange ways of the strange breed. If these two saw fit to go out and kill each other, that was their business and not the business of the islanders, who took orders from them. They stepped to the gun-rack, and each picked a rifle.

"Better all Tahitian man have rifles," suggested Adamu Adam. "Maybe big trouble come."

"All right, you take them," Sheldon answered, busy with issuing the ammunition.

They went to the door and down the steps, carrying the eight rifles to their quarters. Tudor, with cartridge-belts for rifle and pistol strapped around him, rifle in hand, stood impatiently waiting.

"Come on, hurry up, we're burning daylight," he urged, as Sheldon searched after extra clips for his automatic pistol.

Together they passed down the steps and out of the compound to the beach, where they turned their backs to each other, and each proceeded toward his destination, their rifles in the hollows of their arms, Tudor walking toward the Berande and Sheldon toward the Balesuna.

CHAPTER XXVII
MODERN DUELLING

Barely had Sheldon reached the Balesuna, when he heard the faint report of a distant rifle and knew it was the signal of Tudor, giving notice that he had reached the Berande, turned about, and was coming back. Sheldon fired his rifle into the air in answer, and in turn proceeded to advance. He moved as in a dream, absent-mindedly keeping to the open beach. The thing was so preposterous that he had to struggle to realise it, and he reviewed in his mind the conversation with Tudor, trying to find some clew to the common-sense of what he was doing. He did not want to kill Tudor. Because that man had blundered in his love-making was no reason that he, Sheldon, should take his life. Then what was it all about? True, the fellow had insulted Joan by his subsequent remarks and been knocked down for it, but because he had knocked him down was no reason that he should now try to kill him.

In this fashion, he covered a quarter of the distance between the two rivers, when it dawned upon him that Tudor was not on the beach at all. Of course not. He was advancing, according to the terms of the agreement, in the shelter of the cocoanut trees. Sheldon promptly swerved to the left to seek similar shelter, when the faint crack of a rifle came to his ears, and almost immediately the bullet, striking the hard sand a hundred feet beyond him, ricochetted and whined onward in a second flight, convincing him that preposterous and unreal as it was, it was, nevertheless, sober fact. It had been intended for him. He glanced over the familiar landscape and at the sea, dimpling in the light but steady breeze. From the direction of Tulagi he could see the white sails of a schooner laying a tack across toward Berande. Down the beach a horse was grazing, and he idly wondered where the others were. The smoke rising from the capra-drying caught his eyes, which roved on over the barracks, the tool-houses, the boat-sheds, and the bungalow, and came to rest on Joan's little grass house in the corner of the compound.

Keeping now to the shelter of the trees, he went forward another quarter of a mile. If Tudor had advanced with equal speed, they should have come together at that point, and Sheldon concluded that the other was circling. The difficulty was to locate him. The rows of trees, running at right angles, enabled him to see along only one narrow avenue at a time. His enemy might be coming along the next avenue, or the next, to right or left. He might be a hundred feet away or half a mile. Sheldon plodded on, and decided that the old stereotyped duel was far simpler and easier than this protracted hide-and-seek affair. He, too, tried circling, in the hope of cutting the other's circle; but, without catching a glimpse of him, he finally emerged upon a fresh clearing where the young trees, waist high, afforded little shelter and less hiding. Just as he emerged, stepping out a pace, a rifle cracked to his right, and though he did not hear the bullet in passing, the thud of it came to his ears when it struck a palm trunk farther on.

He sprang back into the protection of the larger trees. Twice he had exposed himself and been fired at, while he had failed to catch a single glimpse of his antagonist. A slow anger began to burn in him. It was deucedly unpleasant, he decided, this being peppered at; and nonsensical as it really was, it was none the less deadly serious. There was no avoiding the issue, no firing in the air and getting over with it as in the old-fashioned duel. This mutual man-hunt must keep up until one got the other. And if one neglected a chance to get the other, that increased the other's chance to get him. There could be no false sentiment about it. Tudor had been a cunning devil when he proposed this sort of duel, Sheldon concluded, as he began to work along cautiously in the direction of the last shot.

When he arrived at the spot, Tudor was gone, and only his footprints remained, pointing out the course he had taken into the depths of the plantation. Once, ten minutes later, he caught a glimpse of Tudor, a hundred yards away, crossing the same avenue as himself but going in the opposite direction. His rifle half leaped to his shoulder, but the other was gone. More in whim than in hope of result, grinning to himself as he did so, Sheldon raised his automatic pistol and in two seconds sent eight shots scattering through the trees in the direction in which Tudor had disappeared. Wishing he had a shot-gun, Sheldon dropped to the ground behind a tree, slipped a fresh clip up the hollow butt of the pistol, threw a cartridge into the chamber, shoved the safety catch into place, and reloaded the empty clip.

It was but a short time after that that Tudor tried the same trick on him, the bullets pattering about him like spiteful rain, thudding into the palm trunks, or glancing off in whining ricochets. The last bullet of all, making a double ricochet from two different trees and losing most of its momentum, struck Sheldon a sharp blow on the forehead and dropped at his feet. He was partly stunned for the moment, but on investigation found no greater harm than a nasty lump that soon rose to the size of a pigeon's egg.

The hunt went on. Once, coming to the edge of the grove near the bungalow, he saw the house-boys and the cook, clustered on the back verandah and peering curiously among the trees, talking and laughing with one another in their queer falsetto voices. Another time he came upon a working gang busy at hoeing weeds. They scarcely noticed him when he came up, though they knew thoroughly well what was going on. It was no affair of theirs that the enigmatical white men should be out trying to kill each other, and whatever interest in the proceedings might be theirs, they were careful to conceal it from Sheldon. He ordered them to continue hoeing weeds in a distant and out-of-the-way corner, and went on with the pursuit of Tudor.

Tiring of the endless circling, Sheldon tried once more to advance directly on his foe, but the latter was too crafty, taking advantage of his boldness to fire a couple of shots at him and slipping away on some changed and continually changing course. For an hour, they dodged and turned and twisted back and forth and around and hunted each other among the orderly palms. They caught fleeting glimpses of each other and chanced flying shots which were without result. On a grassy shelter where Tudor had rested and smoked a cigarette. The pressed grass showed where he had sat. To one side lay the cigarette stump and the charred match which had lighted it. In front lay a scattering of bright metallic fragments. Sheldon recognised their significance. Tudor was notching his steel-jacketed bullets, or cutting them blunt, so that they would spread on striking—in short, he was making them into the vicious dum-dum prohibited in modern warfare. Sheldon knew now what would happen to him if a bullet struck his body. It would leave a tiny hole where it entered, but the hole where it emerged would be the size of a saucer.

He decided to give up the pursuit, and lay down in the grass, protected right and left by the row of palms, with, on either hand, the long avenue extending. This he could watch. Tudor would have to come to him or else there would be no termination of the affair. He wiped the sweat from his face and tied the handkerchief around his neck to keep off the stinging gnats that lurked in the grass. Never had he felt so great a disgust for the thing called "adventure." Joan had been bad enough, with her Baden-Powell and long-barrelled Colt's; but here was this newcomer, also looking for adventure and finding it in no other way than by lugging a peace-loving planter into an absurd and preposterous bushwhacking duel. If ever adventure was well damned, it was by Sheldon, sweating in the windless grass and fighting gnats, the while he kept close watch up and down the avenue.

Then Tudor came. Sheldon happened to be looking in his direction at the moment he came into view, peering quickly up and down the avenue before he stepped into the open. Midway he stopped, as if debating what course to pursue. He made a splendid mark, facing his concealed enemy at two hundred yards' distance. Sheldon aimed at the centre of his chest, then deliberately shifted the aim to his right shoulder, and, with the thought, "that will put him out of business," pulled the trigger. The bullet, driving with momentum sufficient to perforate a man's body a mile distant, struck Tudor with such force as to pivot him, whirling him half around by the shock of its impact and knocking him down.

"Hope I haven't killed the beggar," Sheldon muttered aloud, springing to his feet and running forward.

A hundred feet way, all anxiety on that score was relieved by Tudor, who made shift with his left hand and from his automatic pistol hurled a rain of bullets all around Sheldon. The latter dodged behind a palm trunk, counting the shots, and when the eighth had been fired, he rushed in on the wounded man. He kicked the pistol out of the other's hand and then sat down on him in order to keep him down.

"Be quiet," he said. "I've got you, so there's no use struggling."

Tudor still attempted to struggle and to throw him off.

"Keep quiet, I tell you," Sheldon commanded. "I'm satisfied with the outcome, and you've got to be. So you might as well give in and call this affair closed."

Tudor reluctantly relaxed.

"Rather funny, isn't it, these modern duels?" Sheldon grinned down at him as he removed his weight. "Not a bit dignified. If you'd struggled a moment longer, I'd have rubbed your face in the earth. I've a good mind to do it anyway, just to teach you that duelling has gone out of fashion. Now, let us see to your injuries."

"You only got me that last," Tudor grunted sullenly, "lying in ambush like—"

"Like a wild Indian. Precisely. You've caught the idea, old man." Sheldon ceased his mocking and stood up. "You lie there quietly until I send back some of the boys to carry you in. You're not seriously hurt, and it's lucky for you I didn't follow your example. If you had been struck with one of your own bullets, a carriage and pair would have been none too large to drive through the hole it would have made. As it is, you're drilled clean—a nice little perforation. All you need is antiseptic washing and dressing and you'll be around in a month. Now take it easy, and I'll send a stretcher for you."

Stops Itching Heals the Skin

And Cures Eczema, Salt Rheum, and All Skin Diseases

These Results You Can Be Sure of When You Use

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Quick and certain are the effects of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Itching is stopped almost as soon as it is applied. The sores are cleaned out, morbid growth is arrested, and the healing process is soon set in action.

Compare these results with the tediousness and uncertainty of internal treatment for itching skin disease. By all means look after the health of the blood and the system generally, but get rid of the annoying and torturing skin ailment at once by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

The reputation of Dr. Chase's Ointment has been made by its marvellous success in the cure of eczema and piles. But it is just as effective in the cure of old sores and wounds which have defied ordinary treatments and been given up by doctors.

Dr. Chase's Ointment is prized by mothers as a treatment for the skin troubles of babies, such as chafing, skin irritation, scald head and baby eczema. Its soothing influence stops the itching, and it prevents the development of eczema from these lesser skin troubles.

Mrs. Oscar Vancott, St. Antoine, Sask., writes that Dr. Chase's Ointment cured her boy of eczema when his head was a mass of scabs, and he suffered untold agony from the itching. Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

"Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge."
—Titus Andronicus, Act I., Sc. I.

The beauty of mercy as the highest of divine and human attributes finds frequent illustration in Shakespeare's dramas. In no fewer than three of his plays he deals with the question in such a way as to make it the central thought, the ethical pivot of the entire action. "Measure for Measure" has as its main theme the god-like attribute of mercy; the "Merchant of Venice" not only has mercy as its predominating note, but has in it the strongest and truest sermon ever preached on the subject; "The Tempest," with Prospero, its central figure, endowed with superhuman power, closes with a scene in which mercy is shown to penitent enemies. These three dramas all emphasize that

"Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge."

The student of Shakespeare is constantly reminded of the beatitude, "Blessed are the merciful." In the drama "Macbeth," Shakespeare includes mercy among the "king-becoming graces." In "Measure for Measure," the thought that is elaborated in Portia's celebrated plea to Shylock is repeated:

"No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one-half so good a grace,
As mercy does."

Mercy in Shakespeare's dramas is always made to stand forth in striking contrast with justice. About justice there is nothing attractive. It is an austere figure coldly meting out law, not benevolently pouring forth love, the higher law of life. The just man, the righteous man from a legal point of view, is continually asserting himself and his rights. His cry, like Shylock's, is: "It is mine, and I will have it." He is entitled according to the law to his one pound of flesh, and he takes pharisaical pride in exacting the bond, forcing the debtor to pay to the uttermost farthing. It is his right, the law authorizes him to claim his own. There is a higher principle than mere right or law in the world, the principle of love. Mercy is the name that has been given to this law of love. It is at work in the universe and in society. Were it not, life would not be worth living. There is no man but can take to himself the words,

"How would you be,
If He, who is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are?"

How much nobler is mercy than mere justice even in its outward symbols! The police with his club patrols the city in the interests of justice; the armies of the world learn the use of deadly weapons that justice may be maintained; powerful destructive monsters float on every sea in the name of justice. The Bible in the hands of the missionary brings words of love to the outcast and the unfortunate; the surgeons and nurses risking their lives in the interests of those who have been cruelly treated by the hands of war; the Salvation Army lass waiting at the prison gate with words of comfort for released prisoners or words of hope for those about to be incarcerated—are the angels of mercy. If justice alone held sway on earth, with her scales and sword, this would be a miserable world. Fortunately beneficent mercy broods over human society with healing in her wings.

Shakespeare was never more powerful than when he penned Portia's lines on mercy; and what an influence his words have had! For three hundred years they have been ennobling man. According to Shakespeare mercy comes of a willing heart; it is not "strained." It blesses the one who receives it, but, by ennobling the soul, making it more capable of doing the deeds of mercy it, to an infinitely greater degree, blesses the giver. It is the mightiest attribute in the mightiest.

As if to make the teaching of mercy to the world the crowning work of his life Shakespeare created Prospero. "The Tempest" was possibly his last great original creation. In it the hero is a man who has been cruelly, harshly used. Superhuman power he achieved. He is represented as a species of God-man. His enemies were all brought within his control. He could say

"At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies."

The lash and shackles they had earned, but Prospero rises to a god like height of charity. Any ruler could punish according to the sinner's deserts, but for him,

"The rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance; they being penitent
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further."

When Shakespeare's conception of mercy has been grasped by all having authority, when the law of love that he taught and retaught as the divine influence in the human heart has been recognized, when all men are conspicuously wearing "nobility's true badge," mercy—peace and goodwill will possess the earth.

OUR SATURDAY SERMON

For all the Athenians and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing.—Acts 17: 21.

It was their passion for "some new thing" that caused the Athenians to lend attention to the preaching of St. Paul, of whom the philosophers of the Stoics and the Epicureans spoke as a "blabber," whose doctrines "some mocked," and of which others said, "We will hear thee again of this matter."

The Athenians were schooled in the systems of philosophy which the best academic thought of the times approved, but they were not grounded in any belief beyond the touch of that ceaseless unrest which is an impeachment of any faith by which it is accompanied, and which is a fertile source of interest in things that are new.

But the Athenians had gone a long way farther in the quest for "some new thing" than they themselves realized until Paul, standing in the midst of Mars Hill, said: "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For, as I passed by and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, 'To the Unknown God.' Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him I declare unto you."

So, with all of their boasted learning, and their vaunted sufficiency as the world's lords and masters of reason, the Athenians were revealed to themselves by Paul as plunged in superstition and as given to the worship not only of gods fashioned with men's hands and wrought out of the minds of the creatures who paid them homage, but also as setting up an altar to a deity of whom they had not heard until Paul proclaimed him.

But now is heard the voice of those who stamp as superstition the Gospel preached by Paul to the Athenians of a God who made the world and all things therein; in whom we live and move and have our being; of whom we are the offspring; who hath power to raise the dead; who hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, and whose kingdom shall have no end.

As a substitute for this "firm foundation" there is offered to the world a religion of reason; a faith that will place no reliance in anything except the laws of nature; that will embody no supernatural element; that will not attempt to reconcile men to present ills by the promise of future compensations, and that will make God so imminent that no intermediary will be needed.

"Some new thing" is a characterization that the learned and much revered herald of these "rational" articles of belief would scarcely lay claim to. They are very old and quite familiar. They have found manifold utterance in "the process of the suns." The highly ethical pronunciamento of Dr. Charles Eliot would, we may believe, have sounded vastly less like "some new thing" than did the preachment of St. Paul on Mars Hill to the Athenians, although, in the midst of the world's present abounding reign of grace, we marvel much that the precepts of Jesus, with their remarkable adaptability to the spiritual needs of humanity and with their power to give right direction to the springs of human action, could ever have been new.

Certain it is that they will no more be new in the sense of being unknown, nor can they grow old in the sense of becoming outgrown. Neither will they make way for the substitution of a mere system of philosophy, however exalted and beautiful, for the power of saving grace which reaches forth and lifts up those whom reason would leave to perish. The religion of Jesus, with the supernatural power to which it lays a claim as authentic as any that can be established by mathematical demonstration, offers to the weak the succour that makes them strong; it supplies to the helpless a power for which they must look outside of themselves; it inspires the fainting heart with a sense of protection that banishes fear and temptation; it vouchsafes to the humblest of those who accept and practice it an assurance that nothing can shake or disturb in the life that now is and which makes definite the life that is to come.

In all of this it differs widely and distinctly from a plan of philosophy excellent so far as it reaches, but which makes its benefits and its power for regeneration wholly contingent upon capabilities of the highest and rarest order to conform to its requirements, and which thus circumscribes its action to a narrow scope that would leave outside the pale a vast multitude of God's most needy creatures.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

POISONOUS REPTILES

They Are Found Chiefly in Inaccessible Districts

While poisonous snakes are fairly abundant in some districts, they shun the cultivated areas. The rattlesnake prefers ledges in mountainous places, and is honest in giving warning of his presence. The copperhead frequents damp woods or rank, overgrown meadows. It is not quarrelsome and glides away when surprised if escape is not cut off.

The treatment of snake-bite is necessarily prompt and vigorous. The first thing to be done is to tie a ligature above the bite to prevent the circulation of the poisoned blood. The fang punctures must then be opened with a sharp knife and the lips applied to the wound, in order to as thoroughly drain it as possible. There is no danger if the mouth and lips are free from abrasions. Permanganate of potassium is applied as a wash, for this neutralizes the venom. The sportsman who goes into country known to be infested with dangerous reptiles should carry with him a tube of anti-venomous serum, a Pasteur product, which is injected hypodermically after the fang punctures have been washed with the permanganate, and the ligature has been removed. Even with these precautions the bite of a venomous snake had best be followed by an immediate recourse to an efficient doctor.

Though the measures of following the bite of a poisonous reptile may form what looks like a sinister paragraph, there is little need to worry about dangers lurking in the woods and thickets. From his personal collecting experiences, when he was looking for just such reptiles in what appeared to be the most favorable places for them, the writer has usually found poisonous snakes to be rare—except in almost inaccessible districts that are never visited by summer tourists.—Collier's.

PRICE OF BUTTER

From Farm and Dairy.

Of late the price of butter in Boston and in other of the big Eastern American cities has been over four cents in advance of Montreal quotations, and again, owing to this fact, Canadian cream is being exported to the States. The duty of five cents a gallon on cream approximates two cents a pound on butter.

In connection with the situation it is interesting to learn, as reported in the Ormstown Bulletin, that quite a few factories in that district of Quebec have made arrangements for the export of their cream on the basis of 23 cents a pound butter fat.

There is reported to be a great shortage of fodder crops in New York and Vermont States, and New York city milk dealers are short of milk and cream. Mr. David Vass, of Cassville, who has been in the Eastern townships making the arrangements with the factories that have sold their cream for export, stated that he expects to see 30 cent butter on the other side by the end of September.

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Mystery of the Hanoverian Coins.

An Episode in the career of James Frazer one time Chief of Police of London.

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN.

(This is one of a new series of stories concerning adventures that have occurred in the lives of the world's greatest detectives. Mr. Barton has gathered his material from real life, but in some cases imaginary names have been substituted for real ones, simply as a matter of justice to the innocent descendants of culprits mentioned in the narrative. Permissible liberties have been taken in the construction and arrangement of these fact stories, but in all that is essential they may be regarded as human documents of unusual interest and value.—The Editor.)

Some time in 1831, John Gold, a retired merchant residing at Preston Park, Brighton, England, who had been traveling abroad, was mysteriously effaced from the earth. He was on his way home and had taken a first-class carriage on the afternoon express train. But when the train reached its destination he was not in it. And no stops had been made at way stations! The railway guards said that he was last seen somewhere between the Merstham and Balcombe tunnels.

When the railway carriage arrived at Preston Park a man, who gave the name of Lamon, alighted and claimed that he had been the victim of a murderous assault. He said that there were two other persons in the carriage with him, one of whom was disguised as a countryman. They had talked together on indifferent subjects, but when the train entered the Merstham tunnel some one had fired a pistol. Lamon said that before he knew what was going on some one struck him on the head and he fell senseless on the floor. He averred that he remained in this condition until just before the train reached Preston, when he recovered consciousness only to find himself alone in the carriage.

His appearance bore out his story. He seemed dazed. He had lost his collar and tie, and from the appearance of his clothing these articles had been torn forcibly from his person. The ticket taker at Preston Park said that Lamon was very emphatic in his denunciation of the railway company. The agent also noticed that the end of a watch chain was hanging from the pocket of the injured man.

The police offered to accompany the man to his home where they might get his deposition. He said he resided at Croyden, and that it was not necessary for them to go with him. They insisted, however, and he went to a girl's boarding school at that place, managed by his relatives. He asked permission to go into the house to change his clothes. The police granted this request and while waiting for him strolled about the grounds. At the end of 15 minutes they regretted their generosity and went inside to seek their man. But he had gone.

GOLD'S BODY WAS FOUND NEAR THE BALCOMBE TUNNEL.

His relatives—who were very distant ones—had no knowledge of his movements. He told them he had to see a doctor at once and then had quickly, if somewhat discourteously, disappeared through a rear entrance of the school building.

The officers returned to Brighton very much chagrined. Here fresh and very startling information awaited them. It was announced that Mr. John Gold had been murdered. His body had been found on the ground near the line of the railway within the Balcombe tunnel. The physicians who examined the corpse said that death had been caused by a fracture of the skull. The theory was that he had been first shot by some one in the car, and that after a struggle had been thrown from the train, thus receiving the wound which caused his death.

James Frazer, the chief of police of London, gave the case his careful attention. He realised from experience that there were no problems more difficult to solve than these mysteries of railway carriages. But he was also aware that the merest trifle sometimes points the way to the guilty man. The finger of suspicion in this case pointed very strongly to Lamon, but up to the time Frazer was called in it was merely conjecture. His flight was against him, but innocent men have been known to act foolishly under trying circumstances.

Chief Frazer recalled that the guilty man in the famous Briggs murder had been captured from the fact that his photograph had been published in one of the London newspapers. Indeed, this case resembled the Gold murder in many of its leading aspects. Mr. Briggs was thrown from a railway carriage and killed. A hat that was left by the murderer contained a lining on which was printed the name of a well known English hatter. This clue led to the discovery and arrest of the culprit, although it involved a pursuit across the Atlantic ocean.

The chief felt that some similar clue might be found in the present instance. Accordingly he addressed himself to the work of a minute examination of the railway carriage. The first discovery exceeded his fondest expectations. Two Hanovarian coins were picked up from the floor of the vehicle. That was a good starting point. A detective was next sent to the neighborhood where Lamon resided. Every shop-keeper in that section was subjected to a severe cross-examination. Most of them knew the man, but said that he had not made any recent purchases. A young clerk in a grocery store, however, said that he had talked with Lamon only two days before.

"What did he want?" asked the detective.

"He came here and bought a quantity of tinned goods," was the reply.

"How did he pay for them?"

"In gold."

"How do you remember this?"

"Because it is so unusual, sir. After he had finished selecting his goods, he handed me two Hanoverian coins, saying with a laugh that he didn't suppose we would object to that sort of money. We didn't. We took them for gold and he was given 13s. 6d. in change."

The toils were now closing in around Lamon. When Mr. Gold was discovered dead it was found that his watch had disappeared, together with about $200 in money which he had collected in London that morning as dividends on some stock he owned. Several persons were found who were willing to swear that they had seen the watch in Lamon's possession. The man was very bold, for he left a perfect trail of gold along the shops where he had spent the money. But when the police came to the grocery store, it was as though they had reached the end of a blind alley. No further trace of the fellow or his money could be obtained.

It has been said that there is no place in the world where a man can lose his identity more thoroughly than in the city of London. Lamon had disappeared as completely as though he had been swallowed up by the earth. Not only the city police, but also the detectives from Scotland Yard, were given orders to look out for Lamon. Day after day went by and they had only their labor for their pains. A photograph of Lamon was now published in one of the daily newspapers with the announcement that he was wanted by the police. With this was given a brief account of the murder of Gold.

At this time there lived in a Stepney lodging an engraver of the name of Park. He was quiet and retiring in his manner and seemed to have no desire to mix with the other lodgers. He was greatly esteemed by his landlady, not only because he was regular in his habits, but also (more important) because he was regular in payment for his lodgings. He kept his blinds down constantly, saying quite frankly that he wished to escape observation and also that rest and quiet were necessary for his work.

On the morning the newspaper picture of Lamon was published the Stepney landlady passed it over to her lodger and asked him if he did not think it was a remarkable case. He looked at the picture intently and also read the summarised account before he replied:

"No; I don't think there's anything wonderful about it."

"Goodness gracious, Mr. Park," she protested, with the volubility of her class. "I think it's the most romantic thing I ever heard of in all my born days."

The engraver merely smiled.

"You needn't laugh," she cried; "just imagine a murderer being at large in the streets of London!"

"There are many of them," he commented dryly.

"Yes, but we may be passing this Lamon on the street for all we know."

"Quite likely."

"And you don't think it's wonderful!"

He shook his head.

"Only a clever criminal getting the best of the stupid police."

"They say murder will out," remarked the landlady sagely.

"Don't you believe it," retorted the engraver. "That's one of those copy book maxims that sounds well, but it won't bear the test."

"But this fellow—this Lamon—will be caught sooner or later?"

"Why?"

"Well, everybody will be on the lookout for him after this publication."

The lodger threw his napkin aside with a gesture of dissent.

"He'll be safer now than ever," he said; "he'll be on his guard."

"You talk as if you knew him."

"I do," he confided to her, "and from my knowledge of the man he will not let the police get him."

That afternoon the landlady met a friend who was a policeman, and repeated the conversation she had had with her lodger at the breakfast table. The policeman in turn reported it to his official superior, and before twenty-four hours had elapsed Mr. Park, engraver, was being shadowed by one of Mr. James Fraser's plain clothes men. But he stood the test well. He came and went silently but there was nothing in his daily life that did not seem to stand the severest scrutiny.

The secretive lodger had a work bench in his room, supplied with tools, and at times he could be seen at work with a green shade pulled down over his eyes. Once or twice the man who was shadowing him lost the trail, but as the shadowed one promptly reappeared no great significance was attached to these temporary lapses.

One day Chief Fraser learned that a stranger had been seen in the vicinity of Preston Park, Brighton, making inquiries concerning the Gold murder. The unknown person asked all sorts of questions and was particularly anxious to know the whereabouts of the ladies who kept the girls' boarding school near Croyden. This, it will be recalled, was the place where Lamon had gone directly after leaving the train, and whence, on the plea of changing his clothes, he had made his escape. It so happened that the school was closed for the short holiday. The pupils were at their homes and the ladies in charge were spending a few days in London.

There was great consternation the following day when it was learned that someone had entered the school. The thief had broken open a side window, and after ransacking a number of rooms had escaped by the rear door. Drawers had been pulled out of their places and the contents thrown about the floor. But the amazing feature of it all was the fact that nothing had been stolen. At least, that was the assertion of the ladies, and they were in a position to know what they were talking about. They were maiden ladies and very precise and systematic in their habits. They had a little book which contained a list of every article in the house. This included not only the furniture but also every ornament, every book and every particular article of wearing apparel. They made a careful survey of the establishment and found everything intact. Thus, but for the fright and the inconvenience of having their property disarranged, no damage had been done.

The police were at their wits' ends. The murder was bad enough, but this useless housebreaking—to their official minds—seemed worse. It was suggestive of the supernatural. It got on their nerves. But Chief Fraser, in his London office, was thinking and preparing to act. The day after the second scare at Croyden he sent for a trusted officer and gave him minute instructions.

That morning a plain clothes man called at the Stepney lodgings and asked for Mr. Park.

"I'm sorry," said the loquacious lady, "but he's gone to town."

"Then I'll wait."

The landlady was delighted—and more talkative than usual. She gave the visitor many details concerning the daily life of Mr. Park. She was especially impressive concerning the workshop of her lodger and even consented to let the visitor take a peep into the sanctum sanctorum.

"Oh," he murmured with a satisfaction that could not be concealed, "it's just as I thought."

This emboldened the landlady.

"Might I ask why you wanted to see Mr. Park?"

"Certainly," retorted the obliging caller, "I want him to tell me what he knows about the murder of Mr. Gold."

At this point in the conversation Mr. Park came into the house.

"My friend," said the officer, without any ceremony, "I want you to help me to arrest the murderer of John Gold."

The lodger smiled, showing a set of shining teeth.

"My dear sir," he replied, "your request is preposterous!"

"Not so much as you think," laughed the officer. "Let me see the backs of your hands." Mr. Park thrust his hands out unthinkingly, and the next moment a pair of handcuffs had been slipped on his unresisting wrists.

Mr. Lamon, alias Mr. Park, alias many other names, had come to the end of his string. Some contend that it was caused by his second foolish visit to the Croyden house whence he went to secure some of the booty he had concealed on his first call. Others—and they are in the majority—lay it to his imprudence in leaving the two Hanoverian coins on the floor of the railway carriage.

SHE GAVE THE WRONG NAME

How "Susan Westford, Spinster," Narrowly Escaped Losing Her Eyeglasses at the Optician's.

A woman who has her mild little eccentricities always designates herself "Susan Westford, spinster." It has grown to be a habit with her, and she says it automatically whenever she has occasion to give her name, whether to a pupil, a casual acquaintance or a shopkeeper.

Recently she broke her eyeglasses, and took them to an optician for repair. She gave directions to the clerk and promised to call for them at the end of the week.

"Name, please," said the clerk.

"Susan Westford, spinster," said the lady, and the clerk made the entry in his book.

When Miss Westford called another clerk was on duty. A search was made, but no glasses were awaiting any one of her name.

"But they must be here. I was told two days ago they would be ready. Won't you please look again? I need them badly."

The clerk searched in vain. "Nothing for Westford," said he, and the lady moved toward the door sorely vexed in spirit.

Not until she was well on her way down the block did it occur to her that the clerk might possibly have misunderstood. She hastened back. "Would you mind looking through the S's, is there by any chance a pair of glasses for Spinster?"

"Certainly, madam; here it is—'Susan W. Spinster.' You gave the wrong name by accident. Three dollars, please. Thanks. Good afternoon."

Roman Bricks.

When the preparations for rebuilding the Campanile in Venice were undertaken the archaeologists were afforded an opportunity to make some interesting studies of the bricks.

It was found that they had been used in arches, fortifications, the tops of walls and in other ways before they were built into the Campanile, and that they were not Venetian but Roman bricks.

These ancient bricks were made in slices, for in many the layers could be seen undisturbed. It is said that bricks made this way can bear a greater weight than modern bricks.

The bricks examined were of the first century. One of them bore the imprint of a horseshoe, which may prove that Romans used a horseshoe like ours although it is generally believed that their horseshoes were strapped on, not nailed.—Harper's Weekly.

Dust Disease.

Now that we have the "typhoid fly" and the "malarial mosquito," science may soon order that not a few of those who experience a blue Monday be described as sufferers from "dust depression." Good physicians assert that much of the mental and physical languor which many people of indoor life report on Monday is due to their tremendous intake of dust on the day before. This powder is full of physical peril. It may actually have those disease germs which set up systematic disturbances, the effects of which we commonly call colds; it may, by merely piling in dirt and filth, so irritate the mucous membrane as to do other serious harm. It is a troublemaker in any form.—Boston Herald.

Always Excuses.

Col. Edward H. R. Green, discussing business success at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, said:

"The man who succeeds is the man who does what he sets out to do—not the man who makes excuses.

"Excuses are cheap and easy, but success is hard and rare. Excuses, though, we meet everywhere. Only yesterday, in a downtown restaurant, they gave me a tough chicken.

"'Waiter,' I said, 'this chicken is old.'

"'Yes, sir,' said the waiter. 'A very healthy bird, sir. Otherwise, of course, it couldn't have lived to such a great age.'"

The Oriental Way.

In China when the subscriber rings up exchange the operator may be expected to ask:

"What number does the honorable son of the moon and stars desire?"

"Hoki, two-three."

Silence. Then the exchange resumes.

"Will the honorable person graciously forgive the inadequacy of the insignificant service and permit this humbled slave of the wire to inform him that the never-to-be-sufficiently-esteemed line is busy?"

Baby Nearly Died with Itching Rash

Mrs. M. C. Maitland, of Jasper, Ont., tells in the following letter of her child's remarkable cure by the Cuticura Remedies:

"When my boy was about three months old his head broke out with a rash which scaly Milky and ran a watery fluid. We tried everything we could but he got worse till the rash spread to his arms, legs and then to his entire body. His got so bad that he came near dying. The rash would itch so that he would scratch till the blood ran and a thin yellowish substance would ooze all over his pillow in the morning. I had to put mittens on his hands to prevent him tearing his skin. He was almost a skeleton and his little hands were like claws.

"He was bad about eight months when we tried Cuticura Remedies. I had not been able to lay him down in his cradle in the daytime for a long while. I washed him with Cuticura Soap and put on one application of Cuticura Ointment and he was so soothed that he could sleep. You don't know how glad I was he felt better. In all I took one box of Cuticura Ointment and nearly nine cake of Cuticura Soap to cure him. I think our boy would have died but for the Cuticura Remedies and I shall always remain a firm friend of them. He was cured more than twenty years ago and there has been no return of the trouble."

No more convincing proof of the efficacy and economy of the Cuticura Remedies could be given. As in this instance a single cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient, field throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. SORROWS OF A CROWN

Tragedies in the Life of the Dowager Queen of Portugal

The late Queen Maria Pia, the Dowager Queen of Portugal and grandmother of King Manuel, was the third child and second daughter of Victor Emmanuel II., King of Sardinia, afterwards King of United Italy. She spent her early girlhood under the tender care of her mother, Queen Adelaide of Sardinia, in Piedmont. One night in 1862, when she was only fifteen, she was taken to the opera, and there the Portuguese Minister marked her out as his sovereign's future bride. A few months later she was married to King Luis, a marriage of affection entirely.

After her son's accession the Queen-Dowager spent much time at her beautiful castle on the coast of Portugal. She was an excellent shot, and one of her favorite amusements was to shoot at glass bottles floating in the sea. Queen Maria Pia was a great lover of music and an artist of some ability, while she was famous for her exquisite taste in dress and her witty conversation.

The Queen was at the head of innumerable beneficent institutions, which she directed in person, attending to the minutest detail. This royal lady was for forty years known as the "Angel of Charity."

The first great tragedy of her life was the assassination of her brother, King Humbert of Italy, in July, 1900, by an Anarchist.

Then on that fatal day in February, 1908, was committed the terrible crime which robbed her and Queen Amelia of King Carlos and the young Crown Prince Louis at one fell blow. Queen Maria Pia was awaiting their return to the palace, and her first intimation of the awful catastrophe was when, by a lamentable oversight, the bullet-riddled bodies of the King and Crown Prince were borne into her presence. When the Dowager Queen saw her son's body she threw herself upon it, kissing the face, hands and breast of the dead man, piteously imploring him to speak to her. Her constitution never recovered from this shock, and it is stated that she was always haunted with the belief that the blood from her murdered son still stained her hands.

Although begged by those who loved her to leave the people who had seen those nearest and dearest to her slaughtered in the streets, she stayed on to help her youthful grandson Manuel in his onerous task. When the revolution broke out, and the House of Braganza was banished by the Portuguese people, Queen Maria Pia showed the spirit of her house by slowly driving out of the palace gates. The very revolutionaries doffed their hats in silent salute to the proud queen.

After the revolution Queen Maria Pia accepted the hospitality of the Italian Court. In addition to a monthly allowance of $2,220 made by the Portuguese Constituent Assembly, King Victor gave her $50,000 a year.

WITH THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN OUTLAWS

Ten years ago I made a trip from Fort Macleod in Canada, southward to the City of Mexico. Following the trend of the Rocky Mountains the route was interesting as an exercise in the art of path finding, for the splendour of its mountain and desert scenery, and because of the curious and attractive breeds of people, Blackfoot, Navajo, Apache, Mormons, cowboys sheepmen, Mexican frontiersmen, and especially the Rocky Mountain outlaws along the line of march. Large tracts of country were free from any signs of water, at times the crossing of rivers, and the scaling of large cliffs was very exciting, and on one stretch of some 700 miles I doubt if I could have got through at all, but for the help of the outlaws, whose private trail is not shown on the maps. Travelling with them at times, and camping at some of their strongholds, I learned a good deal about their business of robbery-under-arms, and although none of them ever claimed to be outlaws, they would often talk quite freely about "the Robbers." In the natural course of events most of my friends of that time have been shot or hanged, and with the passage of ten years my information as to their methods must be out of date, but still a tang of human interest remains, and it may be worth while to tell the story of a few encounters. Forgive me if the episodes are tame. Readers who have fed on lurid fiction will find mere excitements in any penny novelette than I can place before them. Truth is indeed stranger than fiction, but that is only because truth has become so scarce.

BUFFALO CREEK GANG

South of Yellowstone Park I rode down into the valley known as Jackson's Hole, and came to a small river in flood which looked much too ugly to cross in the dark. At that time for a short distance I had the company of a strayed hairdresser. He swam very well; I could not swim at all. He would have crossed Buffalo Creek, but I preferred to wait for daylight, so we turned up the bank, and finding a ranche asked leave to make camp for the night. There were three men at the cabin, who would have passed anywhere for Boers or Mormons, slovenly, uncouth, the last people in the world I should have taken for outlaws, who are as a rule the very pick of the cowboys, gallant and courteous. Six weeks ago these men had shot the last visitor, the Sheriff, and we met with a surly reception. After the barber had politely cut their hair they became more friendly, and in the morning their pilotage across Buffalo Creek without doubt saved both of us from drowning. Such was my encounter with the Buffalo Creek gang, which afterwards held up the bank at Cody City, Wyoming, and shot the cashier. You may remember the newspaper sensation, for the founder of the city, Colonel Cody, the great Buffalo Bill, was reported—falsely I think—as leading a posse of seventy men alleged to be mostly British lords—who failed to catch the robbers.

After crossing the Gros Ventre range to the splendid hunters' paradise at the head of Green River, I lay four days stormbound at the Dog Ranche. This was the hunting camp of Mr. Billy Wells, who supplied guides and equipment to rich sportsmen. These guides were officially forest rangers serving the State to enforce the game laws, the numerous outlaws of the district were wastefully slaughtering elk merely for the eye teeth of these great deer, which were worn as watch charms by members of the Elk Secret Society. Hence there was war between the forest rangers on the one side, and the outlaws on the other, and the rangers told me of very exciting adventures. One afternoon as we sat by the big hearth, and the storm roared round the shaking walls, the door at the far end of the room flew open, and a stranger stood there asking us to tell him the trail to Jackson's Hole. The water streamed from his black city clothes, his toes stuck out through his broken town shoes, his head was bare, his face was drawn and ghastly with fatigue. When we came to the door we found that he held by the rein a superb black horse, with no saddle. He would stay neither for food nor shelter, but given his trail directions rode off into the dusk to swim Green River, then traverse a high mountain pass by night. He was an outlaw with a stolen thoroughbred, seeking shelter with the Buffalo Creek gang of robbers.

When the weather cleared Billy Wells set off with a small pack train to cross that range, to be married, and to bring home his bride—or failing that a keg of whisky for his hunters. With all the outlaws in the country at feud with him, that was a daring ride, but afterwards he sent me photographs of his pretty wife and himself, and a letter to say that he got home safe with the lady, and the whisky too, so that the boys were able to drink to the health of bride and bridegroom.

THE PAINTED DESERT

My next meeting with outlaws was at Brown's Park, where I camped one night at a ranche, and on going to the house to buy potatoes found that the people were anxious to be rid of my company. While I was stowing my potatoes a string of horsemen came filing down a slope of broken rock, and from my tent an hour later I saw them depart by the same uncomfortable trail. They were robbers holding a herd of stolen cattle in a hidden pasture among the chasms beyond Red Creek. That was an awful country of scarlet mountains with overhanging combs, like breakers on a coast, but the waves were two thousand feet high, where I had a bad time threading the labyrinth with my horses.

Far to the southward in Arizona I crossed the Navajo desert, and came one day to the Painted Desert, a valley 2,000 feet deep, 50 miles wide, of naked sand. This sand has the strange quality of refracting prismetic light, and its belts, looking sunward, blaze with rainbow colours—ruby, violet, flame and orange. The blinding glory and awful splendour of that landscape made the day's journey such as to render the soul weary as well as the body, and when I gained the pines on the hills beyond it was with immense relief that I came to the spring at Clay Flat. Here I found three cowboys in camp, and after supper we sat round the fire for our evening smoke. Talk ran on the Preston affair, which at that time had roused considerable feeling among the cattle men. Here is the story.

£400 REWARD

Three members of the Robbers' Roost gang of outlaws held up a train in southern Arizona, and were annoyed to find that the treasure car was not only armoured, but full of men with rifles. One robber was killed, one got away wounded, and the third was captured and taken to gaol at Phoenix. From thence he escaped, killing a warder and one citizen, robbed the livery stable, and got away with a fine horse into the desert. A reward of two thousand dollars was offered for him dead or alive.

One afternoon a travel worn cowpuncher stopped for supper with Mr. Preston, a trader among Navajo Indians, at Willow Spring, east of the Painted Desert. Mr. Preston, sitting opposite to his guest at supper, recognised that two years ago they two had been riding for the same owners on roundup. And on the wall above the guest's head was the notice describing this very man as wanted—"2,000 dollars, dead or alive." Mr. Preston was bound in honour to entertain his guest, and to ask no questions, but when he had given the man three hours' grace he set out in pursuit with a dozen Navajo trackers. After tracking 36 miles they found the outlaw lying fast asleep on the rim rock of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. They took his horse, disarmed him, woke him up, took him to civilisation, saw him hanged, and got the £400 reward. Preston had betrayed a comrade to death, and taken cash for blood. From that time onward not only was he wanted by the Robbers' Roost gang, but he was also liable to be shot on the range by any cowboy he met—except at such times as he was a guest. That he stayed in that country seemed to me a miracle of courage.

A NARROW ESCAPE

And while we sat by that fire Preston drove in out of the starlight to spend the night in our camp. Drawing up his waggon a hundred yards from the fire he called to us, the call giving him right to hospitality. The Loys walked out to help him unharness his team, and one of them climbed on the waggon to find a jar of whisky. At that moment, keen to meet this man, I walked up to him, and extending my hand said, "Mr. Preston, I think?"

In asking that question—a personal question—I had committed a breach of good manners. His instant conclusion was that some member of the Robbers' Roost gang sought by the question to identify, before killing him. My outstretched hand presumably carried a revolver.

With a loud snarl Preston whipped his revolver straight at my head. But before his trigger could fall, the cowboy on the waggon box jumped, his heels catching Preston's neck and felling him. "You —— fool," said the cowboy. "He ain't heeled!"

The cowpunchers having seen me by starlight, knew that I carried no weapon, that I was therefore a non-combatant with the immunity of a parson or woman. As such he saved my life.

THE ROBBERS' ROOST

By the time I reached Arizona I had met a great many outlaws, travelled and camped with them, gratefully accepted their lucid trail directions, and learned to prefer their company to that of any other men on the range. Without approving their vocation—which is mean, and knowing them to be the most formidable and dangerous felons in the modern world, I could not regard these Rocky Mountain outlaws as mere criminals. Chivalrous to women, honourable in the common affairs of life, superb as fighters and horsemen, they seemed to me to be rather cavaliers gone wrong. I wanted to meet all the four hundred men in that dire trade, and was especially anxious to penetrate to the central stronghold, the Robbers' Roost in Utah. So at Flagstaff, Arizona, I spent five days making friends with a member of the central gang, who worked as a stable man to watch the country as a spy from headquarters.

One-eyed Riley was a tall, gaunt, middle-aged humorist, capital company, and very kind to me. And when on the fifth day I begged for trail directions to Robbers' Roost he seemed quite eager to help.

"Wall, sonny," said he, leading me to the stable door. "You turn to the right, and take the second to the right, and keep straight on to Porter's. Then you bear to the right, and just keep butting along round the San Francisco Peaks, and across Painted Desert till you come to Old Man Brown's. And you jest ask him—if he's to home."

Old Man Brown being dead I turned indignantly upon Riley, who favoured me with a wink from his surviving eye. "You can't miss it," said he.

I did not find my way to Robbers' Roost.

GRAY HAIR WILL MAKE YOU LOOK OLD
Use Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur and Your Gray Hair Will Quickly Vanish.
Gray hair is a mark of age, and nothing that can be said as to its beauty will effect the disadvantages of this mark of age set upon your brow.
Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy darkens the hair and restores it to its youthful beauty. Our grandmothers and their grandmothers before them used sage and sulphur for darkening their hair. Nothing has ever been found more effective for this purpose than these two time-honored remedies, but Wyeth, a modern chemist, has combined the two with other ingredients which makes a delightful dressing for the hair, and which not only removes every trace of dandruff but promotes the growth of the hair. It also stops the hair from falling out and makes it beautiful.
All druggists are authorised to refund the money if it fails to do exactly as represented.
This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

LAID UP FIVE YEARS
Until Half a Bottle of Father Morrisey's Liniment Cured His Shoulder.
Mr. Jos. J. Roy, a prominent tinsmith of Bathurst, N.B., july 16, 1909:
"I cannot let this opportunity pass without letting you know what benefit I received from your Liniment. For five years I had a sore shoulder, which prevented me from working or from sleeping at night. I had tried everything possible and still could find no relief, until I was advised to try a bottle of your liniment, which I purchased without delay. I only used one half of the bottle when I was completely cured, and now I feel as if I never had a sore shoulder. I would advise anyone suffering from Rheumatic pains to give your liniment a trial, for I cannot praise it too highly."
A liniment that will do that is the liniment you want. It is equally good for sore throat or chest, backache, toothache, ear ache, sprains, sore muscles, cuts, bruises, burns, frost-bites, chapped hands or chilblains. Rub it in, and the pain comes out. 25c per bottle at your dealer's, or from Father Morrisey Medicine Co., L'td, Montreal, Que.
Sold and guaranteed in Peterborough by McDermid & Jury.

POPE'S CONDITION NOT IMPROVED

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, August 12.—The improvement in the condition of Pope Pius yesterday was not so great as had been hoped for. However, his physicians appeared gratified that their patient was no worse.

Dr. Petacci and Professor Marchisfava arrived at the Vatican at 6.50 o'clock yesterday morning and remained with the Pontiff until 8.10 o'clock. They received a detailed report from Dr. Amici, who had been in the chamber throughout the night and made a chart of the varying symtoms. After a talk with Dr. Amici the other physicians made a thorough examination of His Holiness and seemed satisfied that he had not failed during the night though they were seemingly disappointed that there had not been a marked change for the better.

HAD A GOOD REST

At one o'clock yesterday morning, when he fell asleep, the Pope had the best rest that he has had for several nights. Dr. Amici, watching at the bedside, noted that the breathing was nearer normal than at any time since the illness began. In the early hours of the day the temperature dropped many degrees and this had a beneficial effect upon the patient.

Those in attendance find difficulty in building up the strength of the Pontiff, because of his distate for food, even in liquid form.

WHAT THE SISTERS SAY

The Associated Press had an interview with Anna and Maria, the sisters of the Pope, as they left the Vatican on Thursday evening. Both of them said their brother was much better, adding that if this were not so they would be at his bedside.

"He is an old man," continued one of the sisters in her simple Venetian manner, "but he is stronger than people believe. All of our family have lived to ripe old ages."

The sisters said they had never seen such an avalanche of telegrams as had arrived at the Vatican from all parts of the world, inquiring about the health of His Holiness.

ROLLER RINK OPENS CIVIC HOLIDAY

The Brock street Roller Rink, under the management of R. E. Pitcher, will open for the season on Monday—Civic Holiday. The floor is in first-class condition. The skates have all been overhauled and everything is in good shape for the convenience and comfort of the skaters. If you wish to spend the holiday pleasantly take in the Roller Rink.

OLD BOYS' REUNION

LONDON, ONT., AUG. 12.—Wednesday was another big one for the Old Boy visitors. A regatta was held down the river, which was attended by several thousand people. The program was an exceptionally fine one and was carried out without a hitch. The police have toned down half a dozen sideshows, under the penalty of closing them altogether if the objectionable features were not eliminated. Judge Talbot Macbeth last night struck and knocked down a man who attempted to tickle the face of his wife with a tickler. The police say the crowd has been overly free, and that a stop will have to be put to much of the goings on, especially in regard to the jostling of ladies on the streets.

The International Association of London Old Boys met this morning and elected the following officers: Lt.-Col. H. R. Abbott, London, hon. president; R. A. Carrothers, London, hon. vice-president; Robert Faunt, Chicago, president; S. A. Caldwell, Winnipeg, vice-president; James O. Weldon, London, secretary; Frank Chittick, Winnipeg, treasurer. It was unanimously decided to hold the next re-union in 1914.

STRUCK VEHICLE

Considerable excitement prevailed for a few minutes on Water street last evening about 5 o'clock, when a citizen's automobile, in passing, struck the side of a vehicle which was standing outside Messrs. Ruths' real estate office. The horse immediately took fright and bolted. It had only covered a few yards, however, when the buggy, drawn too close to the sidewalk, crashed into a telegraph post. Freed of its burden, the horse dashed on, falling on the sidewalk outside the Bank of Montreal. Up again, the excited animal continued its mad career, but was soon caught and quieted.

The vehicle, which belonged to Mr. Ruth, was very badly damaged, both shafts having been broken off.

The fore part of the auto, too, was slightly damaged.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Planford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

MR. BURNHAM'S BURROWING TACTICS CONSIDERED

"The moping Review doth to the moon complain" that only the public acts of a public man are open to public criticism. Agreed. The whole argument hinges on the meaning of the words, "public acts."

When a man kisses his own wife he is within his rights, and his conduct should not be the subject of special remarks. But when he kisses somebody else's wife it becomes a question of public morals. In short, there are private clandestine acts which become matters of public significance because they are against the general rules of the game.

When a man does underground work, plants bombs in his neighbour's cellar, behaves himself like a dynamiter in the dark, and expects to reap the benefit of these secret activities, he must expect to be checked up if he is found out. As the Bible says: "The sin that is done in secret shall be proclaimed on the housetops."

J. H. Burnham has been tunnelling for some time now. As his avowed object is to blow up the Laurier government, and the Liberal candidate in this riding, we have thought it advisable to head off his operations with a frank statement of his aims and methods and Bourassa alliances. An evil doer hateth the light, and as Mr. Burnham is not supposed to be an evil doer, he should welcome a chance to come out into the open and give his side of the case.

J. R. Stratton has been the target of many Conservative campaigns, where religion was dragged in for political purposes—equal rights, Margaret L. Shepherd, Protestant horse, and other too well remembered to need mentioning. He has survived them all, because the good sense of West Peterborough electors has refused to be distracted by these irrelevant issues. He will win again, because he has a good cause, a good government, and a good record of twenty-five years' faithful service behind him.

But he will have to fight the race and creed cry just the same. It is because Burnham is burrowing that we have had to throw the X rays on him. We know now what he has in his black bag.

One of his dark lantern arguments is that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is not to be trusted, because he is a French Canadian and a Roman Catholic. Brushing aside the inconsistency of this argument with Canadian history, fair debate and mutual tolerance, it is still a bad play. It would be just as sensible to urge it against J. R. Stratton that he is of north of Ireland descent and a Methodist?

Then there is our old acquaintance, "Ne Temere." A great many people are talking about "Ne Temere" who don't know the meaning of the words. "Ne Temere" goes out walking with J. H. Burnham every night after dark, but is never seen in his company in the daylight. The fact is, J. H. Burnham is a little ashamed of "Ne Temere" ever since the Anglican Synod in Toronto said it was no reason why the head of any church should not issue instructions to its own members on points of doctrine and practice. Only the other day Sir Allan Aylesworth knocked the last leg from under poor old Ne Temere when he showed that the solemnization of marriage was a provincial matter and that consequently Ne Temere was Sir James Whitney's concern and not Sir Wilfrid Laurier's. Ne Temere is badly battered, but still in the ring.

Another old friend was "hommage." It bore some relation to "bilingual schools," the idea being that J. H. Burnham's friends are not in favour of bilingual schools because Ontario might learn French well enough to understand the double game politicians play in Ontario and Quebec. If Ontario could read French as well as they can English, Ontario would know just what Bourassa and Monk and others of Mr. Burnham's allies were saying in Quebec. And that would never do. "Hommage" means simply "respects," "paying one's respects." It has no constitutional significance. When Rev. Dr. Clifford visited Peterborough and laid a corner stone, the Baptists and other good citizens turned out and did "hommage," paid their respects to him. But Mr. Burnham, who gets his French from Henri Bourassa, may say differently.

THE WEST IS SOLID FOR RECIPROCITY

Mr. Alex. Reid, city, has received a letter from his son, James, in Banff, Alberta, which says that Reciprocity is the top-liner, in high favour in the West, and that all the ridings in the vicinity will certainly return Government supporters.

Two Killed As Result Of Joke

Special to The Examiner.

DETROIT, MICH., AUG. 12—On account of a joke, Frank J. Cooke, thirty-five, and Daniel Vreeland, aged thirty, both special detectives on the Lake Shore railroad, were killed last night, as a result of a joke by Watchman Burnett, aged thirty-eight, special officer Michigan Central. The victims hid in the yards where Burnett was looking for thieves and sprang out on him in fun. Burnett shot twice, thinking them car thieves. Burnett collapsed when it was found he had killed his best friends.

Funeral Of Late John W. Gates

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, FRANCE, AUG. 12.— The funeral of the late John W. Gates, the American millionaire, was held to-day at the Inter-denominational church, before taking the body on board a liner at Cherbourg Tuesday for New York for burial. It was attended by more than two hundred friends from all parts of the States.

Biggest Excursion Of The Year

The Bridgenorth and Lake Simcoe excursion, run under the auspices of the church at Chemong Village, is set for September 7th, and it promises to be a hummer. This beautiful trip is receiving a large patronage every year, and with the moonlight trip up Lake Simcoe, the event should be well attended by Peterborough citizens, as well as those living near Bridgenorth and the village. Watch the big bills for further particulars and keep this date open.

WORDS WITH THE RIGHT RING

"It is now twenty years since I assumed the leadership of the Liberal party. When my friends chose me to be their standard-bearer, I pledge to myself that I would give to the task the whole of my life, my soul, and my body, and that I have done. My days cannot be very long now, but whether they are long or short, I shall ever treasure as the most holy thing in my life the confidence which has been placed in me by men who were not of my kith and kin. I have endeavoured to maintain the principle that the Liberal party is broad enough, that Liberal principles are large enough, to give an equal share of justice and liberality to all men, no matter what may be their race or religion. This is the feeling that has animated me, and this is the feeling that shall animate me to the end. If I am to be remembered after I have gone to my grave, I would rather it should be because my name has been attached to the great work of advancing the unification of the races forming the Canadian nation. When my life comes to the end, if my eyes close upon a Canada more united than I found it twenty years ago, when I assumed the leadership of the Liberal party, I shall not have lived in vain, and I shall die in peace."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier at Strathroy.

FOUR NEW FIRE ALARM BOXES TO BE INSTALLED

A New Box Has Been Placed in the West Ward and is Now Ready for Operation---How to Send in an Alarm of Fire

A new fire alarm signal box has been installed for the convenience of the residents of the West Ward. The box is placed on the electric pole at the corner of Gilmour and St. Joseph streets. The residents in that section of the city sent a largely signed petition to the Fire, Water and Light Committee in the early part of the year, requesting that fire alarm boxes be placed in the West Ward.

A short time ago the Brinton Carpet Company installed what is known as a factory alarm box in the place of box No.12, and No. 12 box was put out in the West Ward, but its number will be changed to 34 as soon as the attachments arrive from Montreal. The box is now in operation and can be used by the citizens in case of fire.

Chief Howard has asked the Examiner to again explain how to send in an alarm, as there are so many people who would not know how to operate these street boxes if their house did get on fire.

To send an alarm of fire, break the glass in the little door, then turn the key in the big door, open big door and leave it wide open; then pull down the hook once and let go.

There is an extra fire alarm box kept at the fire station, which is used when repairs are being made, and citizens are invited to call at the fire station at any time, and the firemen will be pleased to explain, and demonstrate how these boxes are operated.

It is the intention of the Fire, Water and Light Committee to have four more fire alarm boxes installed in the city as soon as Ald. Morgan and Chief Howard return from the Fire Chiefs' Convention at Milwaukee. The object of delaying the purchase of these additional boxes is to give the alderman and the Chief an opportunity to see all the different makes and latest designs of fire alarm boxes before recommending the purchase of the new ones.

A citizen suggests that a small card or something of the nature be placed in a convenient place on the boxes, with instructions as to how to operate the boxes printed in good readable type.

Reciprocity Agreement Benefits Other Classes Besides Farmers

Day after day the swing of the pendulum of public sentiment towards tariff relief gathers momentum. Day after day the wires tell their story of acquisitions to the ranks of progressive Canadians who support reciprocity.

Take the past two days for instance.

At Halifax, Mr. Howard Smith, head of N. & M. Smith, Limited, the largest exporters of dried fish in the world, declared that reciprocity meant a new era of prosperity for Canada. Nova Scotia would come into her own, and her fishing fleet be doubled in from three to five years. Although hitherto a Conservative, Mr. Smith is supporting Laurier and larger markets.

At Guelph, Mr. Henry Arkell, one of the largest breeders of sheep in Canada, said: "Remove the tariff against Canadian sheep and watch the Canadian sheep industry grow. I have voted Conservative for years, but I am for the reciprocity trade agreement."

At Napanee, Mr. Charles Anderson, a prominent Conservative farmer, stated that reciprocity was of far more importance to Canadian farmers than abject party allegiance. He declared he was not a traitor to his party, but that the party was traitor to the old policy for which Sir John Macdonald and all other Conservative leaders had stood up to their time it became possible through the Fielding-Taft agreement.

At Brockville, Mr. John Gill, President and General Manager of one of the large hardware and edge-tool manufactories in Eastern Ontario, said that the reciprocity agreement "is purely a sound business one, and Canadians will do well to avail themselves of its advantages altogether apart from politics. I am glad, as a manufacturer, to have this opportunity of heartily approving of the sound business-like agreement secured by Mr. Fielding."

At Brockville, also, Mr. Wm. C. MacLaren, General Manager of Halls, Limited, manufacturers of gloves, suspenders, etc., said: "I have given the matter of this agreement a great deal of thought, and I have found nothing in it except benefit to the people of Canada. I cannot understand how manufacturers can take any other position. This agreement in no sense injures any of us, and cannot fail to be a big thing to the farmers and artisans. I desire to put myself on record as a manufacturer in complete accord with the reciprocity agreement, and am glad indeed that the farmers are to have this opportunity to secure better returns for their labours."

MR. C. M. BLEWETT HONOURED ON EVE OF HIS DEPARTURE WEST

A tribute to the popularity of Mr. C. M. Blewett, who, for the past four years, has been connected with the Peterborough Hardware Company, and who is leaving for Regina, on Tuesday, was paid him last evening, when about thirty of his friends assembled at the home of Mr. F. A. Jacobi, London street, to do honour to the departing guest. The assemblage was composed principally of members of the Knights of Pythias, the rest being the immediate friends of Mr. Blewett.

An address testifying to the esteem in which the young man is held and accompanied by the presentation of a travelling bag and gold-handled umbrella suitably inscribed, was read and ably responded to by Mr. Blewett. During the evening musical selections were played by Mrs. J. Halpany, and a few excellent recitations were given by Mr. Halpany. It is quite needless to state that this entertainment was highly appreciated by the company present.

Prominent Conservative Business Man Withdraws Support From Mr. Borden

Largest Exporter in the World of Dried Fish Goes Over to Liberal Party on Reciprocity

HALIFAX, Aug. 10.—The Liberals of Halifax last night nominated Hon. A. K. Maclean and Dr. Edward Blackadder as Government candidates. A strong speech in favour of reciprocity was made by Howard Smith, head of N. & M. Smith, Ltd., the largest exporters of dried fish in the world. Mr. Smith appeared in the Liberal Convention for the first time in his life, but he said this was an occasion when the issue before the people was above party. In the last campaign Mr. Smith was one of the most active and most influential supporters of Messrs. Borden and Crosby. This time he is throwing his whole support on the side of the Liberals, because he realises that reciprocity means a new era of prosperity. Under the new order, he declared, Nova Scotia will come into her own, and her fishing fleet will be doubled in from three to five years.

Mr. Smith's outspoken stand in favour of reciprocity, and his moving of the resolution in favour of it at a Liberal convention, indicate how strongly the policy of free trade in natural products appeals to the business men of the Maritime Provinces. The resolution was seconded by A. M. Bell, another leading business man, who, although an adherent of the Liberal cause, never before had been present at a party convention. This time he was ready to do his utmost to secure the adoption of reciprocity.

Another resolution was adopted, strongly condemning the attitude of R. L. Borden and Mr. A. B. Crosby in opposing the Canadian Navy.

Altogether the convention was a tremendous success. The Liberals of Halifax are united as one man in support of reciprocity, and are confident of victory.

Mr. Maclean stated in accepting that he had contemplated retiring from politics some time in the future, but that this intention was now abandoned. He said the statement that he had been offered the solicitorship of the Canadian Northern Railway was erroneous, for no such offer had been made. Mr. Maclean will in a few days resign the attorneyship and his position in the Provincial Government.

The Conservatives of Pictou, in a convention held at Westville to-day, nominated A. C. Bell, of New Glasgow, who will have as his opponent the present member for Pictou, E. M. Macdonald.

KING GEORGE IS A BUSY MONARCH

LONDON, August 12.—One of the hardest worked men in the country at present is the King. When the season has ended he will have travelled nearly 2,000 miles in Great Britain and Ireland, visiting his subjects.

The season of 1911 will be remembered for many years as a record in pageantry.

Besides the score of addresses presented to the King at the Coronation, he has received similar homage from every point in his tour, when he visited Portsmouth, Aldershot, Windsor, Norwich, Carnarvon, Dublin, and Edinburgh.

The following is the list of functions the King has attended during the season: Four councils, three courts, two levees, three balls, thirteen reviews, five theatres, five race meetings, four garden parties, three investitures, six banquets.

Besides this, he has presented colours to ten regiments, has opened two public buildings, and laid foundation and memorial stones.

On two occasions he presented medals—to eight seamen, and to Colonial and Indian troops.

It is estimated that about 10,000 persons have been presented to the King within the last month, and the number of addresses received has been legion.

When in Ireland, his "working day" began at 10 a.m. and generally lasted until midnight. He has been twice at the Crystal Palace—when he opened it on May 12 and when the party was given to 100,000 children on June 30.

The King witnessed the naval and military tournament on May 19 and the same evening was present at the dinner and state ball at Buckingham Palace.

GRAND TRUNKS ARE GETTING AMBITIOUS

The following letter ,which appeared in yesterday's issue of the Toronto Star will no doubt interest a number of the local fans:

Sporting Editor, Star:

I noticed in Tuesday's edition an article about what a fast baseball team Collingwood has got. Well, I wish to draw your attention to the Grand Trunk nine of our fair city. They have won six games and lost one in the City League, and have won two exhibition games from teams in the City League. They went to Peterborough and beat the team of that city, and on the 7th of this month they beat the Baracas of your city, in Belleville, by a score of 5 to 1. Altogether this season, therefore, they have won ten games and lost one, and have scored seventy-three runs to their opponents' thirty-six. The Grand Trunks also want games, and if there are any amateur teams in Ontario who think they can trim them, they can arrange for a game by communicating with the Manager.

Chemong Notes

A report to the effect that a fourteen pound lunge was captured last Sunday was not entirely correct. The lunge was caught all right, and the poundage was correct, but it was caught on Monday night. We would not be making this correction if the Fish Inspector hadn't got up on his ear when he read the report. The lady who caught the monster also requested us to make the correction, hence we do so with all apologies.

An informal dance was held on Hill's verandah last night.

The third game of the Chemong Indians series went to the latter last evening, when in the ninth inning rally they drove the winning run across the plate. Once again a one-run difference was the result, the score at full time standing 9-8. The game was comparatively free from squabbling, although a few verbal disagreements sprang up in the course of the game. Prof. G. Bull, of Chemong, handled the indicator, and gave genuine satisfaction. There was little to choose between the respective pitchers, although Quinn seemed to have a shade on his rival. A feature of the game was Mike O'Brien's steal home in the ninth, being the score and very nearly sewing up the game for the Cottagers. The latter were without the services of Joe Bensiger, who was on the hospital list. The fourth game of the series will be played next Friday at the Park. The teams were:

Chemong Village—John Jacobs c., G. Coppaway 1.f., D. Prosser 1st, C. Taylor p., W. Jacobs 3rd, J. W. Taylor r.f., G. McCue 2nd, John Tobico s.s., Dow Taylor c.f.

Chemong Park—H. Hill c., H. Long 1.f., M. O'Brien 3b., W. O'Brien 3b., K. Halpine s.s., G. McCartar 2b., Quinn p., R. Dixon c.f., H. Matthews r.f.

A POPULAR CANDIDATE

The Liberals of Durham County made a good selection, when on Thursday they nominated Mr. T. A. Kelly, of Cavan, to contest the Riding in the coming General Election against Mr. C. J. Thornton, the present Conservative member. With an issue like reciprocity and a candidate like Mr. Kelly, the Liberals were never in a better position to redeem the Riding.

Mr. Kelly is an ideal candidate. He is a young man with all kinds of energy, of exceptional ability, immensely popular and with splendid municipal experience. He is better known throughout the county of Durham as "Sandy Kelly," and no young man in Durham has been more prominently before the public during the past ten or twelve years. He has been President of the East Durham Farmers' Institute, and has been prominently identified with every movement that has tended to the best interests of the farmers of his district. Mr. Kelly at the present time is President of the Millbrook Agricultural Society, one of the best institutions of its kind in Ontario; Reeve of the Township of Cavan, and Warden of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham. He has proved that he possesses splendid executive capacities, and has been looked upon for some years past as one of the county's most promising young men.

Mr. Kelly's nomination on Thursday by the Liberals of Durham was one of the most enthusiastic that has taken place in any constituency in Ontario. Every portion of Durham County was represented, and the candidate was assured of the most encouraging support. They all like Sandy Kelly down in Durham, and although the constituency has heretofore been looked upon as a Conservative stronghold, there is reason to believe that Mr. Thornton, the Conservative candidate, will have to "go some" to beat out the aggressive and popular young candidate from he Township of Cavan.

GOOD FOR CONSUMER AND PRODUCER.

Reciprocity is not the philosopher's stone that turns base metals to gold. It will not make the farmer rich in a night, but it will be a benefit by opening a larger market, a market for things which he cannot sell now to advantage, and give the advantages of a demand across the line when there is no demand at home.

It will equalise prices, steady the market and help sel goods on their merits. It will insure a healthy competition and prevent corners, and consequent high prices in foodstuffs, and thus lessen the cost of living to the consumer.

We all know that the high cost of living is chiefly due to the high toll exacted by the middlemen. The producer, the farmer, the fruit growers, etc., do not get the high prices; they get comparatively low prices. But passing through the hands of the middlemen the price grows large when the consumer has to buy. The profit of the producer and the advantage of the consumer go astray on the journey from one to the other, through the middleman's hands.

This condition, reciprocity by creating competition in farm and other similar products will correct. The producer will, in many respects, be able to sell direct and even if he gets lower price he doesn't have to divide profits with middlemen, and the consumer will get the advantage, being saved the high profits gathered by the man between.

Yesterday, the Examiner contained a reference to the organisation of a great fruit-packing company to practically monopolize the Ontario fruit industry, especially apples.

This company, or combination is to be a millionaire concern, with a capital of a million and a quarter dollars.

The promoters promise large profits to subscribers of stock, but the producer is not to get the big profit, he is only to get the price the big combination sees fit to fix, and the consumer, in his turn, will have to pay the price the combination sees fit to fix.

Now, competition in fruit, from just across the border, while it would not hurt the fruit producer, would prevent the fruit combination from monopolising the selling, as well as buying market.

The high prices the consumer has to pay come from lack of competition—the middlemen now have, by the help of the tariff, a practical monopoly of the home market, and can, and we know, do, charge the consumer just about what they chose to do. Remove the tariff and let fruit and other natural products come in and go out free, and the middlemen could not corner the market and hold up the consumer.

It is the same in effect in all other food supplies.

Is it any wonder that the producer, the labourer, and the consumer are, or should be, in favour of open markets that will break the ring if intermediate interests that make money out of both producer and consumer—paying the producer the lowest price that lack of competition will allow, and charging consumers the highest.

It seems reasonable to assert that reciprocity will benefit both consumer and producer.

A MANUFACTURER'S STAND

The opposition by the manufacturing interests to the proposed reciprocity agreement is becoming less every day. This is due to the fact that the more the terms of the proposed agreement are studied, the more the manufacturers realize that their interests, as well as the interests of the farmers of the country, are being carefully cared for by the present Dominion Government. They now see that by arranging the tariff wall between Canada and the United States in such a manner as to permit of the Canadian farmer selling his produce in American centres, should the price warrant it, no injury can possibly occur to the manufacturing industries of Canada. A striking instance of this may be seen in the case of Mr. H. T. Bush, President and General Manager of the Standard Ideal Co., Limited, of Port Hope. This company employs upwards of 600 hands. When the terms of the agreement were first announced, the Canadian Century, on behalf of the high protectionists, commenced a campaign in its endeavour to stampede Canadian manufacturers against the pact. Meetings of Boards of Trade were called and without apparently, due consideration of the terms of the agreement, resolutions were hurried through denouncing the proposition.

One of the Boards of Trade to pass a resolution condemning reciprocity in natural products with the United States, was the Board of Trade of Port Hope. Mr. Bush was present at the meeting and strongly opposed the proposed agreement. He was quoted in big black type by the Toronto News and other high protectionist papers as a business man who knew what was best for the country.

What do we now find? Mr. Bush after carefully studying the terms of the agreement arrives at the conclusion that he was wrong in the first instance. He realizes that there is nothing in the agreement that will in any way adversely affect his business. He declares, and quite properly so, that reciprocity in natural products will help the farmer, and whatever is for the farmer's benefit is likewise for the manufacturer's interests. So enthusiastic has Mr. Bush become over the proposed reciprocity agreement, that although he claims to have no politics, he attended the meeting of the Liberal Association of Durham, at Orono, on Thursday, and took the platform in order to make his position perfectly plain. In announcing his determination to support Mr. Kelly, the Liberal candidate, Mr. Bush is quoted as follows:

"'I appear as a manufacturer, in favour of reciprocity.' He had thought the matter over, and concluded that if the manufacturers are entitled to protection and the Government gives them reasonable protection ,they in turn, to be fair, should help to give the farmers what they believe will be in their best interests, for whatever is for the farmers' benefit is likewise for the manufacturers' interest. The manufacturers cannot succeed unless the farmers are doing well. He counselled all present to have courage to step out and declare in favour of reciprocity, regardless of former political affiliations. He assured Mr. Kelly of such support as he can give personally, and he was confident a goodly number of the Ideal Company's employees are in favour of reciprocity. Mr. Bush's address aroused very great applause, coming from the President and Manager of the largest industrial concern in Durham County."

There is reason to believe that scores of manufacturers who at first were stampeded into opposition to the agreement have, after a more thorough study of its terms and conditions, concluded that there is nothing in to injure them, and much in it that will tend to benefit the country at large, the consumer and the artisan as well

MR. SEXSMITH AND HIS FARMER FRIENDS.

Mr. Sexsmith, the member for East Peterborough, spoke in the House against reciprocity, and a little consideration of his eloquence ,in relation to the representation of an agricultural constituency, will not be out of place. His speech was for the greater part made up of figures such as appear from time to time in the Canadian Century, one of the most persistent opponents to wider markets for the Canadian farmer, a journal, in fact, that appears to be the official organ of the Canadian protected interests.

The high proectionists wing of the Conservative party no doubt thought that it would add strength to he argument throughout the country to have a farmer representing an agricultural constituency, set forth reasons why, as they allege, reciprocity with the United States would be ruinous to Canada generally. So, after supplying Mr. Sexsmith with a barrel of figures, he was put to read them off, in an endeavour to show how the Canadian farmer would be ruined by the competition of the American agriculturist. This was just where Mr. Sexsmith "fell down." This is where the member for East Peterborough sacrificed the best interests of his constituents in obedience to the Conservative party whip, and to the monopolists who are fighting, with all their strength to prevent the Canadian farmer from obtaining four dollars a ton more for his hay and 30 cents a bushel more for his barley.

Mr. Sexsmith, in the mass of figures which he read to the House, laid great stress upon the fact that Canada has bought more eggs from the United States than we exported to that country. Had Mr. Sexsmith been thoroughly frank about the matter he would have pointed out that the duty on Canadian eggs entering the United States is at the present time much higher than the Canadian duty upon American eggs entering this country. Of course, there is no cause for alarm in the fact that Canadian cities import a few eggs during our extreme cold season The American hens by reason of climatic conditions "get busy" earlier in the season than do the Canadian fowl. At the period of the year that Canada purchases eggs from the American poultrymen, there are practically no Canadian eggs offering.

As a matter of fact, the egg market in Canada is a season market. It has a season of production and a season of cold storage. Summer prices rule while the hens are laying, from March 15 to September 15. When the hens stop laying prices go up. We begin to sell cold storage eggs then, but by Christmas the flavour has deteriorated, and people are paying high prices tor poor eggs.

As already shown, in winter the farmer in Canada has no eggs to sell, so what difference does it make to him what prices eggs are being sold? He has sold all he had to the cold storage people at summer prices. If he had the American market under reciprocity he could sell his summer eggs to Boston and New York. In the winter we in Canada could buy eggs from Texas, instead of from cold storage. Summer prices would rule all the year round.

Mr. Sexsmith should have explained these features of the egg question. He failed to enlighten the public on these facts. He should have explained that Canadian poultrymen are handicapped by a duty of five cents per dozen in sending eggs across to the United States, while the duty against American eggs coming into Canada is only three cents per dozen. Who stands to gain the most by the free entry of eggs into both countries? Undoubtedly the Canadian producer, for the reason that he and the American producer will then be on the same level. At the present time they are not. The American poultryman enjoys an extra duty of two cents per dozen over that which is enjoyed by the Canadian poultryman.

Mr. Sexsmith might have, for instance, enlightened the farmers of East Peterborough on the question of the exportation of apples. Nearly every farmer in East Peterborough has an orchard, and if the American duty on apples were removed the farmers of Peterborough County would find a new and profitable market for their apples. As a matter of fact, last year Canada sold to the United States $139,810 worth of apples, which cost us 75 cents per barrel for duty alone. In 1908 we sold $317,904 worth, in face of the high duty paid. Mr. J. G. Anderson, who bought about 50,000 barrels of the output of the Norfolk Fruit Growers' Association last year, sold his Greenings to go to Chicago, paying 75 cents per barrel duty. Mr. J. E. Johnston, the manager ever since the Association has been formed, had 6,000 barrels on hand over and above Mr. Anderson's purchase. These he sold to the United States markets. Mr. Anderson knows the fruit trade in every aspect, and as a grower and handler of all kinds of fruits there is no better authority. Although a Conservative, Mr. Anderson is out and out for reciprocity because of what it will mean to the fruit industry in Ontario.

Then there is, for instance, the surplus of soft apples so often to be seen in the orchards of Peterborough County. The Canadian farmer cannot market these profitably at home. He cannot ship them long distances because of their perishable nature. There is, however, a splendid demand for these just across the line in the American market, but the duty of 25 cents per bushel is prohibitive. The result of this is that these soft apples rot and prove a distinct loss to the farmer, whereas with the entry to the United States they might have a profitable market.

Mr. Sexsmith, if he had been looking after the best interests of his constituents, should have paid some little attention to the matter of finding a wider market for the apple crop of this district, an industry in which there would be great possibilities for expansion by free access to the American market. Instead, however, he tried to kill the chance of free access to the American market for our apples, barley, hay and other farm produce just because we take some eggs from the United States during the winter season when the Canadian hen is not laying. The farmers are wondering whether having a farmer for representative who consults monopolistic interests in preference to those of the farmer, is a paying experiment.

A DOUBLE ADVANTAGE.

There is a disposition on both sides for the dwellers in towns and in the country to regard each other with little favour, and mutual suspicion. The town dwellers speak of the rapacity and keenness in trade of the farmers, and the farmers have their feelings of distrust towards the town dwellers. Of course there is nothing serious in this reciprocity of distrust. Both may have a little justification for the feeling mentioned, and both are a little to blame.

There should, in reality, be no antagonism of feeling between the two classes, for aside from little petty and local considerations and in the broad general sense, their interests are common; what benefits one helps the other, and what injures the one hurts the other.

The county dweller or farmer may not see how the welfare of the city man affects him; but he has only to reflect that to the city dwellers, the merchants, the business men and the factories and those who work in them he owes all the comforts of life, he owes a market in part for his produce, for it is the money made in business, the wages of working men that pay for what he grows and has to sell.

The city dweller may consider that he owes nothing to the farmer, for he pays for what he gets and there the matter ends. But, that is not the case. He owes to the farmer, in the first place, the capital that operates the factory, or other enterprises where he earns his wages. The city creates no wealth, it only spends money to make wealth change its form. But the soil and labour are the chief sources of wealth and if it were not for the annual creation of wealth by the farmer, through the application of labour the financial fountain of the world's activities would go dry. From this time till harvest the North West farmer will be in suspense. He will be feverishly anxious over the outcome of his crop—whether frost or hail, or rust, will ruin it, or it will be a bumper crop.

But he will not be a bit more anxious or uneasy than some city men—the bankers, the brokers, the great financiers—for they all know that the prosperity of the country depends upon a good crop.

It is estimated that the money value of the Northwest crops will, this year, be about 250 millions of dollars. This seems a big thing for the farmers, but divide this among the million people of the West, and it is only $250 for each, or $1,250 for each family of five.

But this great wealth—a quarter of a billion—will not stay with the western farmer; it will flow over the whole Dominion in a golden stream. It will find its way into every workshop and into every home in every town and city. The crop will have to be moved, and that will mean daily bread to those who work on freight trains, in railway yards, at elevators and wharves and will help turn the wheels of every factory in the land.

This is only the beginning of its journey; it finds its way back to the farmer. The clothing, machinery, household supplies, farm implements, etc., he needs are all made with his money. The price of his crops goes into the banks and through the banks it supplies the capital that runs the factories that gives employment to the workman. This serves to show how the farmer cannot live without the city dweller, nor the town man without the farmer.

Their prosperity is closely connected—what benefits one helps the other.

If reciprocity is going to help the farmer, to give him a wider market for what he grows and encourages him to grow more, he will create more wealth to increase the activity of trade commerce, manufacturing, and every industry that has to have capital behind it, and money in circulation to buy its products.

If reciprocity will benefit the farmer it is to the interest of the manufacturer and the working man to help him to it.

It is hoped that a free list in farm products will do this, as it has done with the manufacturing industry.

The wonderful prosperity of our manufacturers and the good wages of working men the past fourteen or fifteen years, are due largely—not to high tariff, but to tariff reduction or removal.

When the Liberal Government revised the tariff, in 1897, there was material reduction made, or entire removal of, the tariff on the raw material of manufacturers. From that time the boom in our industries began.

If a low tariff, or free list on raw materials, gave, and continues to give, prosperity to manufacturing industries, would not a free list in farm products help the farmer, and increase the money that keeps the wheels of our national machinery moving.

It looks as if it would; and it looks more like it every day. At first, manufacturers looked askance at reciprocity. They did not at first think the matter out. But as they consider it; as they look at the possibility of improving the farmers' prosperity, they recognize that it he gets greater prosperity he cannot keep it to himself; it must be distributed all over the country.

So we see every day manufacturers changing their minds and taking more kindly to reciprocity.

Trade is what makes a nation great. It has made Great Britain the greatest nation on earth. Canada has spent millions of dollars in the work of improving trade conditions and by reciprocity, we have a chance of greatly extending our trade without expense, simply by removing trade obstructions in the form of a tariff, whose only purpose, as it works out in the case of farm products, is to dam the channels of profitable trade.

ADDRESS OF MR. STRATTON TO THE ELECTORATE

Electors of the West Riding of Peterborough

GENTLEMEN,—

At a largely attended mass meeting of the electors, on Saturday, I was selected as candidate to contest the representation of the Riding in the House of Commons. I accepted the responsibility of the position and hereby respectfully solicit the favour of your votes and support.

I am well known to you all, for during a representative service of West Peterborough, practically extending over a period of twenty-five years, I have many times come into contact, directly and indirectly, with every elector of the Riding.

In the past I have been honoured with your confidence, and I have earnestly striven to deserve it. In the discharge of my parliamentary and, especially of my representative duties, I have tried to consistently recognize and live up to the fact that I was the representative of the whole people, and in duty bound to serve the interests of all collectively and individually, whether their support had assisted, or their opposition had resisted, my election.

I need not refer to my record to specify what I have been privileged to do in the promotion of the material, moral and social welfare of West Peterborough. My work in this regard, be it little or great, is known to you all. You all know whether or not I have been a faithful servant of the people, whether the Riding is better, and in what respects, from my having been your representative.

I need not be at much pains to define my position in this contest. Everybody knows where I stand—where I am to be found. Such as I have been in the endeavour to advance your interests, I still am, and shall continue to be, if you honour me with re-election.

Apart from the consideration of local—city and county—interests, the national question chiefly involved in this contest is "Reciprocity," or free mutual exchange of natural, mainly farm, products, with the United States. I believe that reciprocity of this kind will be of benefit to the farmers of the country, and through their prosperity to all other interests—manufacturing, financial and commercial, as well as to those of the mechanic and workingman.

The round of benefit is natural. Good crops and good markets mean money for the farmer, which spent with the merchants of all kinds, means increased orders for the manufacturer and increased employment to their workmen. Thus Reciprocity, by affording wider and better markets, promises to be a benefit to the whole country and an injury to no class or interest; and is worth trying, especially as the agreement, not being a treaty, can, if unsatisfactory, be cancelled on reasonable notice.

If I thought for a moment that it would hurt any important interest, especially the manufacturing interest, I would oppose it. I am neither an extreme free trader, nor an extreme protectionist. I believe in a reasonable amount of both. High tariff in the United States has lost to Canada ninety million dollars in barley alone. The British Preference as it affects our manufacturers goes as far as desirable in the direction of free trade and I am opposed to, and will oppose, any increase of it. I myself am a manufacturer or interested in manufactures, in a modest way, but, at the same time, to an extent, important to myself and my associates, and I feel that our industries and working men could not stand the keen manufacturing competition of either Britain or the United States.

In this regard, I am in accord with the assurance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking for the Government, when he gave this pledge, "WE HAVE NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURERS AND WILL NOT HURT THEM," and I applaud the stand of Mr. Fielding in negotiating the Reciprocity Agreement, in refusing to even discuss reciprocity in manufactured articles with the United States.

If you approve, gentlemen, of what I consider the reasonable stand I take in relation to national interests; if you believe, judging from my past record of service to the Riding, that I have the business capacity, the business and parliamentary experience to continue to give you good service, and justify the confidence I now ask you to again place in me, I presume to claim your support.

This is probably the last appeal I shall make to you; for I think I have done my share of service to this Riding and have thereby earned the opportunity to give the necessary attention to my private affairs. I should have persisted in my desire to be relieved had I not felt in duty bound to defer to the earnest solicitation of the friends who have stood by me in the past, and also of a great many of my former opponents, and consented to be a candidate.

Another reason that influenced my acceptance, was, that being of a business turn, I naturally desired to complete work I have initiated, and for which I am in some degree, if the opportunity is given me, responsible. I should like to see the completion of the large new docks for the City of Peterborough; of the retaining wall on our river front in Peterborough; also a new concrete dam at Nassau erected, and a Rifle Range provided for this important military centre.

Trusting that I may be favoured with your effective support, I have the honour to remain, gentlemen, as I have been for the past twenty-five years,

Your Obedient Servant,

J. R. Stratton

BREAD INDUSTRY REVOLUTIONIZED BY ORGANIZATION HERE OF CANADA BREAD COMPANY, LTD.

Company With Its Plants in All the Larger Cities of Canada Will Make Bread Industry One of the Largest and Most Uniform in the Country---Ample Capital to Gradually Secure an Annual Production of 100,000,000 Loaves

That the bread industry is now destined to be one of the most important in the country is indicated by the organization of the Canada Bread Company, Limited, the new big company, which will at the outset, take in five of the larger bread manufacturing businesses in Canada and will gradually establish plants in all the larger cities. The business taken over include those of the Bredin Bread Company, of Toronto; Stuart's, Limited, Montreal; George Weston, Limited, of Toronto, known as "The Model Bakery"; W. J. Boyd, Winnipeg, and H. C. Tomlin, Toronto Bakery Company. The benefits that would accrue from a consolidation of this kind have been for a long time apparent to the practical interests in the industry, but quite naturally the large amount of capital required for its operation prevented it being consummated till the assistance was secured of Mr. Cawthra Mulock, the Toronto financier. The capital, which includes $1,000,000 of cash to go into the treasury, will be sufficient to supply the new company with ample working capital to carry out even the extensive programme of its directors. This programe is to erect new modern bread manufacturing plants in all the larger cities of Canada, instal the latest type of machinery, institute systems which will insure the manufacture of bread under the most cleanly and sanitary conditions, and deliver a bread of uniform high grade quality to consumers at the minimum cost.

Most Sanitary Conditions

It should be of interest to consumers of bread all over Canada to learn something concerning the conditions under which bread is now being manufactured as compared with the modern up-to-date systems which already have been instituted by many of the larger baking establishments.

Manufacturing bread in a modern bake-shop is a scientific process. The systematic work begins at the beginning and continues to the end. The moment the flour comes into the establishment it is subjected to a chemical analysis in order to establish its fitness for the end in view. Samples are taken from each of a large number of bags, and a test is made of them in order to ascertain the quantity of gluten and other ingredients they contain. Occasionally these analyses are supplemented by more practical tests; but in all cases the carefulness observed throughout the processes will very shortly cause to be revealed any defects in the flour itself.

Modern Scientific Process

Instead of throwing the flour haphazard into the troughs, in the condition in which it arrives and adding the yeast and water in order to get it into the condition of dough as rapidly as possible, these various steps are only taken in the most systematic manner in the modern bake-shop. After the quantity of the flour has been determined, the flour is subjected to a process of sifting and cleaning. It passes through a number of screens and brushes which hold back a variety of foreign matter, a very considerable portion of which is eventually weighed out as bread in the small, carelessly-conducted establishment.

Having been analyzed and sifted, the flour is weighed and emptied into the mixer. By an automatic process the requisite weight of water, as well as the yeast, is added. It may be of interest to state that not only is the temperaure of the water, but also of the flour, the yeast, and even of the atmosphere controlled in such a manner as to produce the best results. Generally speaking, the effort is to maintain the temperature of the ingredients, as well as the interior of the buildings, at an average of from seventy-five to eighty degrees Fahrenheit. The mixing is a mechanical process and is carried on by a slowly revolving arrangement which kneads the dough in a much more certain and uniform, not to say cleanly, manner than could possibly be done by hand.

After all, does it not seem somewhat incongruous that, although we object to another person lifting our butter in his fingers or grasping our glass of water by the rim in order to hand it to us, we unquestionably accept the much more intimate association which takes place between the hands of the baker and the article which we have come to call the staff of life? It seems just a little remarkable that while we have demanded so much care in the processes which come under our personal observation, we should so long have consumed bread manufactured from flour of which we knew little enough, and baked in a bakery by a baker under conditions which had we seen them, would have often caused us to forswear the consumption of bread for a period.

Most Up-to-date Plants

The aim of modern bakeries such as those which will be established by the Canada Bread Company, Limited, is to eliminate all objectionable and uncleanly features in connection with the manufacture of bread. When, added to this, is the very practical consideration that bread manufactured under the proposed conditions costs no more than when manufactured in an objectionable manner—nor will it cost as much—it can easily be seen what a boon the Canada Bread Company may become to the consuming public.

After the dough has been mechanically mixed in the mixer for about ten minutes, it is emptied into troughs, and wheeled into the dough-room, where it is allowed to remain for a sufficient length of time to permit the necessary chemical changes involved in the "rising." It is then passed on to the weighing machine or divider. This is a contrivance whereby the operator may control the exact size or weight of the loaf required. A slight turn of the handle moves the gauge in such a manner that the loaf may be increased or diminished the fraction of an ounce. As a further precaution, the operator selects loaves at random every little while, and tests them on the weighing-scale.

It may be interesting to add that experience has established the percentage which must be allowed under given conditions for the moisture extracted from the dough while in the furnace, in order to produce a loaf of given weight. In Mark Bredin's bake-shop, from which this description is in reality taken, a number of loaves were chosen at random and placed upon the scales as a test of how accurately the dividing machine did its work. The loaves were supposed to weigh a pound and a half each. Out of a number of loaves, there was almost no variation, and when all were placed on the scales at once the beam went to an exact balance.

After leaving the divider the loaves are passed on to the moulding machine—all this, remember, without a hand being laid upon them or their ingredients since the flour entered the shop. Aeration and proving now takes place. The loaves are placed in pans and piled in galvanized iron racks and wheeled into a chamber where they remain until the rising process reaches the proper stage. They are then wheeled out and placed in the oven, from which they duly emerge, uniformly baked and ready for the consumer.

Advantages of Modern Ovens

Even in the nature of the oven, the modern process is far superior to the ancient. Formerly the fire was lighted within the open, in the same space to be occupied by the bread itself. After the open had been brought to the proper temperature the fires would be withdrawn and the loaves placed within. Thus, not only would the loaves be apt to absorb any gases which might remain in the oven, but would also be liable to fouling from ashes or cinders, to say nothing of the loss of time necessitated by the fact that between each batch of bread it would be necessary to repeat the process of heating the oven.

In the modern oven the fire is kept continuously going. A wall separates it entirely from the oven which contains the bread. The advantages in the matter of cleanliness over the old oven need hardly be described. In addition to this, the oven can be kept at a uniform temperature and one batch of bread may follow the other without loss of time necessitated by re-firing as with the old-style oven. Nevertheless, it is quite probable that the majority of the ovens still in use are of the old type. They do good work, but cannot continue in competition with the modern article.

Saving in Distribution

Advantageous as are the processes which it is the intention of the Canada Bread Company to adopt in all its establishments in order to produce the choicest quality of bread, the commercial advantages or saving will be due more to economies in the matter of delivery than in the process of manufacturing, considerable as the latter may be. In an effort made recently to determine what saving might be effected in the matter of delivery, a number of enquiries were made. The smaller bakeries, it would seem, look upon two thousand loaves per week as a very fair average for one waggon. Some of them considered eighteen hundred as pretty fair. Mark Bredin, in his modern plant, delivers as high as four thousand, and expressed the view that the Canada Bread Company, taking advantage of the geographical location of the different bake-shops and the distribution of routes, ought to reach an average of not less than four thousand five hundred loaves per waggon per week.

The cost of delivery is one of the principal items in the cost of the loaf to the consumer, and it has even frequently been stated that it is the principal item. The Canada Bread Company, therefore, in this principal item, will be able to effect a saving of from fifty to sixty per cent. over the average small baker. In addition to this, the shareholders of the company will derive very considerable advantage from the lower price at which contracts may be made with the mills for the purchase of flour. As for the consumers, he will be supplied with bread, manufactured in a clean, light, airy, wholesome building, and by modern, up-to-date machinery, the whole process being performed in a cleanly manner and without being handled by any of the employees until it is ready for delivery to the waggons.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

SAID the girl in love to the man she loved: "I don't think you care so much for me as you used to. Just think! You were in town all day yesterday and you didn't call me up. You know you would never have done that six months ago.'

Said the man in love to the girl he loved: "Why, dear, I thought I just told you that I was with Rushworth every minute. You know I was trying to put through that big sale, and that I didn't dare let him get out of my sight for a minute."

Reiterated the girl in love: "I think you would have managed somehow six months ago before you were so sure of me."

Retorted the man in love: "You didn't use to be so abominably unreasonable. Are you always going to be like this?"

Flushed the girl in love: "Yes, when I have so much cause to be. Why? Don't you think you can stand it?"

And there they are with a perfectly good quarrel on their hands and unkind words on their lips and heartbreaks in their hearts, for "to be wroth with one we love doth work like madness in the brain."

And all for what?

All just because the man in love didn't realize that what the girl in love wanted when she said he didn't love her as much as he used to was reassurance—fond, foolish, reiterated, convincing reassurance. And because, instead of these, he gave her cold, logical, sensible reasoning.

Is there—I wonder—was there ever a couple who did not have at least one quarrel along these lines?

Can't you imagine Eve saying to Adam, "When we lived in the garden you used to be with me all the time, and now I seldom see you except at meals. I don't think you love me the way you used to."

And of course Adam answered, "But, my dear, you know I didn't have any work to do then, and now I have to work for my living. I think you are unreasonable."

And poor litle Eve; who just wanted to be told that he loved her quite as much, if not more, than ever, went off into the nearby glade to cry her heart out at the coldness of his tone, and Adam went back to his work berating the unreasonableness of a woman.

All of which might have been avoided if Adam had just taken Eve right up in his arms and said, "But, dearest, you know I love you more every day. You are the one woman in the world for me."

And now, you people who still think I'm a man masquerading — can you doubt any longer?

Would I have known this if I weren't a woman?

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

AUGUST 13, 1911.

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Jehoiakim Burns the Prophet's Book.—Jer. xxxvi

Golden Text—The word of our God shall stand for ever.—Isa. xl., 8.

1. Verses 1-3—What was the character of Jehoiakim?

2. Why is it that God bears so long and patiently with sinners, and takes such loving pains to save them?

3. What advantage is it to us that men like Jeremiah wrote the history of God's dealing with his people, and that we have these records in the Bible?

4. Who had been the kings of Judah since the death of Josiah and what had been their characters?

5. Verse 4—What was the chief purpose of the Lord in commanding Jeremiah to write a book, containing what God had revealed to him concerning the sin and coming punishment of Judah?

6. Jeremiah had previously delivered these messages orally and had been tried for his life on account of it; why was it important that they should be written?

7. Why is it necessary that such important messages should always be written?

8. Verses 5-6—Why could Jeremiah not read the roll personally in the temple?

9. If we cannot go personally as missionaries, what is our duty in the circumstances?

10. Why is every Christian in duty bound to be a missionary, either in person or by proxy?

11. Verse 7—God was then very anxious to save these sinners from the doom they were bringing on themselves; how does he show the same anxiety to-day?

12. Verse 8—Which was the more meritorious in the sight of God, Jeremiah or Baruch; the man who writes a book at God's command, or the man who publishes it at his command?

13. Verse 9—The king, the priests and people were rebels against God, yet they proclaimed a religious fast, for they were likely in great national peril. Do the prayers and fasts of the impenitent wicked please or insult God? Why?

14. Verse 10—The Salvation Army and some others take advantage of every public gathering to preach the gospel; is it or not the duty of all the Christian churches to do the same? Why?

15. Verses 11-19—What was the first effect of Baruch publicly reading Jeremiah's book to the people?

16. Which secures the more converts, the direct or the indirect results of preaching the gospel?

17. Verses 20-25—What effect had the reading of the book upon the great men who stood around the king, and upon the king himself?

18. Why did the king have the book burned?

19. What has been the result in all the attempts that have been made to suppress the word of God?

20. What is the effect of sin, long continued, upon the conscience and moral sense?

21. Verse 26—How is it that sometimes God hides his servants from the vengeance of their enemies, and at other times allows them to suffer?

22. Verses 27-32—What resulted from burning the roll?

23. What is always the final result of sinning against God?

ADDRESS OF MR. STRATTON TO THE ELECTORATE

Electors of the West Riding of Peterborough

GENTLEMEN,—

At a largely attended mass meeting of the electors, on Saturday, I was selected as candidate to contest the representation of the Riding in the House of Commons. I accepted the responsibility of the position and hereby respectfully solicit the favour of your votes and support.

I am well known to you all, for during a representative service of West Peterborough, practically extending over a period of twenty-five years, I have many times come into contact, directly and indirectly, with every elector of the Riding.

In the past I have been honoured with your confidence, and I have earnestly striven to deserve it. In the discharge of my parliamentary and, especially of my representative duties, I have tried to consistently recognize and live up to the fact that I was the representative of the whole people, and in duty bound to serve the interests of all collectively and individually, whether their support had assisted, or their opposition had resisted, my election.

I need not refer to my record to specify what I have been privileged to do in the promotion of the material, moral and social welfare of West Peterborough. My work in this regard, be it little or great, is known to you all. You all know whether or not I have been a faithful servant of the people, whether the Riding is better, and in what respects, from my having been your representative.
